Resolved, That additional evidence be taken in said case, under such rules and in such manner as shall be adopted and prescribed therefor by the said committee, such additional evidence to be confined to the condition and custody of the ballots cast in the fifth, sixth, seventh, and fifty-second precincts of Kansas City in the Congressional election of 1894.

It will be seen that this "additional evidence" is confined to the ballots themselves. What would they prove? Who would believe them? Is there a man here who would believe them, corrupted and falsified as they have been? If they had asked to go and take evidence other than that shown by these fraudulent ballots; if they had asked to go and reopen the case and examine witnesses, there might have been something in it, and we could have answered at once.

Mr. BRUMM. Are you willing to have the resolution so amended if they should ask to go back and make a further investigation of the election in the way you suggest?

Mr. PRINCE. No, sir.

Mr. BRUMM. Then why do you criticise the resolution?

Mr. PRINCE. I criticise it for the reason that it asks us to do something the result of which would throw no light upon the question or in any manner inform any man on the floor of the House. It asks us to bring into the committee room 1,000 fraudulent votes, pretended to have been voted by some men who had no existence in fact at all.

Mr. BRUMM. That is true; but the legal proposition that you set forth is that the burden has been shifted——

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. BRUMM. And in answer to my friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] you say the reason why you criticise this resolution is because its scope is limited?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. BRUMM. Now I ask you, inasmuch as the burden has been shifted under the law that you have cited, if this provision of the resolution is enlarged, will you then be willing that, the burden being shifted, Mr. Tarsney shall have an opportunity to produce the testimony and make the proof?

Mr. WILLIAMS. To take up the burden, in other words.

Mr. BRUMM. Under those circumstances.

Mr. PRINCE. No, sir; for this reason——

Mr. BRUMM. Let us hear it.

Mr. PRINCE. I will endeavor to make it clear, if I can. If I do not, the gentleman may interrogate me. I say no, for this reason, that Mr. Tarsney on January 22 and on January 24 knew each and every one of these voters, whether they had any existence or not. He knew that the fraud was reeking. He knew that the conduct of these judges had been proved to be what Mr. Van Horn alleges it was. The evidence was there before him before he took a word of testimony. Further than that, the evidence shows that this man Owsley did not resign his office of register of voters until the 25th of February, 1895, when practically all the evidence had been taken, and the opportunity had been given him to tamper and change these results in this case as he had in other instances.

Mr. BRUMM. But before you come to that second part, the proposition is, is it not true that under the law of Missouri Mr. Tarsney had no access to the ballots and that he could not get access until he came to Congress?

Mr. PRINCE. I do not know about that.

Mr. BRUMM. You ought to, because that is very important.

Mr. PRINCE. Because it is a mooted question, under the law, whether it is or not. But say he could not get control of the ballots. Let me go as far as you want me to, namely, that he could not get control of them. Will you please tell me what good those ballots would be? The evidence discloses that they were not the true ballots cast, because lawful voters had not cast those ballots. The evidence discloses that 1,011 ballots pretended to have been cast by voters were put into the box without any living man having voted them. Now, what good were those ballots?

Mr. BRUMM. There were some legal voters there, and notwithstanding the illegal ballots, an inspection of the ballots would show one thing or the other, either that they had been tampered with since or that they remained in their original condition; and by going to the legal voters who still live there, if you show that their ballots have been changed, it would be the best evidence to satisfy this House, sitting as a jury, that the fraud was such that the whole box should be thrown out. That would be the answer to that.

Mr. PRINCE. I see. Now, I will answer that as best I can.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You can find out just what votes were cast on both sides from the ballots there.

Mr. BRUMM. I want to say that in adducing proof there must be a starting point, and that Mr. Tarsney could hardly call upon the individual voters until he could first get access to the ballot box. The proof must be adduced in its order, and the gentleman's proposition, even then, would hardly be tenable, because there must be a certain order in which the examination can be made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will my friend from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] excuse me just a moment? Because it will help the explanation. As I understand, from an examination of the ballots cast in the State of Missouri, comparing them with the registration lists, you can discover just who cast these particular ballots, and therefore you can discover exactly what ballots were cast and by whom they were cast in a given election.

Mr. BRUMM. Not if they were not cast.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; of course not.

Mr. BRUMM. That is the trouble here. The contention is that they were not cast. But my proposition is this: One of our most eminent judges has said that the rule of law is that where you can separate the wheat from the chaff it must be done.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand the gentleman's position perfectly.

Mr. BRUMM. Now, while their contention is that these ballots were not cast——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Some of them.

Mr. BRUMM (continuing). But that there may have been a substitution of the name of Van Horn for Tarsney, my contention is that you can separate the wheat from the chaff by calling upon the legal voters and showing whether or not there had been a substitution in other cases of Tarsney for Van Horn. There will be no trouble at all in getting at the truth in this case.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In other words, eliminating from the question all of these ballots pretended to have been cast, but not really cast by real voters, there remain a great many ballots which were cast by real voters, and that under the laws of the State of Missouri, from an inspection of those ballots and a comparison of them with the registration list, you can discover just exactly who did cast them, and by taking testimony you can discover how they cast them.

Mr. BRUMM. That is it.

Mr. CONNOLLY. What machinery would you use to get their testimony? The State of Missouri has no machinery and this House has no machinery to get the testimony of the voters so as to know how they voted.

Mr. BRUMM. I beg your pardon. There is.

Mr. PRINCE. Out of whose time is this coming, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. PRINCE. Because my time is going on, unless the House wishes to adjourn.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I suggest that the gentleman go on.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know whether unanimous consent has been granted the gentleman to finish his remarks to-morrow. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. GROSVENOR. I make the point of order that that is not in order.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I do not think the gentleman ought to be compelled to finish to-night.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. But suppose the committee think it is wiser?

Mr. PRINCE. I would like to go a little further and speak with reference to this point made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM].

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Why not extend your remarks further and finish to-night?

Mr. PRINCE. If the House will take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow I would be glad to go on then.

Several MEMBERS. No one will be here.

Mr. BRUMM. As I understand, the House is going to vote between 3 and 5 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, it is the desire of the committee to have a vote to-morrow. There are, however, several gentlemen entitled to be heard who desire to speak, but unless we make more progress it will be impossible for them to be heard.

Mr. PRINCE. I will dispose of this question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and then I think I will get through in about ten minutes, but if the House desires to adjourn I will quit.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. From the remark of the gentleman from Pennsylvania I understand him to think that the time is limited. We simply want to take a vote to-morrow if we can.

Mr. PRINCE. With the permission of the House, I will stop at this point and begin afresh in the morning.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I renew my request.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move that the House do now adjourn.

THURSDAY, February 27, 1896.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

FUR SEALS IN BERING SEA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in response to a resolution of the 17th instant calling for copies of the reports made by the agents, officers, or persons acting under the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury in the years 1894 and 1895 in relation to the condition of the fur seals on the Pribilof Islands, etc., stating that the preparation of the copies of such papers will involve great labor and require considerable time, and transmitting the originals, with the request that they be returned to the files of the Department, without mutilation, in case the Senate should order them printed; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MORGAN. Several days ago the Senate made an order for the printing of those papers, to anticipate and avoid the difficulty of copying so large a mass of papers; and I ask that they be now sent to the Public Printer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the petition of C. D. Mosher, of Chicago, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation establishing United States national postal coupon savings bank depositories in every post-office in America; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a telegraphic resolution adopted by the Board of Trade of Kansas City, Mo., praying for the acknowledgment of Cuban independence. As this subject is pending before the Senate, I move that the resolution lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a petition, in the form of resolutions adopted at three several meetings of citizens of Jefferson County, Ohio, praying that the preamble of the Constitution be changed so as to acknowledge Almighty God as the source of all power and authority in civil government, our Lord Jesus Christ as the ruler of nations, and His revealed will as the supreme authority in civil affairs, etc. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

C., praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 1886, or some similar measure, requiring the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company to adopt rapid transit on its lines, and remonstrating against the extension of the tracks of that company until its existing lines are modernly equipped and operated; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Besides this petition I have recently received a large number of letters urging the passage of that bill or one of a similar character. I now present the petition of Rev. J. L. I present a resolution, in the nature of a petition of the General Congregational Association of the State of Florida, in convention assembled, deploring the condition of desolation and war existing in the neighboring Island of Cuba, and stating that they view with horror the proclamation of the captain-general probably inaugurating a reign of bloodshed such as should not exist among civilized peoples, and entreating the President of the United States and Congress to use the strongest influence of this Government to prevent undue cruelty in the prosecution of this war. I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Joint resolution No. 10. Relative to the transmississippi exposition to be held at Omaha, Nebr., in the year 1898.

Whereas delegates representing the twenty-four States and Territories lying west of the Mississippi River at the transmississippi congress of 1895 adopted a resolution providing for the holding of an exposition for the purpose of exhibiting the products, manufactures, arts, and industries of these States and Territories; and

Whereas the said convention voted to hold the said exposition at the city of Omaha, Nebr., in the year 1898; and

Whereas the common interest of the States and Territories constituting this great region as well as of the country at large will be greatly promoted thereby and the interest of the State of Iowa, lying at its gateway, will be especially benefited by such an exposition on her borders: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the general assembly of the State of Iowa, That the holding of the said tranmississippi exposition is hereby heartily approved and that the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Iowa are requested to cooperate with the Senators and Representatives from our sister State, Nebraska, and the other transmississippi States in procuring the passage at this session of Congress of a bill giving national recognition to said exposition, and providing for an appropriation for a national exhibit and the necessary and proper buildings to contain same.

And be it further resolved, That a copy of the foregoing resolution be certified by the secretary of state under the seal of the State and sent to Senators and Representatives in Congress from Iowa.

W. M. McFARLAND,

Whereas the citizens and taxpayers of the Muscatine Island levee district, composed of lands lying adjacent to the Mississippi River, in Muscatine and Louisa counties, Iowa, have maintained for many years a levee at their own expense, which levee is of great benefit to the navigation of the Mississippi River and protection to the lands and agricultural districts thereto adjoining; and

Whereas the said levee is now in need of reconstruction and repairs, and the taxpayers of the said district are unable longer to maintain said levee at their own cost; and

Whereas said levee is a great help in restraining the waters of the Mississippi River in its channel, thereby improving the navigation of said river:

Be it resolved by the general assembly of Iowa, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are requested to use their active influence to secure and to vote for such appropriations as will insure the reconstruction and repair of the said Muscatine Island levee at the earliest possible date.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and is hereby, instructed to forthwith transmit a copy hereof to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress from Iowa.

W. M. McFARLAND,
Secretary of State.

Mr. GEAR presented the petition of E. J. Gault and sundry other citizens of Iowa, praying that Congress recognize the Southern Border Brigade of Iowa and the Enrolled Militia of Missouri, making the same pensionable as United States troops, and that the law of June 27, 1890, be made to apply to them; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

R. 61) authorizing and requiring the Secretary of War to contract with Charles Stoughton for the improvement of the Harlem Kills, New York City, by a canal to connect the lower Harlem River with Long Island Sound, 3,400 feet in length, 300 feet in width, and 15 feet in depth at mean low water, or by a similar canal 18 feet in depth at mean low water, in strict conformity with the survey and report made thereon in 1881 by Col. John Newton, reported adversely thereon; and the joint resolution was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CAFFERY. I am also instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 58) appropriating $5,000 to open Jupiter Inlet, Florida, to report adversely thereon and move its indefinite postponement. I wish to state in reporting back the joint resolution that the reason which actuated the committee in making the adverse report is that adequate provision was made on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill for opening Jupiter Inlet.

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Louisiana may not have been distinctly heard at the desk. I desire to have it appear in the RECORD in connection with the joint resolution reported adversely from the Committee on Commerce proposing to appropriate $5,000 for Jupiter Inlet, in the State of Florida, that the appropriation, reduced to $500, was made in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill which passed the Senate. I wish this statement to appear in the RECORD in order that the adverse report may not mislead people interested in that improvement.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1929) for the relief of William H. Crook, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 21) to authorize the investigation by the Attorney-General of certain claims alleged to be due the late proprietors of the Knoxville Whig for advertising, and authorizing the payment therefor by the Secretary of the Treasury of any amounts found by the Attorney-General to be legally or equitably due, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 26th instant, intended to be proposed to the Army appropriation bill, reported it favorably with an amendment, and asked that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and be printed; which was agreed to.

CHRISTOPHER SCHMIDT.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1758) for the relief of Christopher Schmidt, to report it without amendment. I give notice that I shall at the earliest opportunity ask for the consideration of the bill. I wish I might do it now. A German citizen was very seriously injured and disabled for life by careless shooting upon the target range at Fort Snelling. The German ambassador took up the case, presented it to the Government, and asked for a liberal allowance—a gross sum of money. The War Department reports a most thorough investigation of the circumstances, and says that the wounding of the poor fellow was due to gross negligence at that post. The committee has reported $40 a month. The original claim suggested by the German ambassador was a gross sum of $10,000. The committee has changed that into a pension. I may state that a new suggestion has been received from that ambassador through the State Department within a week or two. I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill now. A similar bill passed the Senate once in the last Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which he reports from the Committee on Military Affairs. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $40 a month for and during the term of his natural life to Christopher Schmidt, of St. Paul, Minn., for injuries received from accidental shot on the rifle range at Fort Snelling, July 14, 1892, in quarterly payments, upon such vouchers as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PASCO. I ask whether this man was in the military service or whether he was a private citizen?

Mr. HAWLEY. He was a respectable and peaceful citizen passing by. He was warned to go back and then to go ahead, and they got into confusion about it. The last direction was to go ahead, and he received the shot, which destroyed the sight of one of his eyes and seriously affected his whole system.

Mr. PASCO. It seems to me that it would be much better to allow a gross sum rather than to pension a man who has no military claims upon the Government. I suggest that the bill should be so modified as to give relief in that shape.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope not. If you treat it as a matter of economy the odds are that you would pay much less if you would give a pension, because he can not live forever. If you pay $10,000 you are giving him as much or more than is proposed here. I think the committee was quite right in granting a pension.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut for the present consideration of the bill?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COAST DEFENSE INQUIRY.

Mr. JONES of Nevada. I am instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] January 15, 1896, to report it without amendment, and to ask immediate action upon the resolution.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Coast Defenses be, and the same is hereby, authorized, in the consideration of bills before said committee to provide for fortifications and other defenses, to sit during the sessions of the Senate, to visit such points as in the opinion of the committee may be necessary, to send for persons and papers, and to employ a stenographer, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any amendment reported to the resolution?

Mr. JONES of Nevada. There is no amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I asked if there was any amendment proposed to the resolution. It comes from the Committee on Contingent Expenses, I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It does.

Mr. JONES of Nevada. There is no amendment reported by the committee to the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. And the Committee on Coast Defenses is to be authorized to travel at the expense of the Government all over the United States wherever it chooses to go?

Mr. JONES of Nevada. I understand from the chairman that the committee do not wish to travel extensively, but it is thought they may desire to go to New York.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the committee does not want to travel, that clause ought to be stricken out.

Mr. SQUIRE. I will say that it is not the present intention of the Committee on Coast Defenses to make any excursion at all; but at the same time it is thought best that provision shall be made so that in case the committee should wish to visit any of the works now under construction by the Government or the completed works they should have authority to do so. There is no intention at the present time to visit any point, but I may state——

Mr. COCKRELL. That is, no intention during the present session of Congress, but the committee is to spend the vacation in that way?

Mr. SQUIRE. No; the resolution does not provide for the vacation at all. It merely provides for the time during the session. If the members of the committee should like to see for themselves the operations of the Government in the construction of the great gun lifts, the disappearing carriages, and the mortar batteries at Sandy Hook it would seem wise and proper that the committee should go there and see with their own eyes those works.

Mr. VEST. Let the resolution be read; I did not understand it.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. SQUIRE. The members of the committee agree with me that it will not be necessary for the committee to visit any other point than Sandy Hook, New Jersey, and the other harbor defenses at New York, and they have not agreed to do that, but if they wish to do it, and they conceive they may desire to do so, they ask to have that authority given them. I am willing that the resolution shall be amended so as to limit the visit of the committee to Sandy Hook.

Mr. HAWLEY. No; to the defenses of New York City.

Mr. SQUIRE. Very well; the defenses of New York, as an example of the great plan of seacoast defenses. I propose that amendment myself as the author of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution as modified? The Chair hears none, and the question is upon agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

REPORT ON COAST DEFENSES.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] on the 26th instant, to report it with an amendment; and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That 8,000 additional copies of Report No. 336 and of the hearings before a subcommittee of the Committee on Coast Defenses be printed for the use of the Committee on Coast Defenses.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was, in line 1, to strike out "eight" and insert "ten"; so as to read: "Ten thousand additional copies."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BULLETIN ON APICULTURE.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 67) providing for the printing of 15,000 copies of the Bulletin on Apiculture, to report it with an amendment, changing it to a concurrent resolution instead of a joint resolution. I ask for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 15,000 copies of the work on apiculture compiled by the Department of Agriculture, the same to be in paper covers, 10,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives and 5,000 copies for the Senate.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be postponed indefinitely.

INTRODUCTION OF REINDEER INTO ALASKA.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] on the 5th instant, to report it with an amendment; and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That 35,000 extra copies of Senate Document No. 92, third session of Fifty-third Congress, relating to the introduction of reindeer into Alaska, be printed, of which number 5,000 in paper covers shall be for the use of the Senate and 10,000 in paper covers for the use of the House of Representatives and 20,000 in cloth for the use of the Bureau of Education.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was, in line 8, to strike out the word "cloth" and insert "paper covers"; so as to read: "And 20,000 in paper covers for the use of the Bureau of Education."

Mr. VEST. I should like to know from the Senator from Maine why we ought to have 35,000 copies of this document printed for the purposes of education. It strikes me, with all due respect, that that is absurd. We do not expect to introduce reindeer into this country at large. I take it, from what little I know about the animal, that would neither be practicable nor profitable. It is proposed to print 35,000 copies of this history of a fad, for it is nothing else. I happen to have been to Alaska once. I never propose to go again. I say that this is a mere fad of a gentleman who went up there as a missionary, who has made a specialty of Alaska, and has conceived the idea of introducing reindeer to prevent the natives there from starving. I hope he will succeed. I do not want to see any human being starve; I do not want to throw any obstacle in the way of furnishing them food; but the idea of our going on with this waste of public money is absurd. I had occasion to state the other day that the basement of this Capitol is filled with the old débris of useless reports of every description that are rotting there now and that nearly produce disease in the Capitol. All the adjacent buildings that we have rented here are full of them. We had complaints here to the effect that a floor in the Maltby Building was about to sink under the weight of this useless trash piled up year by year, for which we are throwing away thousands of dollars. I am compelled to remonstrate against this sort of thing. If there were any utility in it, if there were any practical necessity for it, I would be the last Senator to say a word; but 35,000 copies of this fad, for it is nothing else—I should like to ask the Senator from Maine what these extra copies will cost.

Mr. HALE. I will make a little explanation. If the Senator from Missouri had read all the enthusiastic literature that has emanated from the gentleman to whom he refers as having gone to Alaska in one relation and by some process of evolution at last reports himself to us in another, he would have wondered that 150,000 copies were not ordered or asked of us. It is evidently the belief of that gentleman that many of the subjects before the United States Congress, including finance, currency, and tariffs, and attempted war with almost every nation under the sun, are not of so much importance combined as Alaska. I can only say that the committee, not fully sharing in that feeling, but being requested by Senators who believe that this literature ought to be properly disseminated, have reported a rather moderate resolution. It will cost about $6,000.

I will state to the Senator from Missouri that the committee has cut down one proposition which came from the Alaska agent, that his share of this distribution, being the larger portion of it, should be bound in cloth rather than in paper. We saw no reason why this small book of 200 or 300 pages, or perhaps less, should be put into an expensive form for his benefit, and we have left him with the 20,000 copies in paper, the same moderate—and perhaps he will consider it ignoble—form that we take for ourselves.

Mr. VEST. Is he to distribute the 20,000 copies?

Mr. HALE. He is to distribute 20,000 copies, the Senate 5,000 copies, and the House of Representatives 10,000 copies. I have some sympathy with what the Senator from Missouri says about this Alaska experiment. I have never taken any great stock in it. It has always looked to me as if it was a forced put; but Congress has embarked in it, and has accepted it; it has undertaken the propagation of reindeer there as a food supply for the people, and there is no doubt that a great interest in all parts of the country is felt in the experiment. People of scientific and semiscientific minds have had their attention directed to it, and they want copies of this book. I have myself had a good many requests for it. If the Senator will move to cut down the number to 10,000, leaving only 10,000 copies to be distributed by the Bureau of Education, which of course is this gentleman who is in Alaska, I shall not object to that, but it is not a very bad thing as it is.

Mr. MORGAN. How many copies are given to him by the resolution as it stands?

Mr. VEST. Twenty thousand copies.

Mr. HALE. Thirty-five thousand copies would cost about $6,000, and they are all to be in the same binding. As I have said, the committee cut down the book form to be distributed by the Alaskan agent of the Bureau of Education, leaving them all in paper covers, the cheapest form. I care very little about it myself.

Mr. VEST. I move to strike out the 20,000 copies to be distributed by Mr. Jackson.

Mr. HALE. I would not do that.

Mr. TELLER. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not do that, but that he will allow the Bureau to have some copies at least.

Mr. VEST. I understand that he is to do it.

Mr. TELLER. It is the Bureau.

Mr. HALE. It is to be done by the Bureau of Education.

Mr. VEST. Let the Bureau do it, then. I have no objection to that.

Mr. TELLER. That is the idea. The Bureau of Education will distribute the copies.

Mr. VEST. I understand the Senator from Maine agrees to strike off 10,000 copies.

Mr. HALE. I suggest to the Senator, if he moves anything, that he move to strike out "20,000," in line 7, and make it 10,000, and then strike out "35,000" as the total and make it "25,000." I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. VEST. Very good.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first question is on the amendment of the committee, in line 8, to strike out the word "cloth" and insert "paper covers."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to strike out, in line 7, "20,000 copies" and insert "10,000 copies," and to reduce the total from "35,000 copies" to "25,000 copies."

The amendment was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

CUMBERLAND SOUND IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. PASCO. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 86) directing the Secretary of War to furnish certain information with reference to the projects for the improvement of the harbor of Cumberland Sound, Georgia, and St. Johns River, Florida, to report it favorably with an amendment in the form of a substitute. This is an urgent matter, has received the unanimous approval of the committee, and I ask that it may receive immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The amendment of the Committee on Commerce was to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to report what amount, if any, can be profitably expended in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, upon the improvement of the harbor of Cumberland Sound, Georgia, in compliance with the requirements of the second section of the river and harbor acts of 1866 and 1867 and of the sundry civil appropriation act of March 3, 1893.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution directing the Secretary of War to furnish certain information with reference to the project for the improvement of the harbor of Cumberland Sound, Georgia."

ALLEGED ASSESSMENTS IN THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, the Chair lays before the Senate——

Mr. QUAY. I gave notice yesterday that at the conclusion of the morning business to-day I would call up the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, there is a resolution now lying on the table, which I asked, when it was placed before the Senate a day or two ago, that I might have the privilege of calling up at a convenient time. I desire now to call it up for the purpose of having it referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. It is a resolution instructing the committee to make certain investigations. I do not ask that the resolution be adopted, but simply that it may be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the following resolution, submitted by Mr. PEFFER February 12, 1896:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be, and it is hereby, instructed to inquire and report whether, during the year 1895, or any portion thereof, any of the employees of the Post-Office Department, while receiving pay from appropriations for that Department, did, with the knowledge, connivance, or direction of any clerk or clerks, or chief or chiefs of division, levy and collect assessments of money on and from other employees of the Department to be used, and which was used, for political purposes in States where election campaigns were in progress at that time; whether any person or persons were employed and borne on the Department rolls as employees and regularly paid as such who, while pretending to be discharging the duties of inspectors in the free-delivery service, were in fact actively engaged in aiding and assisting one of the political parties in said election campaign; whether, during such time, in room 3 of the Interior Department building, or in any other room or rooms in said building or in any other building, any employee of the Department was directing or managing the employment of persons for the purposes aforesaid and receiving and disbursing the moneys so assessed and collected, and whether such manager or director kept an account of such moneys in his own name in any bank of the city of Washington or elsewhere.

The committee will inquire and report, further, whether during the period covered by this resolution any person or persons were employed by any clerk or chief of division in the Post-Office Department and kept on the Department pay rolls and paid out of the Department funds, which payment was not authorized by law or by any lawful rule or regulation of the Department, and for which services no appropriation had been made by Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, in the absence of objection.

SEACOAST DEFENSES.

Mr. PROCTOR obtained the floor.

Mr. SQUIRE. I wish to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1359) for construction of two steam revenue cutters for service on the Pacific Coast. I will state that the bill will not occupy any time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair had recognized the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR].

Mr. SQUIRE. I beg pardon. I withdraw the motion, Mr. President.

Mr. QUAY. I gave notice yesterday that at the conclusion of the morning business to-day I should ask the Senate to take up the Army appropriation bill. I now make that request, and if the bill referred to by the Senator from Washington does not provoke any discussion I shall not object to its consideration after the Army bill has been laid before the Senate.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask the Senator if he will not give way for thirty minutes, so that I may have an opportunity of addressing the Senate, in accordance with the notice I have heretofore given?

Mr. QUAY. I will withdraw the motion until the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that the bill (S. 1159) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses may be temporarily laid before the Senate, for the purpose of enabling me to make some remarks upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill referred to by the Senator from Vermont, on which he is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, the exposed condition of our coast requires no proof and the necessity of defending it should require no argument. It was recently stated by Admiral Walker, at a meeting of the Committee on Coast Defenses:

If they (the English) were at this time to send over such a naval force as they could spare from Europe they would have their own way upon our coast. * * * They would capture or destroy the whole Navy. * * * By putting all our vessels behind Sandy Hook we could make something of a fight for that place, but nothing would prevent them from raiding the whole coast.

The subject has been periodically discussed in Congress. It has been alluded to in Executive messages and the reports of Executive Departments, and has been continuously commented upon by the newspaper world. But as yet these discussions have not been followed by any decisive action.

However, they have not been without their value. They have led to official investigations and official reports, and have accomplished the great result of impressing upon the American people the necessity of some action in this matter. It can safely be said that we have reached the point where the question is not so much whether or not we shall defend our coast as it is how we can best accomplish it. The Army, the Navy, the press, the people, those in authority and those not, voice the sentiment that our coasts sadly need protection and that protection should be provided, but how? Shall it be done by land fortifications alone, by a navy alone, or by a wise combination of the two methods?

It is fully substantiated by reason and authority—

First. That a proper system of land defenses will make our great cities safe from any naval attack.

Second. Such a system can be constructed for a sum many times less than the cost of a navy like the great navies of Europe, and for a sum that may reasonably be expended.

Third. Land fortifications are much more efficient for coast defense than a navy, and when once constructed are durable, cheaply maintained, and easily strengthened.

Fourth. The defense of our cities cannot be left to the Navy alone, however large.

Fifth. A navy that would equal the great navies of Europe is unnecessary and its cost makes such a navy impracticable.

Sixth. A navy quickly deteriorates and is expensive to maintain.

Seventh. The construction of land defenses should always precede the building of a navy.

These points I hope to substantiate principally by naval authority

THE PROPOSALS OF THE ENDICOTT BOARD.

In 1885 the Endicott Board, so called, was organized, and consisted of Secretary Endicott as president, two officers of the Engineers and two of the Ordnance Corps, two naval officers, Commander W. T. Sampson and Commander Casper F. Goodrich, men of the highest ability in their profession, and two civilians, Erastus Corning, of New York, and Joseph Morgan, of Pennsylvania, who were experts in iron and steel and were of the highest standing and capacity in business affairs. This board, after eight months' earnest and careful study of the subject, made a unanimous report, which is the most exhaustive, conservative, and reliable that has ever been rendered to our Government with reference to coast defenses, and its conclusions are to-day the standard authority on the subject.

Admiral Walker indorsed the plans of this board before the committee, and in speaking of the bill which contemplates carrying those plans into effect he says:

If in case of war we intend to hold our own and take care of our seacoast cities, they must be fortified, and that as soon as practicable. The measure is an excellent one and meets my approval.

The total cost of a complete system of land defenses, as estimated by this board, would be $97,782,800, which includes the estimate of $4,334,000 for submarine mines and their adjuncts and $3,416,800 for the defenses of the lake ports, but does not include an estimate for the defense of Puget Sound. Striking out the estimate for the lake ports for the reason that we can defend them best by taking Canada, and allowing $6,000,000 for the defenses of Puget Sound, we have the sum of $100,366,000 for a total cost of our proposed land defenses, which would provide for the complete defense of our twenty-eight principal ports.

That board also estimated for floating batteries and torpedo boats, as adjuncts to the land defenses (mainly for the ports of New Orleans and San Francisco), the sum of $28,595,000, of which $9,720,000 was for torpedo boats, $8,150,000 for floating batteries at New Orleans, and $10,725,000 for floating batteries at San Francisco.

The proposals made by this board were, more specifically, as follows:

Thus giving a total of guns proposed for the above ports of 4 6-inch guns, 102 8-inch guns, 222 10-inch guns, 203 12-inch guns, 6 14-inch guns, 44 16-inch guns, 24 10-inch mortars, and 700 12-inch mortars, being in all 581 guns and 724 mortars. The above estimates of cost include for every port the cost of masonry and earthwork, armor, structural metal, the guns and mortars, carriages, and the submarine mines and their adjuncts. Since the time of rendering this report the engineering authorities have modified the details somewhat, the tendency being to decrease the number of heavy guns and to increase the number of mortars, until now it is proposed to have 36 16-inch guns, 203 12-inch guns, 180 10-inch guns, 98 8-inch guns, 360 quick-fire guns, 1,032 12-inch mortars, and 24 10-inch mortars, being a total of 1,933 guns and mortars.

It has also been determined that New Haven and New London can be defended best by blocking the eastern entrance to Long Island Sound by fortifications; but these changes in the plans of the Endicott board have not substantially changed the cost of the work as estimated by that board. The increase in guns and mortars has been divided principally among Southern and Pacific ports.

The total amount appropriated up to date from and including the 3d day of March, 1883, for the increase of the Navy is $110,371,710.10. In giving the figures in regard to the new Navy I treat as complete all ships authorized or in process of building. It therefore appears that the amount ($110,371,710) spent on the new Navy would have entirely completed in the minutest detail the most perfect system of land defenses that the art of the engineer can devise, including the armament, with a remaining surplus of $10,005,710.

From the last report of the Secretary of War we find that in the same period we have expended only $10,631,000 on coast defense.

According to the report of the Endicott board, which was approved by Commanders Goodrich and Sampson, two naval experts, we ought to expend $28,000,000 on floating defenses and $97,000,000 on land defenses. Instead of keeping up this proportion we have expended $10,000,000 on land defenses and many times that amount on floating defenses.

We have also spent millions in deepening the approaches to our harbors to make them accessible to a hostile fleet, and practically nothing for their defense.

We have neglected the work which should have been done first and which would have been more than completed for the sum spent on the Navy, while the Navy, still far too small to protect itself, is left without the protection of a system of harbor defense which should have preceded its construction.

OUR NEW NAVY.

I shall speak freely of our shortcomings in the matter of defense. Only by understanding our needs will we be aroused to provide for them. None need fear that this will give valuable information to possible enemies. It is to be hoped that the British War Office and Admiralty have not plans in detail of our partially constructed mine and torpedo systems. There is little else in our preparation or nonpreparation for war that they do not understand.

There is no danger of exposing our weak points. They are well known. The need is to realize them ourselves and to apply the remedy.

It becomes necessary to make some comparison between the relative expense and efficiency of the land and the floating defenses but I shall do this in no spirit of unfriendliness to the Navy.

There is not in the world a braver or better trained body of men than the officers of our Navy. In any war, no matter what the odds, they may be counted on to do all that American manhood can do to sustain the honor of the flag under which they fight. The deeds of Farragut passing the forts at New Orleans or lashed to the mast at Mobile, of Foote at Fort Henry and on the Mississippi, of Porter at Fort Fisher, of Worden on the Monitor, of Cushing at Albemarle, of Winslow on the Kearsarge will be equaled or surpassed whenever duty calls for such daring. In fact, the whole history of our Navy has been such as to stimulate our national pride and lead us to the extreme of liberality in upbuilding it.

But we must not look, Mr. President, for the impossible from any body of men, and it is an injustice to the Navy itself to expect that they can succeed against overwhelming odds. Thus, with all honor and respect for the Navy and in justice to it, I make the following comparisons:

Our Navy, according to the annual report of the Secretary of the Navy in 1893, was rated as standing seventh in the list of the navies of the world. Assuming that the minor powers have made no progress in this respect (which is not the case) and taking into consideration the increase in our own Navy, appropriated for during the past two years, the United States would, perhaps, in respect of naval strength, be at the head of the second-class powers. That is, admitting that we have caught up with or even surpassed little Holland, which is doubtful, we will still be separated by a vast interval from the five great naval powers of the world.

For the sum of $110,371,710 the United States will have, on the completion of vessels now under construction—

8 battle ships;

4 double-turret monitors;
1 barbette coast-defense turret vessel;
1 harbor-defense ram;
2 armored cruisers;
7 protected cruisers;
6 partially protected cruisers;
20 cruisers;
17 gunboats;
1 dynamite gun vessel;
9 torpedo boats;
1 dispatch boat;
1 naval cadet practice vessel.

Upon the foregoing are, or are to be, mounted—

82 8-inch guns;
18 10-inch guns;
12 12-inch guns;
24 13-inch guns;
3 dynamite guns;
187 5-inch and 6-inch rapid-fire guns.

Of the ships thus obtained there is probably not one that naval officers will not admit is overmatched by foreign ships. Admiral Walker stated before the committee that England has ships that outclass ours and that other powers have such ships. The one admitted superiority is the quality of our marine engines and armor, giving speed to the ship and resistance to projectiles. But foreign navies, like those of England and France, on the former of which is expended annually nearly as much money as our entire new navy has cost, will soon have utilized all the ideas which we have developed.

OUR NAVY IN COMPARISON WITH THE BRITISH NAVY.

A brief comparison, taken from the last report of the Secretary of the Navy, will demonstrate how hopelessly behind foreign powers the United States is in naval equipment. This is particularly true as regards Great Britain, our traditional enemy. Great Britain has, or will have when the authorized ships are completed, 60 armored battle ships to our 8, 11 coast-defense vessels to our 20, this deficiency on the part of England being due to her policy of placing her first line of defense at the enemy's coast, according to the Secretary's report; Great Britain has 29 armored cruisers to our 2, she has 74 unarmored protected cruisers to our 13, she has 92 unarmored cruisers to our 20, she has 16 unarmored gun vessels to our 17, she has 34 unarmored torpedo vessels to our 1, and she has 251 torpedo boats to our 9.

The report is still more striking when we reflect that the proposed increase of the British navy in armored battle ships, as shown in said report (that is, an increase of 10), is more than our whole force of such ships; that her proposed increase of armored cruisers (4) is more than our whole force of such cruisers; that her proposed increase of unarmored protected cruisers (22) is more than our whole force of such cruisers, and that her proposed increase of torpedo boats (62) is many times our whole force of torpedo boats.

The British have also increased the force of enlisted men in their navy by over 25 per cent in the last five years, being an increase of 17,850 men, while our whole force contains, in men, officers, and marines, but 13,460. The British navy has nearly 90,000 men, or more than six and a half times as many as our Navy. The above comparisons have contemplated all vessels being built or authorized to be built as part of the respective navies and are taken from the last report of the Secretary of the Navy.

In the Scientific American for December 28, 1895, it is said:

> Summing up totals for battle ships and cruisers combined, we get: United States, 43 ships with a total displacement of 180,825 tons; Great Britain, 208 ships with a total displacement of 1,158,005 tons; which shows Great Britain to possess a superiority in fighting ships of 6.4 to 1.

When this article was called to the attention of Admiral Walker before the committee he said that he considered it a correct statement for practical purposes.

In Brassey's Naval Annual for 1895 it is said:

> It has been accepted by both political parties in the State (England) that a standard of strength for the British navy is an equality, if not superiority, to the navies of any two foreign powers. In the debates on the introduction of the naval defense act and on the motion of Lord George Hamilton for the increase of the navy, in December, 1893, prominent members on both sides of the House of Commons expressed their adherence to this view.

Admiral Walker stated also that he understood the above to be the English policy.

We speak confidently of our commerce destroyers, and I admit that in case of war with Great Britain they would be the most effective part of our Navy, but they are of little or no avail as a means of defending our coast, and here as elsewhere Great Britain far excels us.

The British have the following ships which are in receipt of an annual subsidy and are permitted to fly the blue ensign, indicating that they belong to the royal naval reserve, and which Admiral Walker spoke of as the fastest in the world:

There are also numerous ships on the admiralty list complying with the admiralty conditions as to construction which have no national tie, such as the Lucania and Campania, the fastest large vessels afloat. They are suitable for receiving an armament, but there is no arrangement with owners, except the promise of preference for occasional State employment.

To contend with these the United States Government has a lien upon the four American line steamers, Paris, New York, St. Louis, and St. Paul. These four steamers, by the terms of their contracts, have to be 20-knot steamers. They made that time on their trials, but as a matter of fact they are slower than the faster ones of the English list.

In respect to armament all those of equal tonnage will probably be on equal terms. The principal armament contemplated either in this country or abroad is one of rapid-fire guns up to and including the 6-inch gun. But it must not be forgotten that Congress has declined to allow a single gun to be made for the four reserve cruisers, while England keeps guns for her reserve ships in her various ports all over the world where they will be most quickly available in event of war. These vessels are provided with platforms to receive guns, and they could be put in commission at once at any of these ports.

LAND FORTIFICATIONS IN COMPARISON WITH OUR NAVY.

Such is our Navy, but suppose that a like sum had been expended on land coast defenses, what would the country now have to show for the expenditure?

There is no higher engineering authority on this subject than General Abbott. He says that "the entire coast would be placed in a condition of security even if operated against by the largest naval means which could be brought against it."

Admiral Walker said before the committee that if our harbors were properly fortified no squadron would attempt to take them.

For the sum with which we have procured our Navy we could have rendered our seaports practically safe against the combined assaults of all the navies admittedly superior to our own and could have occupied the first place in the world as regards our fortified frontier and still have money enough left to provide a good share of the additional floating batteries and torpedo boats necessary. The plans of the Board would have given us land defenses calculated to withstand all methods of attack, even after the improvements that may reasonably be expected during many years to come. The proposed works assumed an attack with high explosives and are planned to resist such an attack. The guns were heavier than any mounted on any ship abroad except a few coast-defense vessels (notably the Italian), which no one even suggests can cross the Atlantic ocean, yet even these were matched by those estimated for our defense. Since the date of the estimates for land defenses the guns on shipboard have exhibited a constant tendency to decrease in relative power.

The land defenses would have had in addition to the fortifications—

98 8-inch guns as against the new Navy's 82;
180 10-inch guns as against the Navy's 18;
203 12-inch guns as against the Navy's 12;
6 14-inch guns as against the Navy's 24 13-inch guns;
36 16-inch guns as against the Navy's none;
1032 12-inch mortars as against the Navy's none;
24 10-inch mortars as against the Navy's none;
4 6-inch guns as against the Navy's none;
360 quick-fire guns, 5-inch, as against the Navy's 187;

In other words, the proposed land defenses for the same sum would mount 1,576 guns and mortars of 8-inch caliber and upward as against the new Navy's 136 guns, and would have mounted 360 rapid-fire guns of 5-inch caliber as against the Navy's 187.

These plans if carried out would provide Boston alone with 171 guns and mortars of 8-inch to 16-inch caliber, as against the 136 guns of 8-inch to 13-inch caliber in our whole new Navy.

At New York there would be 269 guns and mortars of from 8-inch to 16-inch caliber, as against the 136 guns of the entire new Navy. At San Francisco there would be 232 guns and mortars of from 8-inch to 16-inch caliber, as against the 136 guns of the Navy. These comparisons between the respective armaments we would have at these important points and the armaments we have obtained in the whole new Navy for the same money show that the scale is much in favor of any one of the above ports alone as against the combined force of the Navy.

The following table, showing the relative cost of mounting a land battery and a ship battery of the same power, leaves no room for argument. It shows the cost of mounting such an armament as the one on the battle ship Indiana and the cost of mounting a land battery of equal force, showing the cost of the former to be $5,265,858.03, and that of the latter to be $1,553,428. This is more convincing when we consider that according to the statement of Admiral Walker this land battery is more effective than the ship battery in the ratio of 3 to 1, and according to the statement of General Miles in the ratio of 5 to 1:

Land battery.

Guns.	Number.	Cost of guns.	Cost of carriage.	Cost of emplacements and platforms.
12-inch	4	$195,812	$96,000	$200,000

GUNS AFLOAT AND GUNS ASHORE.

Guns mounted on land are much more formidable than those mounted on ships. Admiral Walker said before the committee:

Guns properly placed in batteries are much more effective because they can be fired more accurately, and shots striking near them would probably do but little damage, if any, while one shot striking a ship might do great damage. * * * There is a limit to the elevation of a gun on a vessel.

In response to the question of the chairman, as to whether or not he corroborated the statement of General Miles, that one gun properly placed on shore was equivalent to five on shipboard, Admiral Walker said:

I should put it rather less than that, say one to three.

Thus the above table shows, according to Admiral Walker, that for the same money we procure more than ten times the effective results on land fortifications than on vessels, and, according to General Miles, more than sixteen times the effective results.

For proof of the value and efficacy of coast fortifications to withstand attacks from the sea we need not rely upon theories alone, for there is ample military experience that attests the fact. It is admitted that it is absolutely impracticable to reduce strong land fortifications from the sea. The following are extracts from a series of lectures by General Abbot before the Naval War College, entitled "The defense of the seacoast of the United States."

On May 15, 1862, an earthen battery situated on Drewry's Bluff about 100 feet above James River, and without bomb-proof cover, was attacked by two ironclads, the Galena and the Monitor, and by three wooden vessels, the Aroostook, the Port Royal, and the Naugatuck. The ironclads anchored at from 600 to 1,000 yards' range, where a double pile obstruction, reinforced by hulks, prevented a nearer approach; the wooden vessels anchored about 1,300 yards below. After fighting for about three and a quarter hours the fleet was repulsed; the Galena had expended nearly all her ammunition and had suffered severely, being hulled several times. The Monitor and apparently the wooden vessels were not seriously injured; but Lieutenant Commander Jeffers, commanding the Monitor, reported: "So long as our vessels kept up a rapid fire they rarely fired in return, but the moment our fire slackened they remanned their guns. It was impossible to reduce such works except by the aid of a land force."

The armament of the Galena consisted of 9-inch Dahlgren smooth-bores and Parrott rifles; the Monitor carried two 15-inch guns; the armament of the wooden vessels is not stated in the official reports.

When Fort Drewry was captured in 1865, the water-bearing guns consisted of one 7-inch Brooke rifle, with six 10-inch and three 8-inch Rodman smooth-bores. I (Abbot) was personally informed by Major Drewry, who had commanded in the action of May 15, 1862, that at that date he had only three Rodman smoothbores in position, the others having been added subsequently.

The next typical pitched battle between guns ashore and guns afloat took place at Fort Sumter on April 7, 1863. The day was calm and all the conditions were favorable to the fleet.

Fort Sumter at that date consisted of an unfinished masonry work having a single tier of casemates, strengthened by such means as the Confederates had found practicable after its occupation. The masonry was largely shell concrete faced with brick; the scarp was 8 feet thick. The site was a small artificial island.

Admiral Dupont reported the range of the monitors as from 550 to 800 yards, that of the Ironsides being not less than 1,000 yards; his ordnance officer, Lieut. A. S. Mackenzie, reports the ranges as from 550 to 2,100 yards; the Confederate engineers give them as from 900 to 1,500, averaging 1,200 yards.

The engagement lasted two and one-half hours. As to the result, Admiral Dahlgren reported: "No ship had been exposed to the severest fire of the enemy over forty minutes, and yet in that brief period five of the ironclads were wholly or partially disabled; disabled, too, in that which was most essential to our success—I mean in their armament or power of inflicting injury by their guns. * * * The other ironclads (two out of seven), though struck many times severely, were still able to use their guns, but I am convinced that in all probability in another thirty minutes they, too, would have been likewise disabled."

The official reports of the captains commanding the ironclads indicate that the fleet, exclusive of the New Ironsides, received 346 hits. The New Ironsides was struck several times, but the exact number appears not to have been reported. The Keokuk was sunk where her guns were subsequently secured by the Confederates. One man was killed and at least 22 wounded on shipboard during the action.

Upon the Confederate side, General Beauregard states: "Not more than 34 shots took effect on the walls of Fort Sumter." "Fort Moultrie and other batteries were not touched in a way to be considered." The injuries to Fort Sumter were by no means disabling, and the total casualties on land were 3 men killed by the accidental explosion of an ammunition chest, and 11 men wounded—5 of them by the same accident.

The next conspicuous duel between armored ships and forts was at Fort Fisher, N. C. This fort had a water front and a land front, both consisting of substantial sand batteries. The land front had an oblique fire upon the sea. The work was well provided with traverses and bombproofs, but the former were so conspicuous that they marked the gun positions with great distinctness. The site was a low, sandy point between the ocean and Cape Fear River. The offing afforded unlimited development to the fleet.

Carrying out the plan of a cooperative attack in aid of the land forces, Admiral Porter ordered his monitors to anchor at a range of about 800 yards, and his wooden vessels in three lines at from 1,100 to 1,800 yards. The former were to fire deliberately upon the land front (from within a dead angle where the enemy could reply only at great disadvantage) in order to prepare the way for an assault; the latter were to maintain so terrific a storm of shot and shell over the fort as to prevent the enemy from serving his guns. These tactics were successful, and the Confederates were soon driven to take temporary shelter in their bombproofs.

Immediately after the capture of the fort, January 15, 1865, I (Abbott) personally made an inventory of the armament, with notes as to its condition. The following were the water-bearing guns: On the land front, one 10-inch Rodman, five 8-inch Rodmans, five old 32-pounders, one old 24-pounder, seven 6.4-inch rifles, one 4.2-inch rifle; total, twenty guns. On the water front, nine 10-inch Rodmans, four 8-inch Rodmans, two 8-inch rifles, two 7-inch rifles, five 6.4-inch rifles; total, twenty-two guns. The grand total which could have been used against the fleet was forty-two guns. Of these eight guns and eight carriages (sixteen in all) were disabled on the land front, and one gun on the water front (it had evidently burst in action). This statement includes all injuries by direct impact of shot or by destruction of carriages, or by the piling of sand in front of the guns; they represent the whole damage effected by one of the most tremendous bombardments of modern times directed against an open barbette battery on a low site.

The following was the effective armament of the fleet, as furnished to me by the Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department. It includes all the pivot guns and half the broadside guns of the vessels in action, excluding the small bronze guns as of no value for such service: Ten 15-inch Dahlgrens, twenty 11-inch Dahlgrens, two 10-inch Dahlgrens, one hundred and thirty-four 9-inch Dahlgrens, eighteen 8-inch Dahlgrens, sixteen 33-pounders, eight 8-inch Parrott rifles, twenty-four 100-pounder Parrott rifles, two 60-pounder Parrotts, two 50-pounder Dahlgrens, twenty-seven 30-pounder Parrotts, twelve 20-pounder Parrotts, making a total of two hundred and seventy-five guns of all calibers used against the land defenses.

This bombardment silenced the fire of the fort and enabled an assault to be delivered without the preliminary operations of a siege, an assistance of the most important character; but that the damage to the works should be as unimportant as it actually was seemed at the time almost incredible to the eyewitnesses.

These three examples, concerning which all the essential facts are known, have been selected as typical contests between guns ashore and guns afloat at the beginning of the era of armor and heavy guns on shipboard. They certainly prove that our ironclad fleet could not contend with any chance of success against an equal or even against a very inferior land armament.

The same was true at that epoch in Europe, as appears from the result of the attack of the Italian fleet upon the island of Lissa, in July, 1866. All though full data respecting this two-day engagement are lacking, enough is known to justify the claim of the Austrians "of having driven back the Italian ironclad ships, incapable of resisting the fire of the forts which command the harbor." Just as a third attack was about to be made, including a landing of troops to storm the works, the arrival of the Austrian fleet terminated the attempt.

The land works consisted of masonry forts and earthen batteries, which appear to have usually had high sites. They were distributed among three harbors, and "the whole of the defense presented a front of nearly 100 guns." The latter were all of an old type, of which the largest were smoothbores throwing solid shot weighing 66 pounds and rifles throwing elongated shot weighing 60 pounds.

The armored fleet consisted of 12 ships, carrying 248 guns. Their armament "contained all the latest improvements which the modern art of war had up to that date invented." There were also 8 unarmored ships, carrying 360 guns, and 16 dispatch boats.

This sort of military experience did not end with the civil war and with the guns and fortifications which may be called antiquated in the light of modern military equipment. Upon the order of the Navy Department Commander Goodrich made an exhaustive report of the British naval and military operations in Egypt in more recent years. He was an eyewitness of the operations at Alexandria in 1882. In his report he says:

In view of the tremendous fire to which Fort Mex was subjected, and the comparatively short range at which all the ships, except the Temeraire, engaged it, it is almost impossible to believe the fact that not a single gun here was dismounted or disabled during the action proper. The 10-inch and the 9-inch rifles (plates 38 and 43) were wrecked with gun cotton. The 8-inch gun, seen on the ground in plate 41, was bowled over by the Penelope long after the fort had ceased firing, and from a distance stated to be about 300 yards. The successful shot was the thirtieth of this series, and was aimed by the gunnery lieutenant.

Mex was the only fort at Alexandria which could not have resumed the action on the following day, for the party which landed from the Invincible completed the work of destruction but just begun by the fleet, ruining the carriages of the two heavy guns by exploding gun cotton inside the brackets and spiking the remaining guns in the lower batteries. Except for this gallant and eminently successful exploit (a land attack, remember), the parapets might have been sufficiently repaired during the night by heavy gangs of natives to enable the garrison to reopen fire. The Egyptians here had lost so severely that only men of a high order of bravery could have been induced to expose themselves to a repetition of the hammering they had endured on July 11. The actual garrison was whipped, and thoroughly whipped, after a most creditable and determined resistance, but it is hardly to be doubted that if it had been of a personnel similar to that on board the attacking fleet, the spiking party would have had difficulty in executing their task, and on July 12 the challenge from the ships would have been promptly accepted.

8. Recent high-powered guns are not adapted to bombarding earthworks. These guns possess a flat trajectory and send their projectiles along the line of greatest resistance of the fortification. The best work done at Alexandria was on the parapet of Fort Oom-el-Kabebe, which was shelled by the Inflexible at nearly 4,000 yards. In this case, the shells having a considerable angle of descent, buried themselves well, and in exploding blew out large craters, one of which was 17 feet long by over 5 feet deep. The great distance would forbid the placing of a sufficient number of these hits so close together as to breach the parapet, and the fire of the ships was too slow to keep the crews entirely away from the guns.

If, however, in this sense the best results from these modern weapons are only to be obtained by indefinitely increasing the fighting distance, the value of the high power and flat trajectory is unquestionably negative.

To the unprejudiced observer the most striking characteristics of the bombardment are, without doubt, the excessive apparent and the slight real damage done to the fortifications.

Commander Goodrich sums up his conclusions as follows:

18. HAVING THE ESSENTIAL FACTS OF THE LAST ENGAGEMENT BETWEEN SHIPS AND EARTHWORKS AT HAND, IT IS IMPOSSIBLE NOT TO DRAW ONE BROAD INFERENCE, THAT VESSELS ARE NOT YET AND NEVER WILL BE ABLE TO FIGHT ON EVEN TERMS WITH FORTS.

The responsibility of the attack belongs to the former, while the latter gain the credit of a drawn battle. The former can not continue the action beyond a certain time, limited by the capacity of shell rooms and magazines. The garrisons of the latter may wait quietly under cover until the fire slackens, can then return it with interest, and continue it indefinitely and absolutely at their own leisure.

Commander Goodrich further fortified his position by the following comparison: In order to show the disproportion between the number of guns ashore and those afloat he takes the five different principal forts of the Egyptian line and compares the number of guns on land with those of the English ships which attacked them, with the following results:

Fort Pharos, 4 land guns to 33 ship.
Fort Adda, 5 land guns to 28 or 33 ship.
Ras-el-Tin Lines, 7 land guns to 26 ship.
Light-House Fort, 4 land guns to 26 ship.
Fort Mex, 5 land guns to 14 or 16 ship.

Commander Goodrich also states that in these encounters the English guns were immensely superior to the Egyptian guns. In spite of this disparity he was convinced from what he saw at Alexandria that no fleet can or ever will be able to cope on equal terms with land forts.

The recent war between China and Japan bears testimony to the same effect.

The Japanese navy did not capture any of the Chinese forts without the cooperation of the land forces. In the operations preceding the capture of Port Arthur the Japanese fleet limited its operations to the protection of the left flank of the first army, which was advancing upon Port Arthur, and in assuring the safe transport of the second army from Japan to cooperate with the first. On the first day of the operations at Port Arthur (November 20) the fleet did little beyond keeping itself ready for action and watching the harbor, so as to prevent the escape of any Chinese vessels that might be within. On the 21st the Chinese works were captured by the Japanese land forces. During that day two of the Japanese ships attempted to shell the forts at Port Arthur at long range and from extreme elevation. What damage they did does not appear, but probably it was little, as the forts were invisible from the ships. Later in the day, after the Chinese troops had been driven from their works by the Japanese land forces, ten of the Japanese torpedo boats succeeded in entering the harbor and, at short range, did great execution on the Chinese troops with quick-firing machine guns.

The same general condition of things existed at the next and last important action during the war, in the attack upon Wei-hai-wei. This fortress was invested by the land troops on January 29, while the two channels leading to it were blockaded on the following day by the Japanese fleets. During those two days nearly all the forts on the mainland were captured by the Japanese forces with some assistance from the long-range fire of three of the Japanese ships, and by February 22 the town itself was in possession of the army. The Japanese naval operations were almost entirely limited to blockading the channels and capturing the Chinese ships.

General Miles, in emphasizing the value of coast defenses, in a recent interview in the New York Tribune, said:

History has shown that there has been no case where a fleet of war ships has been able to capture a strong fort unaided by troops ashore. The British tried this in the Crimean war, and the Japanese were unable to take Port Arthur without the help of their own soldiers on shore.

NECESSITY OF INCREASED APPROPRIATIONS FOR FORTIFICATIONS.

Some little has been done in the direction of fortifying two or three harbors, but at the present rate of appropriations it will take generations to accomplish the purpose. Of the 171 guns and mortars proposed for the defense of Boston there are only 21 provided for, and of the 232 proposed for San Francisco there are only 17 mounted and 8 others in progress. The present Secretary of War, in his report for 1895, presents the situation with great clearness and ability:

In your annual message transmitted to Congress in December, 1886, attention was directed to the urgent necessity for seacoast defense in these words: "The defenseless condition of our seacoast and lake frontier is perfectly palpable; the examinations made must convince us all that certain of our cities should be fortified and that work on the most important of these fortifications should be commenced at once. The absolute necessity, judged by all standards of prudence and foresight, of our preparation for an effectual resistance against the armored ships and steel guns and mortars of modern construction which may threaten the cities on our coasts is so apparent that I hope effective steps will be taken in that direction immediately."

Since that time the condition of these defenses has been under grave consideration by the people and by this Department. Its inadequacy and impotency have been so evident that the intelligence of the country long since ceased to discuss that humiliating phase of the subject, but has addressed itself to the more practical undertaking of urging more rapid progress in the execution of the plan of defense devised by the Endicott board in 1886, with subsequent slight modifications.

If future appropriations for the manufacture of guns, mortars, and carriages be no larger than the average authorized for the purpose since 1888, it will require twenty-two years more to supply the armament of the eighteen important ports for which complete projects are approved.

If the appropriations for the engineer work are to continue at the rate of the annual appropriations since 1890, it will require seventy years to complete the emplacements and platforms for this armament for the ports referred to.

In the report of the Board of Ordnance and Fortifications in 1895 it is said:

The work of providing a proper armament for our harbors is progressing steadily and on a sound basis, but so slowly that at the rate appropriations have been made during the last ten years it would take at least fifty years to place our seacoast in proper condition of defense. It is of national importance and an imperative necessity that the work of fortifications should be pressed with vigor. The plans for guns, carriages, and emplacements are perfected, and a liberal and constant annual appropriation should be made until our principal ports are properly protected. Such an expenditure will be a wise insurance against the sacrifice of many of our most important cities, which would reasonably occur in ten days' time of actual war in our present condition.

It is also true that if we had provided these modern land fortications there would be available as auxiliary defenses 210 8-inch muzzle-loading converted rifles and 300 15-inch and 210 8-inch smooth-bore guns which at present are of little value.

Appropriations now made for an efficient system of coast defenses are directly equivalent to an appropriation of many millions for the further strengthening of our Navy. For this present Navy of ours would be relieved by these land fortifications from the necessity of dissipating its energies in the vain endeavor to protect our harbors, and would then be able to concentrate its entire force in one or perhaps two powerful fleets. It is thus true that by furnishing these fortifications we also make available an offensive Navy made up of our whole naval force.

The amount of money already expended for our navy would have secured for us a splendid system of land defenses, which would have placed us in the first rank for defensive war, instead of which we have a Navy that nominally stands seventh, or possibly sixth, but on which an enormous sum must be expended before it can equal the weakest of its acknowledged superiors.

A STRONGER NAVY NOT INDISPENSABLE.

In the building of this new Navy we have accomplished already all that it was originally designed to do when this work was begun. The question now pressing for an answer is, shall the next step be in the direction of a further increase of the naval strength, or in the completion of the land coast defenses? If the latter, we may know to a cent the expenditures to which we commit ourselves and exactly what we will get for our money; if the former, we enter on an expenditure to which there is literally no end.

These facts now bring us face to face with an all-important consideration. In our expenditure of money heretofore we have had a tolerably definite idea as to what we were spending it for. We could not brook the idea that our coast might be plundered by a power like Spain or Chile. We may assume that we have now guarded against any possible humiliation of that sort. But what is the next step that we will take? It ought not to be a step in the dark.

From this time on any expenditure of money which we are prepared to make on naval increase will merely make us stronger than we need be with reference to powers that are weaker than ourselves, while leaving us still hopelessly inferior to the five great naval powers that are now so much stronger than ourselves. Whether we look backward or forward, further expenditure of money in this direction (except for the purpose of maintaining our present relative position) will be money sadly misappropriated unless it be expended with the deliberate purpose of pursuing this course to its logical end and of competing with and excelling the great powers of Europe in naval strength.

Is it our intention to carry our naval development to this conclusion? When the naval policy board of 1890 submitted a project for an American Navy consisting of 126 ships of all classes and 101 120-foot torpedo boats, at an aggregate cost of $349,515,000, it received the approval neither of the Navy Department nor of Congress (Abbott). But even had this policy been adopted, what would such a navy amount to in comparison with the British navy?

It is true that our 126 ships would all be modern vessels, while many of the English ships are not; but experience shows that if we force that country into a competition in this matter she will spend any amount of money necessary to maintain her superiority.

EXPENSE OF MAINTAINING A NAVY.

Again, suppose we had built such a navy. On the estimated deterioration of material, based on foreign experience (4 per cent for armored, protected, and partially protected ships, and guard, receiving, training, and harbor vessels; 5 per cent for small vessels, tugs, and yard craft; 6 per cent for corvettes, sloops, torpedo cruisers, gun vessels, gunboats, and troop ships; and 9 per cent for torpedo boats, steam launches, etc.), it would require an annual expenditure of about $12,000,000 for new material to keep the fleet at its original efficiency. This does not include the current expenses of maintenance—pay, clothing, subsistence, coal, repairs, etc., which in the English navy to-day amounts to over $70,000,000 per year—but is merely the annual addition to be made to the fleet to replace worn-out material.

There is much to be said in regard to the relative cost of maintaining land fortifications and maintaining ships.

Naval Constructor Hichborn, in his report to Secretary Herbert in 1895, says:

> Modern steel ships, with their extreme subdivisions and elaborate systems of ventilation, drainage, and mechanical auxiliaries of every kind, require much greater care, both when in commission and when in ordinary, than was formerly the case with the old wooden ships; neglect is followed by much more serious and far-reaching deterioration.

A clipping taken from a recent issue of a London paper will give some idea of the complexity of a modern battle ship. It is as follows:

> To give some further particulars of one of our magnificent war ships, let us take Her Majesty's ship Renown, one of the latest additions to the royal navy. This vessel has, besides her two main engines, other engines for condensing, pumping, reversing, turning, evaporating, distilling, ventilating and compressing, hoisting ashes, hoisting boats, steering, driving dynamos and driving fans for forced draft. Altogether there are no fewer than 60 separate engines. The tubes of various pipes for steam, water, oil, waste, etc., including those in the boilers, would, if placed end to end, stretch over a distance of 22 miles; and to this total would have to be added the further length of about 10 miles if the ship were fitted with Belleville water-tube boilers.

With every increase of speed, with every improvement of gun, projectile, or powder, which results in the increased penetration of armor new ships on our part must be designed and laid down, while to meet such changes land fortifications would only require the strengthening of the earthworks.

Great Britain expends on the average more on her navy every twenty months than the whole cost of our coast defenses would be. No navy ever has been or ever will be completed. The improvements of every few years render worthless material the cost of which would have permanently fortified several seaports. The ships, once built, must be manned and kept in service for a considerable portion of the time to prevent permanent deterioration. To keep a ship of war in service in peace requires just as many men as in war. A fortification can be maintained in peace on the peace footing, on the other hand a large proportion of vessels of war must always be maintained on the war footing, while those which are kept in reserve must be frequently commissioned, that is, put on the war footing, even in time of peace, in order to keep them in serviceable condition.

In a country like ours there is certain to come a time when the people will refuse to vote money for new constructions and will content themselves with maintaining what they already have.

When that time comes, with land defenses we have something to show for our money, and if these defenses are complete all appropriations may cease for many years except a trifling amount for care and preservation. If appropriations for naval constructions cease for a few years, the Navy will sink into insignificance; in other words, the policy of seeking naval supremacy commits our Government, simply for the purpose of keeping good its previous expenditures, to an outlay estimated as once every eight years of the entire amount necessary for the fortification of our seacoast in such a manner as to enable us to defy the navies of the world.

It would be much better to provide the land fortifications at a cost so many times less than the expense of making our Navy anything like equal to that of Great Britain, inasmuch as it is universally admitted that the land fortifications will render our coasts impregnable. It is also a matter at least of congratulation that whatever money may be spent to build and maintain coast fortifications will be spent in the United States, while much of the money that may be appropriated for the support of the Navy will find its way into foreign coffers.

NECESSITY OF ENGLAND'S HAVING A NAVY.

In considering our military resources both on land and sea we naturally contrast them with those of Great Britain. She is our traditional enemy, the only foreign power having any possessions on our continent, and the one power with which our chief conflicts of the past have taken place and with which the most irritating questions are liable to arise in the future.

I have endeavored to show how vastly superior her navy is to ours and that she is prepared to keep it so. This is the settled policy of Great Britain and has been so for many years, and for obvious reasons. The possessions of Great Britain lie in the four quarters of the world, and "a navy is necessary for colonies and colonies are necessary for a navy." The only successful way for Great Britain to defend such possessions is as the present Secretary of the Navy in his last annual report expresses it, "by placing her first line of defense at the enemy's coast." On the other hand, the United States are concentrated in one great tract of territory and are able to reenforce adequate coast defenses from the resources of a great nation without encountering the vicissitudes of protracted sea voyages and of foreign climates. A navy is essentially offensive, and the logical order in which to develop the military resources of a nation is first to provide for the protection of what that nation already possesses and then, if ever, to prepare for aggressive operations.

Mr. Tilden wisely said that, while we may afford to be deficient in means of offense, we can not afford to be defenseless. If we owned the possessions of Great Britain, I would say by all means increase our Navy until it outstripped the navies of the world as being the only practical means of defending those possessions; but can we rely upon any navy we are likely to build to successfully defend our 4,000 miles of seaboard? The present Secretary of the Navy said in his speech before the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, January 23, 1895:

> We do not need a great naval establishment like those of England and France.

Admiral Walker says: "We do not need a navy large enough to take charge of a European navy sent to operate against our coast." It is a self-evident proposition that no nation can rely upon its navy for defense, unless it can bring to any point threatened with attack a stronger force than the enemy can bring against it. Therefore, in the event of war with Great Britain it is not only necessary for us to have a navy that can rival hers, but we must have a navy at each of the score of ports that are subject to attack which will rival any fleet that Great Britain can send against us.

Admiral Walker says:

> Yes; you must have a naval force at every point of attack. * * * If we rely on the Navy alone it must be strong enough to overmatch the navy of any nation or any probable combination of nations.

England herself recognizes the impossibility of relying upon a navy alone as a means of defense, and notwithstanding her immense naval supremacy she is continually strengthening her coast defenses, notably those on this continent at Halifax and Esquimalt. She has already provided strong land fortifications, harbors of refuge for her fleets in case of defeat or storm or need of refitting; while we, with supreme disregard of logical methods, appropriate money to build a navy, which in case of war, if sent out, would be provocative of attack and without a single port or harbor whither it could flee for safety in case of defeat or want of repair. The gallant fight that surely would take place would in no way prevent the quick humiliation that must as surely follow. The true office of a defensive navy is to cooperate with complete land defenses, and our Navy is now sufficient for that purpose. If our coast defenses were sufficient we would have accomplished our first great duty of defending our country, and it would then be time enough to turn our attention to rivaling foreign powers on the high seas.

NECESSITY OF FORTIFYING OUR HARBORS.

Our desires and our traditions are for the maintenance of peace, and nothing will tend to the maintenance of peace more than an undoubted ability on our part to successfully withstand attacks from the sea. This is our weakest point, for our military resources are such that no hostile force is likely to seek an encounter with us on our own soil.

The question of coast defenses is no local question. The honor of the nation is as dear to an American citizen on the prairies of the West as to one in the rush of Broadway. Nor is the nation's honor only at stake. Any financial misfortune that befalls a seacoast city has its direct effect on the material interests of every inland city and every inland community.

The needs of the country appeal to Congress for action in this direction; the boundless capital represented in property that could be destroyed by bombardment appeals to us; the material interests of the whole nation that would be affected by that destruction appeal to us; the universal editorial sentiment of the country appeals to us; our common sense appeals to us. We can effect the purpose more cheaply now than hereafter. Let us provide suitable fortifications and render our harbors impregnable. We have our solid coasts to build upon. They will sustain any weight of earthworks, the best material for fortification, without the danger of ripping decks and unstable ships. Moreover, whatever works are made will be such that additions can from time to time be made to them to make them equal to withstanding the advances of science. If we do this, we will receive the commendation of the whole country.

The eloquent Senator from Colorado has spoken of the affiliations of blood between the United States and England, and the consideration and affection which should be an outcome of such relations. We, as a nation, have the best of reason to know the strength of such ties. Blood should be thicker than water, but is it? Our nation had its birth amid a flood of kindred blood; the battlefields of 1812 were crimsoned with hostile blood from kindred sources, while our civil war made red the hand of many a man who had lifted it against his brother. All our principal conflicts have taken place despite these ties.

In 1776 and 1812 and 1861 they were not strong enough to prevent the clash of arms. Every war of principle we have had has been with people of our own blood. The greatest war of modern times was on our own soil between those bound together by the strongest ties of race and blood, and sharing common history and traditions and inspired by like hopes and aspirations. In that conflict a generation ago thirty-five of those now occupying seats in this Senate, and among whom the most cordial relations exist, were actively engaged against each other on the fields of battle. The history of the nation has been the history of the race. The first man born into this world shed his brother's blood, and from that day to this it is sadly true that where causes of friction exist, the closer the relations the greater the irritation and the more bitter the quarrels. The experience of the past may be that of the future.

We must often have causes of friction with Great Britain while she has possessions in this hemisphere and a dependency bordering us for 4,000 miles and great fortresses frowning upon our shores, built and maintained with sole reference to war with us. Besides our two wars with her we have been dangerously near war with her once at least in every generation of our national existence. Fortunately we have in Canada a hostage for the good behavior of the mother country, as the first sound of war would be the death knell of British possessions on this continent, for our people would never consent to peace while the British flag floated over a foot of American territory. We may pray for the coming of that new era when—but in the meantime let us look to the wisdom that is born of experience and be prepared to defend the great heritage which the Almighty has intrusted to our keeping.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SQUIRE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 1359) providing for the construction of two steam revenue cutters for service on the Pacific coast.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TURPIE in the chair). The Chair will remind the Senator from Washington that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] is entitled to the floor upon his motion to proceed to the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. QUAY. I moved to take up the Army appropriation bill, and yielded to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. I now ask that the question be put to the Senate on taking it up, and it being before the Senate, I will yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SQUIRE. I understand that I was recognized by the Chair. It will take but a short time to dispose of the bill I wish to call up, I will state to the Senator from Pennsylvania. I rose and addressed the Chair before he did.

Mr. QUAY. I do not so understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair merely recognized the Senator from Washington in order to remind him that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] is entitled to the floor on his motion. The Chair did not recognize the Senator from Washington except for that purpose.

Mr. QUAY. I merely wish to have the Army appropriation bill before the Senate. Then I will yield to the proposition of the Senator from Washington if it does not create debate.

Mr. SQUIRE. Very well; I withdraw the motion.

Mr. QUAY. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 5359) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SQUIRE. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to yield to me for the consideration of the bill which I have indicated.

Mr. QUAY. I yield with the understanding that the bill creates no extended discussion.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senator from Washington to yield to me until I can make a request of the Senate in regard to the action of this body upon the Cuban resolution.

Mr. SQUIRE. Very well.

Mr. MORGAN. I think there is no doubt that the debate on the Cuban resolution can easily be concluded by 3 o'clock to-morrow. Perhaps there are two or three gentlemen here who desire to say something about it, but not with the intention to speak extensively. I therefore ask unanimous consent that at 3 o'clock to-morrow a vote may be had upon the Cuban resolution and pending amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama asks that by unanimous consent a vote be taken at 3 o'clock to-morrow upon the Cuban resolution and pending amendments.

Mr. HALE. Does that mean on the resolution and the then pending amendments?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. HALE. No further amendments to be offered and no further debate?

Mr. MORGAN. No further amendments and no further debate.

Mr. HALE. On the amendments that are pending at 3 o'clock——

Mr. PLATT. Or that may be offered before that time.

Mr. HALE. Or that may be offered before that time. Had not the Senator from Alabama better put that in, so as to save trouble?

Mr. MORGAN. Or any amendments that may be offered before that time.

Mr. CHANDLER. "Any amendments that may be offered" will not do. There would be but two. This reservation is that all amendments——

Mr. COCKRELL. That have been offered.

Mr. MORGAN. That have been offered.

Mr. LODGE. Or that may be offered.

Mr. HALE. The request, then, is that at 3 o'clock to-morrow a vote be taken on the resolution and all pending amendments and all amendments which before that time have been offered.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. That does not reach the matter entirely, because an amendment can not be offered until it is in order.

Mr. LODGE. Well, proposed.

Mr. PLATT. Many amendments are submitted and printed with a notice that they will be offered. All those ought to be included.

Mr. HALE. I suggest that the language be changed so as to include all pending amendments and all amendments of which notice has been given.

Mr. PLATT. That will do.

Mr. HALE. That will surely cover it. Then there will be no such question as we had here some days ago.

Mr. GRAY. Before the unanimous consent is granted, I should like to inquire how much time between now and 3 o'clock to-morrow will probably be given to the discussion of the resolution and the amendments that are proposed. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] has moved the consideration of an appropriation bill, which has been agreed to, and the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] has a matter which, by the consent of the Senator from Pennsylvania, is to be considered in the meantime. So there may not be an hour before 3 o'clock to-morrow which can be devoted to this important resolution from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PEFFER. I will state that the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] has not yet concluded his speech on the Cuban question.

Mr. HALE. I suggest to the Senator from Alabama that instead of making his proposition now, he wait for an hour or so and see whether the Army appropriation bill has not been finished.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; very good.

Mr. HALE. That bill will not take much time. I understood the Senator from Pennsylvania to yield to the Senator from Washington for his bill upon condition that it gives rise to no debate.

Mr. MORGAN. I withdraw my request.

Mr. HALE. I fancy the appropriation bill will be out of the way in an hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request of the Senator from Alabama for unanimous consent is withdrawn.

REVENUE CUTTERS FOR SERVICE ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1359) for the construction of two steam revenue cutters for service on the Pacific Coast.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to have constructed two steam revenue cutters of the first class for service on the Pacific Coast, the cost of the construction of each vessel not to exceed the sum of $250,000.

Mr. SQUIRE. I wish to make a brief statement in regard to the present condition of the Revenue-Cutter Service on the Pacific Coast, the number and kind of vessels composing the present fleet, and the situation as regards the requirement of new revenue cutters on that coast, as proposed in the bill.

The figures presented have been carefully revised and are believed to be correct.

The names of revenue vessels on the Pacific Coast, their tonnage, cost, cost of repairs, when built, etc., are as follows:

Name.	Gross tonnage.	When built.	Cost.	Cost of repairs since built.	Material of hull.	Average speed (most favorable conditions).
Cruisers.						Knots.
Grant	263	1871	$92,500	$68,487.90	Iron	10
Wolcott	199	1873	75,500	19,810.27	Wooden	8½ to 9
Corwin	213	1876	92,000	80,217.58	do	9
Perry	282	1884	83,000	31,001.41	Iron	9 to 9½
Rush	300	1885	74,400	41,146.76	Wooden	9 to 9½
Bear	703	*1885		123,087.12	do	9

*Transferred from the Navy in 1885.

The Bear was built for a steam sealer, many years ago, and was purchased from British owners by this Government for service in the Greely relief expedition, and afterwards transferred to the Revenue-Cutter Service by act of Congress in 1885. She was then fitted out as a revenue cutter and sent to the Pacific, where she has been employed ever since as an Arctic cruiser. The Bear is an old wooden vessel of obsolete type as to construction and machinery, and her maximum speed, under favorable conditions, will not exceed 9 knots. There has been expended in repairs upon this vessel during the past ten years more than $123,000 to keep her in fair condition for service. While it is true that this vessel can be made to last several years yet by the expenditure of a considerable sum annually, it would appear, as is the fact, that it is not in line with economy to continue to do this, and that the best interests of the Government would be best subserved by providing a suitable vessel to take her place.

The Grant was originally built for service on the New York station. She is a small iron vessel, nearly 25 years old.

The Corwin is a small wooden vessel, built on the Pacific Coast, about twenty years ago, at an original cost of $92,000, and has had spent upon her more than $80,000 for repairs, or within a few thousand dollars of her first cost. She is a 9-knot vessel of obsolete type, machinery, and construction, and will necessarily give out soon. Her place ought to be supplied by a new vessel.

The Wolcott is a small, slow (about 8 or 9 knots), wooden vessel, built in 1873, nearly twenty-three years ago.

The Perry is an iron vessel, built and fitted for service on the Great Lakes, but was sent to the Pacific Coast for service with the Bering Sea fleet.

The Rush is a wooden vessel, and is the best vessel of the service now on the west coast. She is small and slow; her maximum speed, under favorable conditions, is not above 9 or 10 knots. She was rebuilt in 1885, and for ordinary employment on a regular station she will answer for some years.

Vessels serving upon the Pacific Coast should be able, seagoing ships. While it is true that the vessels now there have performed valuable and efficient service, it is no less true that they are not in any sense equal to the work expected of them, and are all nearly worn out. These vessels carry a captain and six or seven officers and from thirty-five to forty men each. When they go to sea their bunkers are filled to their full capacity with fuel, besides carrying a large deck load of coal. Added to the fuel, are provisions and stores for a cruise usually of three to four months' duration, so that when they take the sea they are loaded until their decks are fairly awash, and the consequent immersion increases the natural displacement of the vessel, resulting in a reduction of speed, besides rendering the vessels logy in gales of wind and heavy seas, and correspondingly difficult to handle, to say nothing of their being thus rendered unsafe.

It is not too much to say that the splendid work performed by these vessels has been due entirely to the efficiency of their commanders and officers. There is probably no other service, with such utterly deficient means at command, that has performed anything approaching the work or achieved the results shown by the Revenue-Cutter Service.

In short, the vessels now composing the fleet of cutters on the Pacific Coast are, besides being very old, too small and too slow to be efficient. To enter upon the construction of more small vessels would be to supplement an already inefficient class with others of like type. Therefore it is indispensable that any new vessels authorized for this service should be of ample capacity and steam power to enable them to take and keep the sea under all conditions. Even were there no Bering Sea work to do, the conditions and requirements would not be changed.

The Revenue-Cutter Service is frequently called upon to cruise at sea in quest of vessels of the merchant marine reported lost or in distress, and in such service cover thousands of miles in the search. Several notable instances of this kind are mentioned in the last annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury in the cases of the American ships Ivanhoe, Montserrat, and Keweenaw.

Vessels cruising on the west coast anywhere north of San Francisco must of necessity be at all times prepared to cope with gales of wind and to keep the sea. Harbors are widely separated by distance, and there is therefore no refuge for storm-driven craft, and such must battle with sea and wind and find their way through as best they may. Obviously only well-equipped and stanch vessels may hope to do this successfully.

The last Congress authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into contract for the construction of a revenue cutter of the first class for service on the Pacific Coast. Accordingly plans and specifications were drawn, and upon these proposals were invited for the construction of a vessel deemed suitable for the service. But one proposal was received, and that was in the sum of $290,000, or $90,000 in excess of the authorization by Congress. Many firms declined to bid at all.

The pending bill provides for the construction of two revenue cutters of the first class, to cost $250,000 each. The sum asked for would at first glance appear large, but will not be considered so in the light of what has just been said.

The plans and specifications upon which it is proposed to construct these vessels have been laid before the Committee on Commerce. Briefly these provide for a vessel of the following general dimensions:

Length over all, 219 feet.

Length between perpendiculars, 200 feet.

Breadth of beam, 33 feet 4 inches.

Draft, 14 feet.

Displacement, about 1,000 tons.

The specifications require that this vessel shall be of the "composite type," that is, of steel and wood; the "topsides" (from the water line up) to be of steel, the keel and frame to be of steel, and the bottom (from the water line down) to be of wood, sheathed with copper; to be provided with single direct-acting triple-expansion engines of 2,000 indicated horsepower, which would develop a maximum speed of 16 to 17 knots per hour, and an ordinary cruising speed of 10 knots, and have a cruising radius of 3,000 miles; the vessel to be fitted with torpedo room and port, and so constructed as to be capable of carrying an effective battery of 6-pounder rapid-fire guns. The composite feature was adopted for several reasons.

1. A vessel designed for the service required has to encounter the ice packs and floes of the Bering Sea and Siberian coast, and is always in danger of being icebound—a condition which an all-iron or all-steel ship could not endure.

2. Much of the cruising in which these vessels would be engaged would be over uncharted seas, and a wooden bottom could encounter possible rocks and shoals with comparative safety, whereas a steel or iron bottom under such conditions would be readily punctured and disaster would follow.

3. As a matter of economy, owing to the rapid accumulation of barnacles and other marine growth upon the bottoms of iron and steel vessels in salt water, they should be docked, cleaned, and painted at least three times a year, which, in a ship of this class, would involve an expense of from $1,000 to $1,200 per year.

On the other hand, the coppered wooden bottom of the composite type would go from three to five years without this attention and expense.

The cost of material entering into the construction of steel and iron ships has advanced about 35 per cent within the past six months, and it is not possible, therefore, that such vessels can now be built for much, if any, less than the sum stated.

The plans contemplate that in event of hostilities vessels built after them could be employed as dispatch boats in cooperation with the Navy, or they could become, upon short notice, as effective commerce destroyers as any unarmored ships constructed for that purpose. Thus, while providing for an effective and efficient class of vessels for the Revenue-Cutter Service for times of peace, Congress would be adding materially to the strength and efficiency of that service as an adjunct to the naval establishment, while it would at the same time accentuate the value of the Revenue-Cutter Service as an arm of the national defense to be utilized in the future, as it has been in the past, in all our wars.

It is evident to those acquainted with the facts that these vessels should be provided for the revenue service. I have no doubt that the Senators from California and Oregon will support my statements. The bill should be passed without delay.

The bill has been approved by the Department; its passage is urged by the Department, and it has been unanimously approved by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The bill ought to be passed at once.

Mr. CHANDLER. I notice that the bill does not provide any method for constructing the proposed revenue cutters. Is it the intention of the Senator who advocates the bill to have no restrictions or limitations whatever put upon the Secretary of the Treasury, and to allow him to make private contracts without competition, or is there some general law which requires that there shall be competition?

Mr. SQUIRE. I will state for the information of the Senator from New Hampshire that there is a law under which bids are advertised for, received, and passed upon in due course by the Department.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is the invariable custom.

Mr. CHANDLER. It may be the custom—I think it is—but it should be the law.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It is the law.

Mr. SQUIRE. I will state that it is the law. I know it to be such. I have been in conference with the officials of the Department repeatedly on the subject of the bids for the revenue cutters already authorized, particularly the last one for the Pacific Coast.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask whether there is any provision in the bill as to the speed or as to the armament of the vessels?

Mr. SQUIRE. There are no such provisions in the bill, but it will be the endeavor of the Department to procure the best order of construction now obtainable in the United States for the purpose. I have just presented to the Senate the principal details proposed by the Department as to the character and construction of these vessels. The maximum speed is to be about 17 knots. It is the intention to have these vessels built on the Pacific Coast, if suitable bids can be obtained, I personally know that such bids can be obtained from shipbuilders on that coast, and I am confident the vessels will be well built and that the plans are good. The specifications will require that the bottoms of these vessels be built of Washington fir. There is no better wood for shipbuilding in the world, either for hulls or for inside finishing, than is found in the Pacific Northwest. It is even being sent by carload at great expense from Puget Sound and Gray's Harbor to Boston, to Philadelphia, and Newport News.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me, I will state that the bill is in the precise form of the measure which passed the Senate a few days ago with reference to such vessels for service upon the Great Lakes, and the Committee on Commerce was satisfied from the report of the Treasury Department that the particulars referred to by the Senator would be regarded.

Mr. SQUIRE. The only difference is as to the kind of service to be performed, it being more severe on the Pacific Ocean than on the Great Lakes, requiring the stanchest kind of vessels; and it costs more to build and place the vessels there where the duties are to be performed.

I may add that at the instance of the Department I have taken much interest in this subject and in the examination of plans and specifications. At the request of Assistant Secretary Hamlin last spring I corresponded with Capt. C. L. Hooper, who ably commanded the Bering Sea squadron last summer, relative to the character of vessel most desirable for this service, and I have conferred frequently with Captain Shoemaker, the efficient chief of the division of the Revenue-Marine Service, and other experienced officers of that corps, who have been giving close attention to the needs of the service. Truth compels me to state that this branch of the public service richly deserves the favorable attention of Congress to its requirements.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NEWPORT NEWS, VA.

Mr. DANIEL. By the courtesy of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I beg to ask the Senate to consider Senate bill 268. I will state that it is a bill for the erection of a public building for the use of the custom-house and the post-office at Newport News, Va., which has at four separate sessions of Congress passed the Senate unanimously.

Mr. QUAY. I will yield to the Senator from Virginia with the understanding that I shall make no more concessions of that character, and that the bill he proposes to call up will provoke no discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent to call up the bill referred to by him. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 268) for the erection of a public building for the use of the custom-house and post-office at Newport News, in the district of Newport News, Va. It proposes to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States custom-house, post-office, and other Government offices in the city of Newport News, Va., the cost of the site and building, including the vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed $100,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5359) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. QUAY. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the committee amendments be disposed of in their order as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered, unless objection be made. The Chair hears none, and the committee amendments will be considered in their order as reached. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, line 6, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Provided, That hereafter no pay shall be retained.

So as to make the clause read:

For pay proper of enlisted men of all grades, $4,265,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 16, after the word "recruiting," to strike out "headquarters and"; so as to make the clause read:

For clerks and messengers at the headquarters of the Army and at the several department headquarters; at the recruiting rendezvous; at the Military Academy at West Point; at the Artillery School at Fort Monroe, Va.; at the Infantry and Cavalry School at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and at the Cavalry and Light Artillery School at Fort Riley, Kans., not exceeding 90 clerks, at $1,000 each; 25 clerks, at $1,100 each; 10 clerks, at $1,200 each, and 45 messengers, at $720 each, $161,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 7, on page 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be suspended. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution, reported by Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, relative to the war in Cuba.

Mr. QUAY. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside in order that the pending appropriation bill may be proceeded with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The reading of the bill was resumed at line 8 on page 5.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 8, after line 2, to insert:

For additional pay to officer in charge of public buildings and grounds in Washington, D. C., $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 12, to insert:

Provided, That no enlisted man discharged by order of the Secretary of War for disability caused by his own misconduct shall be entitled to the travel allowances provided for in section 1290 of the Revised Statutes.

So as to make the clause read:

For allowance for travel, retained and detained pay, clothing not drawn, and for interest on deposits, payable to enlisted men on discharge, $700,000: Provided, That no enlisted man discharged by order of the Secretary of War for disability caused by his own misconduct shall be entitled to the travel allowances provided for in section 1290 of the Revised Statutes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "four"; so as to make the clause read:

Making, in all, for pay and general expenses of the Army, $13,104,512.73.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 13, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five thousand" and insert "seven thousand five hundred"; so as to make the clause read:

Maintenance and support of the Apache prisoners of war at Fort Sill, Okla., and for the purpose of the erection of buildings, purchase of stock, necessary farming tools, seeds, household utensils, and other necessary articles and expenses absolutely needed for their support and civilization, in addition to the sums herein appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 10, before the word "hospital," to strike out "general"; so as to make the clause read:

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

Medical and Hospital Department: For the purchase of medical and hospital supplies, including disinfectants for general post sanitation, expenses of medical supply depots, pay of employees, medical care and treatment of officers and enlisted men of the Army on duty at posts and stations for which no other provisions is made; for the proper care and treatment of cases in the Army suffering from contagious or epidemic diseases, and the supply of the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark.; advertising and other miscellaneous expenses of the Medical Department, the amount to be expended for pay of civilian employees not to exceed $40,000, $140,000; experimental cooking, $500; in all, $140,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 16, before the word "Disabled," to strike out "National Homes" and insert "the National Home for," and, in the same line, after the word "Soldiers," to insert "and its several branches"; so as to make the clause read:

For manufacture of metallic ammunition for small arms and ammunition for reloading cartridges, and tools for the same, including the cost of targets and material for target practice, ammunition for burials at the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and its several branches, and marksmen's medals and insignia for all arms of the service, $225,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 4, before the word "ordnance," to strike out "new," and in line 5, before the word "on," to insert "stores"; so as to make the clause read:

For overhauling, cleaning, and preserving ordnance stores on hand at the arsenals, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 10, before the word "Disabled," to strike out "National Homes" and insert "the National Home for," and in the same line, after the word "Soldiers," to insert "and its several Branches"; so as to make the clause read:

For firing the morning and evening gun at military posts prescribed by General Orders, No. 70, Headquarters of the Army, dated July 23, 1867, and at the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and its several Branches, including material for cartridges, bags, etc., $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 17, after the word "departments," to insert "and in inspection districts"; so as to make the clause read:

For contingent expenses at the headquarters of the several military departments and in inspection districts, including the staff corps serving thereat, being for the purchase of the necessary articles of office, toilet, and desk furniture, binding, maps, books of reference, and police utensils, $3,000, to be allotted by the Secretary of War, and to be expended in the discretion of the several military department commanders.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. HAWLEY. I reported favorably this morning from the Committee on Military Affairs a slight amendment to the pending bill, which I now beg leave to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 13, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That there shall be no appointments of hospital stewards until the number of hospital stewards shall be reduced below 100, and thereafter the number of such officers shall not exceed 100.

Mr. HAWLEY. A very brief word of explanation, Mr. President. The number of hospital stewards has been gradually reduced, owing to the condensation of the Army into large posts, which is now going on. The present number of hospital stewards is 112. If the limit shall remain as it is now by law, there will be a continual pressure to appoint superfluous hospital stewards. I will add that this amendment meets the approval of the Surgeon-General.

Mr. QUAY. The amendment is indorsed by the Committee on Military Affairs, as I understand.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understood from the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] that the amendment was not objectionable in the eye of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. QUAY. I understand it is indorsed by the Military Committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. It was reported by me from that committee this morning.

Mr. QUAY. Then there is no objection to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment is recommended by the Military Committee, and, as the Senator knows, is indorsed by the Surgeon-General. It really restricts the expenditure of money.

Mr. QUAY. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PEFFER. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 332.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Kansas will permit an inquiry, what particular measure does he desire to have taken up? I address the Senator from Kansas because I am entitled to the floor on the unfinished business.

Mr. PEFFER. I will state to the Senator that I think the matter can be disposed of as rapidly as the Secretary can do the reading. It is a resolution to investigate bond sales. It is now subject to an amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. I have no objection to agreeing to the amendment; I am satisfied the Senate will have none and that the resolution can go through without any trouble.

Mr. HALE. I suggest to the Senator that, instead of moving to take up the resolution, which will displace the regular order of business, he ask unanimous consent to take it up so as not to displace that.

Mr. PEFFER. I have done so.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it is due to the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], who is now entitled to the floor to resume the speech begun by him last evening, that his speech should not be broken up. I hope, therefore, the Senator from California will be allowed to complete his remarks according to the usual courtesy of the Senate.

Mr. PEFFER. I will say further that when I made the request I did not know the Senator from California was expecting to address the Senate at this time. I withdraw the request for the present, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request of the Senator from Kansas is withdrawn.

WAR IN CUBA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations on the 5th instant relative to the war in Cuba.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from California yields to me for a moment. I desire to renew the proposition I made this morning, that to-morrow at 3 o'clock—or I am willing to say half past 3 or 4 o'clock, whichever is most convenient to Senators——

Mr. VEST. Say 4 o'clock.

Mr. MORGAN. That the Senate proceed to vote upon the Cuban resolution, with all the amendments pending and all of which notice has been given.

Mr. HALE. Without further debate?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; without further debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is asked by the Senator from Alabama that to-morrow at 4 o'clock the vote be taken on the Cuban resolution and all the amendments pending and all the amendments of which notice has been given, without further debate. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I wish to make no objection on my own account, but since the Senator from Alabama made the request a while ago I have been speaking to one or two Senators, among them the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], who said he might wish to say something in regard to the resolution; and there may be others. The only question in my mind is whether time enough will be afforded by the hour fixed to give the opportunity, which of course we want to give, to those Senators who desire to speak.

Mr. HALE. There are three good hours of to-day left.
Mr. GRAY. Has the Army appropriation bill been disposed of?
Mr. HALE. Yes.
Mr. GRAY. I did not know that.
Mr. HILL entered the Chamber.
Mr. GRAY. The Senator from New York can now speak for himself, as I see him in the Chamber.
Mr. HILL. Since I spoke to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] on the subject I find that I am liable to be called out of the city to-night, and I shall not ask for the resolution to go over on my account.
Mr. GRAY. I have no other objection to the agreement suggested by the Senator from Alabama.
Mr. HILL. I am content with whatever the Senator in charge of the resolution desires. I shall not ask a postponement.
Mr. HALE. Let me suggest to the Senator from Alabama that there may not be as much debate as he anticipates, and that he modify his proposition and say "an hour not later than 4 o'clock."
Mr. MORGAN. I prefer that the time for the vote should be fixed at 4 o'clock, because Senators want to be here to record their votes on the resolution. Other business can intervene, if there be sufficient time.
Mr. HILL. Let it be understood that the voting shall begin upon all the amendments that are then pending or that may be offered.
Mr. MORGAN. And all of which notice has been given.
Mr. GRAY. All offered up to 4 o'clock.
Mr. HILL. All those that shall be offered up to 4 o'clock.
Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to say that some time to-morrow I desire to make a few remarks in regard to the pending resolution, and, as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I should prefer to close the debate. Therefore I give notice that I shall probably occupy half an hour to-morrow.
Mr. MORGAN. It is entirely proper that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations should close the debate.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous consent asked?
Mr. LINDSAY. I suggest whether it would not be satisfactory to have a unanimous agreement to vote to-morrow, without fixing the exact time.
Mr. MORGAN. "To-morrow," legislatively speaking, might mean three or four days.
Mr. LINDSAY. I think there is no disposition to protract the debate nor to prevent a vote.
Mr. MORGAN. None at all.
Mr. LINDSAY. But it may be that some Senator who wants to be heard will be cut off by having the hour absolutely fixed at which the vote shall be taken.
Mr. MORGAN. It is improbable that such a thing will occur. I merely want the hour of 4 o'clock definitely fixed because Senators may be otherwise engaged, and a good many Senators have expressed a desire to record themselves on this resolution; but if anything of the kind indicated by the Senator from Kentucky should occur, while I am in charge of the resolution no Senator will be deprived of an opportunity to speak.
Mr. LINDSAY. That is all I desire.
Mr. BATE. As there are several amendments, I suggest to the Senator from Alabama that there should be some arrangement for their discussion under the five-minute rule.
Mr. MORGAN. No; I do not think it is necessary in this case.
Mr. FRYE. That is all right. Let us vote at 4 o'clock to-morrow.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the consent rule, as requested, that the Senate vote on the Cuban resolution and all amendments pending and those of which notice has been given to-morrow at 4 o'clock? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.
Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, when the Senate adjourned yesterday I was endeavoring to state the respective legal rights of the parties combatant in Cuba, as I understood them, and the effect of recognition. In the course of the afternoon the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] called my attention to the treaty entered into by this Government with Spain in 1795 and to its effect upon the commercial relations of the two countries. Since that time I have examined that convention with some care, and find in it three articles of much importance, viz, the fifteenth, the sixteenth, and the seventeenth. They are lengthy, and I shall not read them throughout.
Article 15 provides that it shall be lawful for the subjects and citizens of both countries to trade with belligerents, and with those who are enemies of both, without any opposition or disturbance except in matters contraband.
Article 16 enumerates the merchandise, etc., which shall be considered the subject of legitimate trade.
Article 17, which I take to be the particular article alluded to by the Senator from Alabama, provides as follows:

To the end that all manner of dissensions and quarrels may be avoided and prevented on one side and the other, it is agreed, that in case either of the parties hereto should be engaged in a war, the ships and vessels belonging to the subjects or people of the other party must be furnished with sea letters or passports, expressing the name, property, and bulk of the ship, as also the name and place of habitation of the master or commander of the said ship, that it may appear thereby that the ship really and truly belongs to the subjects of one of the parties, which passport shall be made out and granted according to the form annexed to this treaty. They shall likewise be recalled every year, that is, if the ship happens to return home within the space of a year.

The article then continues and provides the essentials to be contained in such passports, and it is provided that:

It is likewise agreed that such ships being laden are to be provided not only with passports as above mentioned, but also with certificates containing the several particulars of the cargo, the place whence the ship sailed, so that it may be known whether any forbidden or contraband goods be on board the same; which certificates shall be made out by the officers of the place whence the ship sailed in the accustomed form. And if anyone shall think it fit or advisable to express in the said certificates the person to whom the goods on board belong, he may freely do so. Without which requisites they may be sent to one of the ports of the other contracting party and adjudged by the competent tribunal, according to what is above set forth, that all the circumstances of this omission having been well examined, they shall be adjudged to be legal prizes, unless they shall give legal satisfaction of their property by testimony entirely equivalent.

Were this stipulation possible of enforcement it would amount to this: That if a vessel of the contracting parties possesses the passport provided for no further search or inquiry can be made, because the passport is made conclusive. However, I find upon investigation that the United States Supreme Court rendered a decision to the effect that this article is wholly nugatory, for the reason that the passports mentioned are referred to in the article as though the form for the same were annexed to or set forth in the treaty, but, in consequence of carelessness no doubt, the required form is not annexed.
The Supreme Court decision to which I allude, and which I shall not read, as it is lengthy, was written by Mr. Justice Story. It is entitled "The Amiable Isabella," 6 Wheaton, page 1. I read from the syllabus, which seems to be fully authorized by the opinion:

The seventeenth article of the Spanish treaty of 1795, so far as it purports to give any effect to passports, is imperfect and inoperative in consequence of the omission to annex the form of passport to the treaty.
Quære.—Whether, if the form had been annexed and the passport were obtained by fraud and upon false suggestions, it would have the conclusive effect attributed to it by the treaty?
Quære.—Whether sailing under enemy's convoy be a substantive cause of condemnation?
By the Spanish treaty of 1795 free ships make free goods; but the form of the passport by which the freedom of the ship was to have been conclusively established, never having been duly annexed to the treaty, the proprietary interest of the ship is to be proved according to the ordinary rules of the prize court, and if thus shown to be Spanish, will protect the cargo on board, to whomsoever the latter may belong.

Therefore, while it was no doubt within the contemplation of those who agreed to this treaty that a passport should be conclusive, and no further search be permitted, it seems that the liberal purpose entertained failed of accomplishment by reason of the clerical omission referred to. This is not of any grave importance, and I merely allude to it as a matter connected with the history of the treaty.
Mr. FRYE. Mr. President——
Mr. WHITE. I yield to the Senator from Maine.
Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask the Senator where passports for ships are provided for? Does the Senator know?
Mr. WHITE. In article 17 of this treaty.
Mr. FRYE. Is there any provision of our statutes, to which the Senator can refer, which provides for passports for ships?
Mr. WHITE. There may be, but if so I have not the provision in mind.
Mr. FRYE. The treaty in referring to passports makes no reference whatever as to whether it is a passport provided by general law, or whether it is a special passport.
Mr. WHITE. Yes; it says: "Which passport shall be made out and granted according to the form annexed to this treaty." Judge Story says that the Supreme Court can not make a treaty, and that as there is no form annexed to the treaty, and that as the treaty called for a certain form and no other, and as such form does not exist, the whole article must be held inoperative. If the Senator will read the argument by counsel and then the opinion by Judge Story, he will find an exhaustive and interesting discussion. I do not care to read it at this time.
Mr. FRYE. I simply asked the question for information, because the Committee on Commerce have reported a bill for the repeal of the section which provided in certain cases for passports for ships, and my own impression was that it was not the passport to which that treaty referred; and I wished to know whether it was or not.
Mr. WHITE. There is a note in the official edition of the treaty showing the peculiar situation of the case. It is as follows:

The form of passport referred to in this article is not annexed either to the original treaty signed by the negotiators, or to the copy bearing the ratification of the King of Spain, on file in the Department of State. See "The Amiable Isabella" (6 Wheaton's Reports, 1). It is remarkable, however, that to the Spanish version of the treaty, in volume 2, page 429, of "Coleccion de los Tratados de Paz," etc., published at Madrid in 1800, "de orden del Rey, en la imprenta real," there are annexed two forms in Spanish for passports; one for ships navigating European seas, the other for those navigating the American seas.

Mr. President, I stated during my argument yesterday that certain rights in reference to the purchase of arms were possessed by these insurgents in common with the rest of mankind, and that there was no law, and is none, and never has been, which prohibits a manufacturing company in the United States from selling arms to anyone who may come to purchase the same, and I referred to the several decisions, conclusive, as it seems to me, upon this proposition. I will add one or two more expressions of jurists on the subject.

During the Mexican war, the Maximilian difficulty, Mr. Speed, our Attorney-General, in an opinion to be found in 11 Opinions of the Attorneys-General, page 451, says:

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 23d of March, together with a copy of a letter from Mr. Romero, the minister of the Mexican Republic. Mr. Romero says that he has been informed that agents of the "usurper Maximilian" have purchased in New York 5,000 muskets, and that they are to be shipped to Vera Cruz, not "as private property, but for account of the said usurper." Mr. Romero asks that the shipment be not allowed. You ask my opinion, whether there is any law or regulation now in force prohibiting the exportation of arms for the account of any person, whatever be his political designation, real or assumed, or of any Government.

This question is fully answered in my opinion delivered to you on the 23d day of last December—

Referring to an opinion to be found on page 408 of the same book which is also relevant here.

The opinion of the 23d of December was given upon a complaint of Mr. Romero that General McDowell, commanding the military department of California, had prohibited the exportation of arms or munitions of war by the frontier into Mexico. That opinion is to the effect that General McDowell's order was unlawful.

I can perceive no difference in principle between that case and this. So far as neutrals are concerned, belligerent parties are equals.

I know of no law—

He continues—and here is the pertinent proposition—

or regulation which forbids any person or government, whether the political designation be real or assumed, from purchasing arms from citizens of the United States and shipping them at the risk of the purchaser, etc.

Mr. President, if an ordinary merchant vessel were to visit the city of New York, sent there by the insurgents and manned by a regular crew, a cargo of war supplies might be purchased and taken away, as was done in the case of Chile, without any infraction of any law of the United States. Such is the conclusion of the United States circuit court of appeals in the Itata case (56 Federal Reporter) already mentioned, and is the legitimate result of the other authorities which I have cited.

This principle has been referred to by many international law writers. I will furnish some references:

Vattel, Law of Nations, edition 1883, page 338; 2 Ferguson's Manual of International Law, sections 229, 230, and 263; Hall on International Law, third edition, pages 80, 612, 613; Wheaton's International Law, third edition (Boyd), pages 583, 595, and 653; 1 Opinions Attorneys-General (Lee), 61; id. (Rush), 190; 7 id. (Cushing), 122; 11 id. (Speed), 408, 451; 2 Wharton's Criminal Law, section 1903; 3 Wharton's International Law Digest, section 391, and numerous precedents there given; Twiss's Law of Nations, 296, cited 11 American and English Encyclopedia of Law, 478; Kluber Droit des Gens., section 288, cited 11 American and English Encyclopedia of Law, page 478; The Santissima Trinidad, 7 Wheaton, 283; The Florida (a Cuban insurgency case), 4 Ben., 452; View of Secretary Evarts, 3 Wharton's International Law, 515; Pickering, Secretary of State, 1 American State Papers, page 649; Hamilton, Secretary of Treasury, 1 American State Papers, page 141; The Carondolet, 37 Federal Reporter, 800; 1 Kent's Commentaries, 142; The Bermuda, 3 Wallace, 551.

I mention these cases simply for the purpose of showing that while it will be pleasant for those of us who sympathize with the Cuban cause to learn that the President of the United States has found that the evidence justifies according belligerency to the Cubans, still that such proceeding upon the part of the Executive can not be followed by any direct substantial advantage in a legal sense. There may, as I have observed, be resulting encouragement, but there will also be greater determination on the other side of the issue.

I think that I have already said what must be plain to all, that while the right of trade exists within the limits defined, still the insurgent vessel or the ship containing contraband is subject to capture and confiscation by the enemy.

I know it has been said—and my remarks upon this branch of the subject would not be satisfactory even to myself if I did not allude to it—that the United States may treat unrecognized insurrectionists, such as these insurgents, as pirates, and there is at least one Federal decision so holding; but the important proposition is whether this Government would so treat revolutionists. Mr. Cleveland has made a record for himself on that subject, and I think the State Department has settled the matter conclusively. After the decision to which I have alluded, wherein it was held that an unrecognized insurgent might be treated as a pirate, Mr. Wharton wrote a very learned and very elaborate and extremely satisfactory article, which was published in 33 Albany Law Journal, commencing on page 125, and from which elaborate quotations are made in his Digest, denying the correctness of the court's view. He cites a message of President Cleveland sent to Congress on December 8, 1885, with reference to the Colombian difficulty. The President said:

Pending these occurrences a question of much importance was presented by decrees of the Colombian Government, proclaiming the closure of certain ports then in the hands of insurgents, and declaring vessels held by the revolutionists to be piratical and liable to capture by any power. To neither of these propositions could the United States assent. An effective closure of ports not in the possession of the Government, but held by hostile partisans, could not be recognized; neither could the vessels of insurgents against the legitimate sovereignty be deemed hostes humani generis within the precepts of international law, whatever might be the definition and penalty of their acts under the municipal law of the State against whose authority they were an revolt. The denial by this Government of the Colombian propositions did not, however, imply the admission of a belligerent status on the part of the insurgents.

It is also shown by Mr. Wharton that Mr. Bayard, during the same Administration, on April 9, 1885, wrote a very clear and strong letter addressed to Mr. Ricardo Becerra, who was the Colombian representative in this city, in which he announced the same doctrine. Not alone did that Administration so hold, but in 1883 Mr. Frelinghuysen prepared a communication, which can also be found in Mr. Wharton's article, in which he reached a similar result. His words are as follows:

The expedient of declaring a revolted national vessel to be a "pirate" has often been resorted to among the Spanish-American countries in times of civil tumult, and on late occasions in France. At the time of the Murcian rising in 1873, the insurgents at Cartagena seized the Spanish ironclads in harbor and cruised with them along the coast, committing hostilities. The Spanish Government proclaimed the vessels pirates and invited their capture by any nation. A German naval commander, then in the Mediterranean, did, in fact, capture one of the revolted ships and claimed it as a German prize, but his act was disavowed. The rule is simply that a "pirate" is the natural enemy of all men, to be repressed by any and wherever found, while a revolted vessel is the enemy only of the power against which it acts. While it may be outlawed, so far as the outlawing State is concerned, no foreign State is bound to respect or execute such outlawry to the extent of treating the vessel as a public enemy of mankind. Treason is not piracy, and the attitude of foreign Governments toward the offender may be negative merely so far as demanded by a proper observance of the principle of neutrality.

Mr. Wharton was deeply interested in the subject. He obtained the opinions of Calvo and other eminent publicists, all of which are fully noted in the publication just mentioned.

So, even if the Cubans were possessed of vessels and had any status upon the ocean, there would be no danger that they would be treated by this Government as pirates, and hence their legal condition is no worse now, as far as the laws of the United States are concerned, than it would be if their belligerency was recognized. All the neutrality laws would then be enforceable, and our Government would no doubt act accordingly.

Mr. President, there are some resolutions before this body with reference to the independence of Cuba. I desire to say at this point that it is a subject of regret that Cuba is not really independent. But that she is not independent is to me palpable. We have before us resolutions affirming belligerency, and now I learn we are also asked to resolve that Cuba is independent. These propositions do not seem to be very harmonious. The latter certainly can not in any event be properly adopted. It is settled, I think, by all authorities upon the subject that the independence of no people can be recognized by this or any other civilized nation until the disturbances, the real, vital disturbances, are practically closed, not entirely, it is true, but the case of the parent country must be desperate before an acknowledgment of independence is allowable. Under prevailing conditions a recognition of the independence of Cuba would be contrary not only to the precedents, but certainly would be in defiance of fact.

Mr. President, during the war of the rebellion we engaged in a very extensive diplomatic correspondence with France, Spain, and England; and anyone who will peruse the communications which passed between Mr. Adams and Earl Russell, and contrast the doctrines there laid down with some that I have heard announced here, will come to the conclusion that we are receding from our former position. While we undoubtedly did take an extreme stand then, we have never adopted any plan or theory which will permit the recognition of the independence of the Cuban people in their present situation.

The Senator from Alabama has very properly observed—and his remark was a conclusive answer to these resolutions—that the power to recognize the independence of a State is vested wholly in the Executive. That being the case, we will not, I hope, be so inconsistent as to adopt any resolution declaring that Cuba is independent. Our efforts should be confined now to expressions of sympathy and opinion, and these should be tendered in the hope that a friendly and satisfactory conclusion will be negotiated looking to Cuba's freedom. Independence is the final consummation desired. But that condition does not now obtain, and if it shall be otherwise the Executive alone can officially proclaim it.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from California allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. VEST. Without in the slighest degree controverting the Senator's statement in regard to what has been the practice of the United States in recognizing a people struggling for independence, is it not a question exclusively with every nation to pass upon the fact whether a rebellion, as it is termed, is in a desperate condition; in other words, whether the mother country, Spain in this case, is able to suppress that insurrection, as they term it? Would we not be alone responsible to ourselves if we stated that we believed the President of the United States ought to recognize the independence of Cuba? Is there any tribunal, except the conscience of the American people, to which an appeal can be made in that case? And if I am correct—and I think I am—in that statement, then I should like to know from the Senator from California—for that is the practical question—whether he believes that Spain can suppress that insurrection and whether he does not believe that the cause of Spain to-day with a view to that end is desperate?

Mr. WHITE. I find no difficulty in answering the question of the Senator form Missouri. Of course we are responsible only to ourselves. Undoubtedly so. That must necessarily be the case. We are not responsible to Spain. We are answerable only to our consciences. Our adhesion to the precepts laid down by publicists in this matter and our compliance with our own oft-repeated precepts must be voluntary. We so act because we think it to be right. A rule of conduct with reference to international concerns laid down by anybody, by any nation outside of our own, is not literally binding upon us, but I imagine we do not set ourselves up here as absolutely independent of all principle. We are bound only because we are civilized to an observance of those regulations and practices which enlightenment has dictated. We can not, I think, repudiate the views of the great masters of jurisprudence who have always commanded the respect of the law-abiding.

Our obedience to these righteous requirements can not be enforced by legal writs; moral coercion will suffice.

The Senator from Missouri asks me whether I do not think that the cause of Spain is desperate. Mr. President, I do not know. I sincerely hope that the people of Cuba will be successful in establishing a government of their own choice, but I do not know whether they will or not. The information which I have upon the subject is of a character not satisfactory to my mind. The Senator may believe the situation as to Spain to be desperate, but when we find Spanish power surrounding this island, when we find her in possession, apparently secure, of the centers of population, when we find that not a single port, not a single avenue of trade is in the control of the insurgents, that they have not a ship upon the ocean, that they have no commercial or international representation, I am far from believing that a point has been reached to justify a recognition of independence.

Mr. VEST. If my friend will permit me, it seems to me manifestly unjust in the determination of that which is the vital question in this whole controversy, and all the balance is leather and prunella, to ignore the one fact to which he does not allude, and that is that these same people, the Cubans, without having a ship upon the ocean, without being in possession of a single important port, successfully resisted the Spanish power for ten long years, and then only laid down their arms upon certain conditions—one of which was the abolition of slavery in the island—which were immediately violated by the Spanish Government.

Now, if they could for ten years maintain themselves by force of arms against the Spanish dynasty without ships, without munitions of war except those that they manufactured themselves, why can they not now maintain the same sort of struggle until Spain is forced to admit, as she did before, that it is impossible to put down the insurrection? All those things must be considered together, and I submit to my friend the Senator from California that if we content ourselves with simply an expression of sympathy we had better drop this question, for it will be a miserable farce from end to end.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Missouri will recognize the fact that I have endeavored to show that the various resolutions which it is proposed to adopt will not have any substantial effect upon this struggle. I agree with him about that matter.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator from California propose to state that if we now, by the act of both Houses of Congress, request the President of the United States to recognize the independence of Cuba——

Mr. WHITE. I am not speaking of that resolution.

Mr. VEST. That is the resolution, and all the balance amount to nothing.

Mr. WHITE. The resolutions reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations are the matters to which I was addressing myself when I stated that the resolutions proposed to be adopted would not, in my opinion, have any substantial effect upon this struggle.

Mr. VEST. I agree with the Senator about that point.

Mr. WHITE. I attempted to illustrate it by showing the status of those people under a mere recognition of belligerency and their status as insurgents. Of course if we recognize their independence, and also that a war exists, which we would have to do, we would be compelled to maintain neutrality, and I do not know that they would derive a great deal of benefit from that. I have shown, I think, that Cuban rights as to trade would not then be materially different. Their independence might be acknowledged, and yet, if there is war, our neutrality laws would be in effect and would be of course enforced.

But, Mr. President, I have asserted, and I have no doubt the members of the Committee on Foreign Relations must have reached the same conclusion in view of the resolutions reported by that committee—the determination must have been made—that there is no precedent or policy justifying a recognition of independence at this time.

The Senator from Missouri reasons thus: He says that the Cubans maintained a war for ten years, which the Spaniards were unable to put down; that now, that they have carried on a struggle for one year or two years, they must be independent. I deny the conclusion. The premises do not warrant it at all. It is a matter concerning which no man can speak definitely without more information than the meager facts before us. To assert here by a resolution that the Cuban people have accomplished their independence when we know they have not accomplished it, when we know they are endeavoring to accomplish it, when we know they are making every effort to attain to that condition, when we know that it is an unrealized hope, would be to write ourselves down as anything but reasonable men.

Certainly a declaration of that kind would not have any satisfactory effect. It would be an announcement here in the form of a resolution of that which we should know is untrue. Some believe that Cubans are in a position to finally win. Personally I would rejoice to see them victorious, but to solemnly proclaim that they have already won is to do violence to the notorious fact that there is a bloody and fierce conflict in progress day by day in Cuba, maintained by the revolutionists against great odds.

Whatever substantial I can do within the limits of propriety and without violating rules established by this Republic, as well as by intelligent peoples everywhere I am ready to perform, but I do not propose to vote for a resolution which expresses that which is untrue merely because my sympathies and feelings are aroused. It is idle to read any authorities in answer to a proposition such as that stated by the Senator from Missouri, who seems to desire to establish a precedent in this case against all others. If everyone has been in error, it is, of course, well to make the departure. I have already attracted attention to the language of Mr. Seward in his letter to Mr. Adams, wherein he pointed out the weighty responsibility assumed in the recognition of the independence of a new state. The subject was fully considered by President Jackson in the case of Texas:

> Undoubtedly when Texas had achieved her independence no previous treaty could bind this country to regard it as a part of the Mexican territory. But it belonged to the Government, and not to individual citizens, to decide when that event had taken place. And that decision, according to the laws of nations, depended upon the question whether she had or had not a civil government in successful operation, capable of performing the duties and fulfilling the obligations of an independent power. It depended upon the state of the fact, and not upon the right which was in contest between the parties. And the President, in his message to the Senate of December 22, 1836, in relation to the conflict between Mexico and Texas, which was still pending, says: "All questions relative to the government of foreign nations, whether of the Old or the New World, have been treated by the United States as questions of fact only, and our predecessors have cautiously abstained from deciding upon them until the clearest evidence was in their possession, to enable them not only to decide correctly, but to shield their decision from every unworthy imputation."—Senate Journal of 1836, page 54.
> "The acknowledgment of a new state as independent and entitled to a place in the family of nations is at all times an act of great delicacy and responsibility, but more especially so when such a state has forcibly separated itself from another of which it formed an integral part, and which still claims dominion over it."
> And after speaking of the policy which our Government had always adopted on such occasions, and the duty of maintaining the established character of the United States for fair and impartial dealing, he proceeds to express his opinion against the acknowledgment of the independence of Texas at that time in the following words:
> "It is true, with regard to Texas, the civil authority of Mexico has been expelled, its invading army defeated, the Chief of the Republic himself captured, and all present power to control the newly organized Government of Texas annihilated within its confines. But, on the other hand, there is in appearance at least, an immense disparity of physical force on the side of Mexico. The Mexican Republic, under another Executive, is rallying its forces under a new leader, and menacing a fresh invasion to recover its lost dominion. Upon the issue of this threatened invasion the independence of Texas may be considered as suspended and, were there nothing peculiar in the relative situation of the United States and Texas, our acknowledgment of its independence at such a crisis would scarcely be regarded as consistent with that prudent reserve with which we have heretofore held ourselves bound to treat all similar questions."

The right of the President to determine this subject was never denied, notwithstanding the anxiety of our people to acknowledge Texan independence.

Mr. Dana says (Dana's Wheaton, page 45, note) that the attempt to invade Texas was abandoned by Mexico before the United States acknowledged her independence. Similar policy was pursued regarding the South American Republics. The United States acted first, but not for many years "after long recognized belligerency and the practically unobstructed exercise by them of sovereign powers. Spain, separated by an ocean, had abandoned actual efforts for their reduction and only clung to a nominal right." (Dana's Wheaton, page 43, note.)

Mr. Adams wrote to Mr. Monroe in 1816 (1 Wharton's Digest, section 70):

> There is a stage in such (revolutionary) contests when the party struggling for independence has, as I conceive, a right to demand its acknowledgment by neutral parties, and when the acknowledgment may be granted without departure from the obligations of neutrality. It is the stage when the independence is established as matter of fact, so as to leave the chance of the opposite party to recover their dominion utterly desperate. * * * But the justice of a cause, however it may enlist individual feelings in its favor, is not sufficient to justify third parties in siding with it. The fact and the right combined can alone authorize a neutral to acknowledge a new and disputed sovereignty.

We there acted in accordance with the fact. We recognized a condition of things which was patent to the world, plain, unmistakable; but not until we were sure of our position.

Now, there may be a mode by which we may actually accomplish the freedom of Cuba. If the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is correct that the announcement of belligerency means a declaration of war, that, perhaps, will settle the affair. We shall then possibly have enough on our hands. We have not been warlike in any new case during the last few days, but the future is promising enough. Why not wait until we complete the disbursement of the $87,000,000 recommended to be devoted to coast defenses?

I shall be guided in what I do and how I vote by my conception of duty, experiencing at the same time none but the kindest sentiments toward Cuba; but I will not be a party to the new departure favored by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], when in my judgment such conduct would be wholly unprovoked and unwarranted.

A concurrent resolution, by whomsoever offered or whatever it may contain, is nothing more than an expression of sympathy. As stated by the Senator from Missouri, it will not, and as I have attempted to show by its own force it can not, directly accomplish anything for Cuba. Nor would a recognition of independence be of material value. However, I am opposed to taking that step for the ample reasons which I have stated.

Congress has not hesitated upon other occasions to express an opinion as to Executive action, and may do so here. The sentiments thus uttered will be carefully and respectfully considered.

I have no doubt that the Administration is solicitous for Cuban independence. I believe that when the circumstances warrant it decisive action will be taken. But the emphatic sympathy of Congress may hasten not only Executive action, but may, if properly done, have important indirect effect. But a declaration that there is independence would be considered everywhere as emotional and unfounded.

I prefer the resolution which I have suggested to any pending before the Senate. Some one has stated that in that resolution the Monroe doctrine is sought to be restricted. I think it is extended rather than curtailed. The words to which reference has been thus made are the following:

> While the United States have not interfered and will not, unless their vital interests so demand, interfere with existing colonies and dependencies of any European Government on this hemisphere, nevertheless our people have never disguised and do not now conceal their sympathy for all those who struggle patriotically, as do the Cubans now in revolt, to exercise, maintain, and preserve the right of self-government.

The phraseology criticised is that with reference to the noninterference of the United States. Mr. Monroe's doctrine was: "With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere." The proposition favored by me is that we shall not interfere unless our vital interests so demand. Hence my suggestion rather broadens the Monroe doctrine as announced by its author.

A Senator who has pressed with much force the pending independence resolution said that we might as well abandon the Monroe doctrine if we do not recognize Cuba; but if that doctrine has any application to Cuba at all it would seem that under it we must keep our hands off, because, as I have already said, Mr. Monroe's words are, "With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere." To this declaration we have very lately given our unqualified support.

In conclusion I reiterate that I shall support the resolution proposed by myself, or something similar, as a sincere expression of justified regard and hope. I shall not vote for a recognition of the independence of Cuba, first, because I do not believe that it is our function, without Executive participation, to recognize either the belligerency or independence of any nation; secondly, because I do not think that independence has been achieved within the rules mentioned or at all, and I am unwilling to declare that a certain condition exists when I know to the contrary.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have not the slightest idea of detaining the Senate by any elaborate argument or remarks upon this question. I had not expected to speak at all. I can not, however, resist stating that if the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] is correct as to his legal propositions, and I think he is so far as concerns the rights of belligerents or the effect of the recognition of belligerent rights, our action here will amount to nothing. If he is correct in regard to what should be done as to recognizing the independence of a country at war with another and attempting to assert its independence, then until the whole result has been achieved by that country itself we are powerless in the premises. That, sir, it seems to me, is a most astonishing proposition. We must wait, according to the Senator from California, until all vestige of Spanish power has been swept by force of arms from the Island of Cuba before we can, without violating international law, recognize the independence of that struggling people.

Mr. President, if that be the doctrine of international law where would be the Government of the United States to-day and the people in the United States? Instead of assembling here as Senators from sovereign States under the Constitution of a free country, this would be another dominion parliament like that of Canada, and the United States of America would simply be an appanage of the British Throne. If France had acted upon the doctrine announced by the Senator from California and waited until our fathers had achieved their own independence, the result would have been far different and we to-day would be English subjects instead of free citizens of a free country.

France recognized the independence of the United States and then went farther than any other country has ever gone in behalf of another, except for purposes of self-interest. She sent her armies and her fleets here, and placed upon the people of the United States a debt of undying gratitude. When I heard the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], our President pro tempore, read the wonderful Farewell Address of the Father of his Country last Saturday I was struck with the argument which Washington felt himself called upon to make in defense of his proclamation of neutrality in 1793.

In all the life of that most remarkable man, the greatest in all respects the world has ever produced, there is no episode more startling or interesting than the history of his issuing that proclamation in 1793 which declared that the people of the United States would remain neutral in the struggle between France and the combined armies of Europe. France with a disinterestedness which, I say, has put a debt of undying gratitude upon us and our children, had sent her armies and fleets to help us in a struggle with the throne of England. When the continental armies combined against France and when the soldiers of France had marched across the Continent fighting the world in arms, with their flags upon which was emblazoned "Death to tyrants and liberty to all," Washington refused to give one dollar or to send one man to assist our former allies, although England headed the combination against republican France.

Washington was right, and his greatness was never so demonstrated as when he stood against popular clamor in the United States and declared that we could never with safety depart from the great doctrine of absolute neutrality in the affairs and wars of Europe.

It is a singular fact, sir, that while to-day we almost deify Washington, while he is now and will always, so long as a single colony of Americans can be found, be "First in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen," at the time when he issued that proclamation with the assistance of Jefferson, a mob gathered around his private residence, then the Executive Mansion, and personal violence was absolutely threatened to the President of the United States and the savior of the Republic. That he stood against that clamor is a tribute to his memory greater than can be paid by the most fervid eloquence.

Mr. President, I do not agree with the views of the Senator from California as to the recognition of the independence of a foreign country or a foreign people struggling for their rights to self-government. If the doctrine be correct that all vestige of military power on the part of the mother country or the country that seeks to put down the insurrection must be swept away before we can act, then our action is simply brutum fulmen and amounts to nothing. The people themselves have already struck the blow that made them free, and we can only accept results and say that the fiat of the god of battles has been put upon their endeavor to assert the right to govern themselves. If we as the great Republic of the world mean to stand by these people who are imitating us and endeavoring to make a government for themselves like that of this country, we must help them in their hour of need, and if we do not go so far as to do it by arms, which is not advocated by anybody in this Chamber or out of it, we can at least do so by stating to the world that we believe the attempt of the monarchy of Spain to suppress this insurrection, as they term it, this endeavor to form a republic upon the Island of Cuba, is absolutely hopeless and desperate, as I believe under God it is to-day. There will never come the hour when Spain can reassert her dominion over the Island of Cuba. It is impossible that she should do so, and I speak from the great teachings of history and experience.

Sir, the course of Spain upon this continent is marked with blood. There was a time when the Spanish dominion extended almost from the southern limits of the United States to the farthest and southernmost point in South America. No American can ever forget those burning pages of Prescott that describe the conquest of Mexico and the conquest of Peru, when the Spaniards, with the lust for gold and the lust for blood, marked their terrible pathway across the countries lying south of us. Of all those vast dominions won by blood, won through torture and fire, there remains to this toothless old wolf the single Island of Cuba. And Spain to-day, like the old Giant in that wonderful picture of Bunyan, almost helpless, sits at the door of the dark cave of despotism and grins with impotent rage at the procession of splendid Republics that march on in the progress toward civilization and liberty.

Mr. President, that wolf can never retain this single cub. Never can Spain hold the Island of Cuba within sight of the Republic of the United States, but five hours away from us, after she has lost all the South American provinces, after she has been unable to hold one foot of soil in all the wide area of the southern half of this continent.

Mr. President, this is no new question, because it has been at our doors as Cuba is geographically at our doors to-day. It has been before us in the years that are past. My friend from Texas handed me some months ago a singular paper taken from one of the letters of Mr. Jefferson. It sounds to-day almost like prophecy, and I will ask the Secretary to read it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

Napoleon will certainly give his consent without difficulty to our receiving the Floridas, and with some difficulty possibly Cuba.

* * * * * * *

That he would give us the Floridas to withhold intercourse with the residue of those colonies can not be doubted. But that is no price; because they are ours in the first moment of the first war; and until a war they are of no particular necessity to us. But, although with difficulty, he will consent to our receiving Cuba into our Union, to prevent our aid to Mexico and the other provinces. That would be a price, and I would immediately erect a column on the southernmost limit of Cuba, and inscribe on it a ne plus ultra as to us in that direction. We should then have only to include the north in our confederacy, which would be of course in the first war, and we should have such an empire for liberty as she has never surveyed since the creation; and I am persuaded no constitution was ever before so well calculated as ours for extensive empire and self-government. As the Mentor went away before this change, and will leave France probably while it is still a secret in that hemisphere, I presume the expediency of pursuing her with a swift-sailing dispatch was considered. It will be objected to our receiving Cuba, that no limit can then be drawn to our future acquisitions. Cuba can be defended by us without a navy, and this develops the principle which ought to limit our views. Nothing should ever be accepted which would require a navy to defend it. (Volume V, page 445. Letter to the President, April 27, 1809.)

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. I ask whether he does not gather from that extract from Mr. Jefferson's letter that his desire was that Cuba should be acquired by the United States, as Florida was afterwards acquired, by purchase or by friendly negotiation?

Mr. VEST. There is no doubt of that.

Mr. GRAY. Then, what other mode is there of acquiring Cuba or of creating an independency by the United States except by going to war ourselves with Spain in order to insure that status of independency which can not now be recognized as a matter of fact?

Mr. VEST. The question of the Senator from Delaware assumes what I do not believe to be true, and that is, that the Cubans can not achieve their independence for themselves.

Mr. GRAY. I have not assumed that.

Mr. VEST. The Senator puts to me the question, how can we obtain Cuba except by force of arms, going there ourselves and assisting the Cubans?

Mr. GRAY. I was asking about the Senator's interpretation of Mr. Jefferson's letter.

Mr. VEST. I have no doubt Mr. Jefferson meant we should obtain——

Mr. GRAY. I believe Cuba can achieve her own independence, but whether she has done so or not is a matter of fact.

Mr. VEST. The question, I repeat, and I can not make it too emphatic from my standpoint, is not whether Cuba has achieved her independence. The question is, can Spain conquer Cuba? Can Spain continue to hold it as a province? I deny it. I say that the ten long years of successful resistance by the Cubans when they finally entered into a treaty virtually with the mother country which was not kept shows that Cuba to-day has the power and will maintain successful resistance.

Mr. President, this thing a year ago was an émeute, as the French call it. A mere handful of men called brigands upon the Eastern coast commenced it and they were hung, butchered as pirates, and denounced as hostes humani generis. What to-day do we find on that island? Every Cuban is a patriot. They have given up home, they have given up their families, they have given up all except the hope of liberty. Do you tell me that such a people can be conquered? The Spaniards may exterminate them, but they will never, never make them again unwilling subjects to the Spanish throne.

Mr. LINDSAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri, with his consent, what proportion, if any, of the people of Cuba are in sympathy with Spain in her attempt to suppress this revolution.

Mr. VEST. None from my information, and I have read from the Spanish press, for the Cubans have no press. From the Spanish press, under the espionage of the Spanish authorities, it can be proven that every Cuban is in sympathy with the patriotic endeavor to achieve independence and self-government upon that island. No instance can be found in which a people combined and confederated and unanimous as they are, a million and a half of people, have ever been subjugated except by extermination. Why, sir, what American boy does not recollect that burning oration of Henry Clay, the great orator of the West, when he spoke for Greece in 1824 and when he predicted that so long as Thermopylæ and Marathon were there no Greek would lay down his arms before the Turkish power?

We are told now that these are negroes, mulattoes, Indians who are fighting for independence. So much the more cause why we should sympathize with them and say God help them in their dire extremity. Liberty lives with the poor and oppressed, not with the wealthy and powerful. It throbs in the breast of the caged bird, and has gone with martyrs to the stake and kissed their burning lips as the spirit winged its flight to God. Liberty can not be extinguished when a people are unanimous in defense of the rights which God has given them. If these people, ignorant and poor, struggling against this despotism, have imitated us, why should we content ourselves with the poor expression of sympathy with their cause?

Mr. President, it is a mere farce for us to do anything else than declare before the world that we believe the cause of the Spaniard is hopeless in the Island of Cuba. Each Senator must answer that for himself. I deny and I repudiate the doctrine that all vestige of Spanish power shall be eliminated from Cuba before we can recognize the independence of that people.

Mr. President, reverting again to that wonderful letter of Jefferson, it has been said in criticism that in 1809, when Mr. Jefferson wrote it, he was simply writing in the interest of extending the slave power by annexing Cuba to the South. My answer is that never in one hour or minute of his life did Mr. Jefferson want to extend the area of slavery. Of all the men in this country who opposed slavery, Thomas Jefferson was the foremost. When he was 23 years old and went, a beardless boy, into the house of burgesses in Virginia as a delegate from his native county of Albemarle, his first measure was a bill for the gradual removal of slavery from the soil of Virginia, and although a slaveholder all his life by inheritance, the last act of his trembling and dying hand was to emancipate his slaves and cause their removal to the Northwest Territory, which he had made free soil for all time to come.

Mr. Jefferson, it will be seen in that letter, wanted Cuba annexed peaceably by purchase as the Floridas were purchased from Spain. He did not seek to conquer the country and wrest it away from the Spanish power. But it will be observed that nowhere does he cherish the idea that this country can hold any colony, any province, any mere appanage to its sovereign power. Every particle of our territory must be either a Territory or a State, a sovereign State, because our Constitution contemplates no other relation between the people and the National Government than as citizens of Territories, incipient States, and of States themselves.

I admit—but it is not necessary to discuss it here—that the ultimate and logical result of independence in Cuba would be that it would become a part of the United States. While I resisted on the Hawaiian question the project which was brought here to annex Hawaii to the United States, I did it upon the ground that it would necessitate an immense naval force, which Mr. Jefferson, in that letter, says is to be avoided and deprecated, and he laid down as the criterion for the acquisition of territory outside of our compact area whether it would require a naval force to maintain and keep it as an integral portion of the Union. He states, and I believe it to be true, that no navy would be necessary to hold Cuba as a State, or part of a State, within the American confederacy. If that be so, it is simply a question as to the fitness of the population of that island to become citizens of the United States and take upon themselves the responsibility of citizenship. That, however, is an ulterior question.

We, Mr. President, are confronted now with one overwhelming, overruling, absolute, and determinate question in this debate: Shall we, the great exemplar of republican institutions throughout the world, declare that in our opinion the people of Cuba are able to maintain their independence and have achieved it? Are we to wait until that island is desolated by fire and sword? Are we, a Christian and God-fearing people, to stand silent and dumb while the Spanish governor, called a general, declares that he intends to pen up the people of Cuba and butcher them into subjection to the Spanish throne? Sir, if we do it, God will curse us. If we do this thing and stand here until a desert has been made of that splendid island, you may be certain that the time will come when there will be retribution upon us as a people, because we have not been true to the task assigned us by Providence, because we have not cherished the legacy of self-government as bequeathed to us by our fathers. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, if the independence of Cuba could be achieved by eloquence it has been achieved this afternoon by the burning words that have fallen from the lips of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. No one could have heard him without sympathizing with the feelings with which his heart was throbbing and without giving response, favorable response, to every aspiration that he has uttered for the liberty of that unhappy island.

But, Mr. President, I fail to see the point of his criticism of the position taken by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE]. The issue between them is whether it is competent for the Congress of the United States to recognize the independence of a people struggling against a parent country. Certainly, it seems to me, the Senator from California has shown by overwhelming argument and by the citation of abundant precedents that that recognition is an Executive function, belonging not to the two Houses of Congress, but belonging where by the scheme of our Constitution it has been placed, in the responsible hands of the President and his advisers.

Mr. VEST. Will my friend permit me? I neglected, and I apologize for it, to state what I believed in regard to the powers of Congress and of the Chief Executive. I agree with the Senator from Delaware. I am not able to agree with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] that the two Houses of Congress can either declare war or give belligerent rights by their own action. The Constitution says that—

> Every order, resolution, or vote to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States.

And I think that absolutely precludes us from taking final and determinate action in the premises. Let me ask the Senator from Delaware what prevents us as representatives of the people of the United States from passing a resolution, concurrent or joint, asking the President to recognize the independence of Cuba?

Mr. GRAY. Nothing, Mr. President.

Mr. VEST. That is all I ask, and that is all I want.

Mr. GRAY. I will come to that point in a moment, in the very few words with which I shall occupy the attention of the Senate. The question now raised by the Senator from Missouri is whether we shall pass some such resolution as that proposed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, or the substitute for that offered by the Senator from California, or whether we shall recognize or attempt to advise the recognition of an independency without regard to the facts upon which that independency can be determined. Recognition of the independence of a people is the recognition of a fact. Is that people independent or no? I said day before yesterday, and I say again, that the Congress of the United States is disabled to a large degree from ascertaining that fact, while the Executive is armed with all the facilities and all the means by which accurate information may be gained and upon which that determination can be made. To use a favorite phrase of the Senator from Missouri, it would be "leather and prunella" for us to declare as a fact that which does not exist as a fact. It would be futile for us to declare that Cuba is independent when we all know that she is struggling to make that a fact, and that she has not yet been successful in that endeavor.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Delaware permit me to ask him whether the cause of the American colonies was not more desperate than that of Cuba to-day, when France recognized our independence?

Mr. GRAY. I think so.

Mr. VEST. France then did it.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, when France recognized our independence she sent over her armies and her fleet and declared war against the power that was seeking to retain us in vassalage. So that brings us just to the question which I wish to put to the Senator from Missouri, whether his contention is, whereas there can be no recognition of a fact which does not exist, that we are to create the fact by declaring war against Spain.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Delaware is at fault in regard to his facts as to contemporaneous events. France first recognized the independence of the colonies, but not for some time afterwards did she send us assistance in the way of men and fleets. But, more than that, let me ask the Senator what does he say of the recognition of the independence of the colonies by Holland and Belgium? They did not send armies here; they did not send fleets here, but yet they materially assisted the people of the United States by saying to the world, "We believe that the cause of England is hopeless and that the colonies to-day are virtually free." Let me say to the Senator from Delaware, if he will permit me one word more, that in war, as in political struggles, expression of belief in the success of a cause oftentimes brings about that success.

Mr. GRAY. That is true, Mr. President; but we are not at war with Spain.

Mr. VEST. Spain is at war with Cuba.

Mr. GRAY. And if we were at war with Spain for a cause so great and holy as the independence of a people struggling with the unanimity of that people for independence, then the expression of that belief would be one that ought to be made, and which would go far to give courage to those who were engaged in that war. But what I want to do is to confine the Senator from Missouri to the issue between himself and the Senator from California or between himself and the Committee on Foreign Relations, who reported the resolution. If we are to recognize a fact irrespective of the evidence in support of that fact, then we must seek to create and to insure what we wish shall actually be accomplished, and that can only be done by the exercise of the war-making power of the Government of the United States.

Now, Mr. President, the Government of the United States in its past history has always been conservative, prudent, and careful of its neutral obligations. So warlike a President as Andrew Jackson, when speaking in his message to Congress in regard to the struggle in Texas, a territory contiguous to our own, where the struggle for freedom was being carried on largely by American citizens, creating on that account a relation of intimate concern to the people of the United States as exceptional in its character as that which exists between us and the Island of Cuba, used the following language in speaking of the duty of the Government:

> The acknowledgment of a new state as independent and entitled to a place in the family of nations is at all times an act of great delicacy and responsibility, but more especially so when such state has forcibly separated itself from another of which it had formed an integral part and which still claims dominion over it. A premature recognition under these circumstances, if not looked upon as justifiable cause of war, is always liable to be regarded as a proof of an unfriendly spirit to one of the contending parties.

Further on, and coming down to the particular matter which he had in hand, he says:

> In the contest between Spain and the revolted colonies we stood aloof and waited not only until the ability of the new states to protect themselves was fully established but until the danger of their being again subjugated had entirely passed away. Then, and not until then, were they recognized. Such was our course in regard to Mexico herself. The same policy was observed in all the disputes growing out of the separation into distinct governments of those Spanish American States who began or carried on the contest with the parent country united under one form of government.

Mr. HARRIS. From what does the Senator read?

Mr. GRAY. I am reading from the message of President Jackson to the Congress of the United States December 21, 1836. He proceeds:

> We acknowledged the separate independence of New Granada, of Venezeula, and of Ecuador only after their independent existence was not longer a subject of dispute or was actually acquiesced in by those with whom they had been previously united.

Now, Mr. President, if we are to regard the traditions of our national policy and the precedents which great Chief Executives of this country have, with the approval of the American people, made for us in this matter, we can not attempt to recognize as a fact that which does not rest upon indubitable evidence.

The only alternative is to seek, as I said before, to create the fact. If it is not already un fait accompli, then we can make it so, I admit, by declaring war against Spain, and with arms in our hands taking possession of the Island of Cuba and holding it for its own people. But that is not the question before the Senate. There is no resolution so far introduced, either from the committee or by anyone upon this floor, looking to an act so extreme as that. The resolution reported from the committee is an expression of opinion in regard to belligerency. The amendment offered by the Senator from California is an expression of sympathy and of hope that the struggles for independence by the people of Cuba may be crowned with success.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] has submitted a resolution.

Mr. GRAY. I overlooked that, and I have it not before me at this time. At all events, those are the resolutions and those are the questions which have been debated here for the last three or four days by the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from California and myself.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Deleware a question. What is there to prohibit this Government, by proper act of Congress, whether it be in form of a joint or concurrent resolution, from declaring the acknowledgment of the existence of the Cuban Republic, and would not that be a recognition of the independency of that Republic, although as a matter of fact it may not have yet succeeded in repelling the power that assails it? In other words, I understand the Senator to take the position that the rebels there, so to speak, must have established their independence as a matter of fact before we are at liberty to recognize the independence of their Government.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, the recognition of a matter of fact implies that a fact exists, of course, and that fact must exist upon evidence that is convincing to the judgment of those who are asked to make that recognition. That recognition, as admitted by the Senator from Missouri, in the partition of powers that our Constitution makes between the departments of Government, rests with the Executive. I am asking the Senator from Missouri whether he means that we are to declare war in order to make sure that fact exists; that is all.

Mr. ALLEN. But what I want to impress upon the mind of the Senator from Delaware is the thought that there is nothing in international law which prohibits us from recognizing the existence of the Cuban Republic as a legal sovereignty, notwithstanding it may not have established its complete independence of the Spanish Throne, and when we pass a resolution here recognizing that fact we have within the sense of international law recognized the independence of that Republic, although there may be battles to be fought afterwards.

Mr. GRAY. It seems to me, with all due deference to the better judgment of the Senator from Nebraska, that the debate of the last few days has been entirely lost upon him, because the very matters that have been mooted here and discussed so ably by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] have been in what department of the Government power under the Constitution exists to make a recognition of that kind.

Mr. ALLEN. Of course——

Mr. GRAY. One moment. It has been, I think and submit, conclusively shown that the Executive, under that provision of the Constitution which enables him to receive ministers of foreign States, has the sole power to recognize the existence of the Republic of Cuba or a state of independency of the Government for which the patriots in arms there now are struggling.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator from Delaware will permit me, that argument was not lost upon me at all. I simply do not believe it; that is all. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRAY. I hope we shall hear from the Senator. I do not want to argue the case with him now, because it has been argued for three or four days; but I merely rose to call the attention of the Senate to the alternative presented to us by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. I can not add anything to what has been said by the Senator from California.

Mr. ALLEN. I simply want to put myself in a proper light; that is all. I listened to the argument of the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from California upon this subject. I believe the power to recognize the independence of Cuba comes within the power to declare war and conclude peace, which by our Constitution is committed to Congress.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, the Senate would have reason to find fault with me if I attempted to rehearse the arguments which antagonize the proposition of the Senator from Nebraska, and it has been admitted by the Senator from Alabama, it has been contended most ably by the Senator from California, and admitted by the Senator from Missouri that the power under the Constitution to recognize independency rests with the Executive alone. So that I shall not attempt to pursue that argument further.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to what the resolution offered as an amendment by the Senator from California actually proposes. It is as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate contemplates with solicitude and profound regret the sufferings and destruction accompanying the civil conflict now in progress in Cuba. While the United States have not interfered and will not, unless their vital interests so demand, interfere with existing colonies and dependencies of any European Government on this hemisphere, nevertheless our people have never disguised and do not now conceal their sympathy for all those who struggle patriotically, as do the Cubans now in revolt, to exercise, maintain, and preserve the right of self-government. Nor can we ignore our exceptional and close relations to Cuba by reason of geographical proximity and our consequent grave interest in all questions affecting the control or well-being of that island. We trust that the executive department, to whose investigation and care our diplomatic relations have been committed, will, at as early a date as the facts will warrant, recognize the belligerency of those who are maintaining themselves in Cuba in armed opposition to Spain, and that the influence and offices of the United States may be prudently, peacefully, and effectively exerted to the end that Cuba may be enabled to establish a permanent government of her own choice.

That is as far as the Congress of the United States has ever gone in regard to the struggles of a people for an independent government—further than they went in the case of the revolted colonies of South America, further than they went in the case of Mexico, further than they have gone with Hungary or Greece, with whom the Government and the people of the United States so cordially and heartily sympathized during the pendency of their struggles.

Mr. GEORGE. I will ask the Senator in what case have we ever gone so far?

Mr. GRAY. I say none that I know of.

Now, sir, the proposition is here that we shall take this step and express our opinion and sympathy in language stronger than we have ever adopted before under like circumstances, and leave to the future its own development, and the only alternative for this course, as I have attempted to point out to the Senate and the Senator from Missouri, is that we should declare war in order that we should make certain the success of those who are now struggling for self-government in that unhappy island.

Mr. LINDSAY obtained the floor.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator from Kentucky will permit me, I will yield the floor to him in a second.

Mr. LINDSAY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Delaware, I will not say has taken care, but I will say respectfully has failed to answer my question whether Holland and Belgium had not recognized the independence of the then colonies, now the United States, without sending fleets or arms here to assist. His proposition, as I understand it now, is that if, while there is a vestige of Spanish power in Cuba, we recognize the independence of the Cuban people we must make that declaration good by force of arms. I deny it.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] asks me, or asks the Senate, where we have ever gone so far as the declaration contained in the resolution offered by the Senator from California. We went as far in the case of every one of the Spanish colonies now Republics; we went as far, or Mr. Clay at least attempted to make this country go as far, in the case of Greece; and we expressed our sympathy for Hungary, as we have always expressed it.

But when the Senator from Delaware takes the resolution offered by the Senator from California and tells us that it is enough, I reply to it with the unanswerable argument of the Senator from California himself, that that declaration of belligerent rights amounts to nothing. He has spoken to us this evening ably and as a lawyer, and has proved to my satisfaction that the granting of belligerent rights does not give one iota of additional right to the people of Cuba. He has read here the opinion of the Attorney-General, Mr. Speed, that, without any recognition of belligerent rights, the Cubans had the right to come here and buy arms, put them on merchant vessels, and run the chance of their being apprehended and taken from those vessels on the ocean. What is this except an expression of sympathy, if the Senator from California is right in his legal argument this afternoon? It costs us nothing to say that we hope that the people of Cuba will succeed. I do not propose to go to war with Spain, and I apprehend no war; but I want to say what I believe to be the truth—that the cause of Spain in Cuba is absolutely hopeless.

The Senator from California himself declared that the test was whether the cause of the mother country, as he expressed it, was desperate, not whether hostilities had absolutely ceased, not whether the attempted oppressor had been driven from the soil of the province or the state, but whether that cause was desperate. I believe as honestly as I believe I am a Senator of the United States that the Spanish cause to-day in Cuba is absolutely hopeless, and I am willing to put myself on record by my vote in that direction.

Mr. FRYE. I want to ask the Senator one question before he sits down.

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. Touching the declaration that the recognition of belligerent rights is of no advantage, does not the Senator admit that, if we recognize belligerent rights, the United States would then immediately be relieved from doing police duty for Spain; that the United States would not have been compelled to have seized that vessel the other day with arms for Cuba?

Mr. VEST. No, Mr. President, I do not understand the law to be that. All that was elaborately discussed, and as no other man, in my opinion, who has ever lived could have discussed it, by Thomas Jefferson in his correspondence with Genet and the British minister when the neutrality proclamation of 1793 was issued. The Senator from Maine will remember, as will other Senators, doubtless, that the point at issue then between the United States and Genet, the minister plenipotentiary from the French Republic to this country, was whether Genet could purchase ships and fit out armed expeditions and privateers against English commerce from American ports. He attempted to send out a privateer from New York, and Mr. Jefferson stopped him. Then ensued that wonderful diplomatic correspondence which, so long as the English language is read, will remain without an equal—the correspondence between Jefferson and Genet—which resulted at last in Genet's recall by the French Republic and in his leaving our country.

I do not understand the law to be as my friend from Maine states it. Even if belligerent rights were accorded, Cuba would have no right to fit out armed vessels in the United States. The Cubans could come here and buy arms and buy supplies, which are contrabands of war, but they would run the chance of having them taken away from them outside of the 3-mile limit on the ocean.

Mr. FRYE. But would they run the chance of having them taken away by United States ships of war?

Mr. VEST. No; of course not. I do not understand now that we are going on the ocean and hunting vessels belonging to the Cubans.

Mr. FRYE. That is exactly what was done the day before yesterday.

Mr. VEST. As I understand that case, a vessel was fitted out as a Cuban armed vessel, with munitions and men, and undertook to sail in broad daylight from the port of New York.

Mr. GRAY. As she had a right to do.

Mr. VEST. I do not propose to take that issue, but that is not the contention which is made in international law.

Mr. LODGE. Do I understand the Senator from Missouri to say that we did not send ships out to hunt the seas?

Mr. VEST. I do not understand that.

Mr. LODGE. We sent out two cruisers, the Raleigh and the Montgomery, to hunt the Hawkins. Both were sent out to intercept that vessel while she was on the high seas.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator think that was proper?

Mr. LODGE. No; I do not.

Mr. VEST. Neither do I. My construction of that law is that after a vessel has passed the 3-mile limit, and if this vessel the other day had got outside the 3-mile limit, outside of the jurisdiction of the United States upon the high seas, it was then a question whether Spain could have apprehended her or not. We had nothing further to do with it. That I understand to be the real doctrine as to belligerent rights. They can come here, as the Senator from California proved this afternoon, and buy anywhere in market overt munitions of war or anything contraband, but whether they can get them out of this country or not and whether the Spaniards would seize them upon the high seas is another question.

Mr. GRAY. Let me interrupt the Senator right there. As I understand the difference that would be made by a declaration of belligerency on the part of the United States, it is this: I do not agree with the opinion expressed by the Senator from California, or expressed by some authorities from which he read, that the position of the patriots of Cuba, the revolutionists in Cuba, is any better under the present condition of things than it would be with the status of belligerency accorded to them. I believe that, as things now are, there is a general duty resting upon the United States as a neutral nation toward the Kingdom of Spain, with whom she is at peace, to repress every attempt commenced upon the soil of the United States to interfere with the internal peace and condition of things within the dominion of Spain, but that if belligerency is accorded and the neutrality of the United States declared, then we rest upon the obligation created by our municipal law, sometimes called the neutrality laws.

By these laws any military expedition fitted out within the United States to make war upon the dominions of a government or a sovereign with whom we are at peace is denounced and made an offense against the United States; but only such an expedition, to wit, a military expedition, organized as such. Those laws, I contend—and it has been so judicially determined—do not interfere and were not intended to interfere with the ordinary commercial transactions which the citizens of the United States may engage in, whether in the shipment of arms or the shipment of condensed milk to the Island of Cuba, and that a citizen of the United States has as much right in the open daylight to consign a cargo of arms on board of a vessel destined for Cuba as he has to load upon that vessel a cargo of plowshares. Of course, in all such cases he would take the risk of capture by Spain.

Mr. VEST. I think so.

Mr. GRAY. And that any number of men who undertake, or who wish, from any cause whatever, to go to Cuba, though they avow when they embark on the vessel and sail from our shores that they intend to take part in the revolution there existing, have a right, so far as our municipal or neutrality laws are concerned, to do so. They exercise their freedom as citizens of this country, and anything that they do in carrying out that intent is not obnoxious to our so-called neutrality laws. It has been determined within the last six months by more than two courts of the United States that nothing but the fitting out of a military expedition in the United States or the sending of armed ships against the territory or dominion of the Sovereign of Spain comes within the denunciation of those neutrality laws.

This is right, and it would be intolerable to a free people if it were otherwise.

Mr. FRYE. That is as I understand it.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Kentucky, who, I understand, has the floor, allow me a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] is entitled to the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. LINDSAY. I do.

Mr. WHITE. In addition to what has been said by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] to sections 5281 to 5291, inclusive, if my memory is correct, of the Revised Statutes, called the neutrality laws, which of course apply, as every one concedes, to the recognition of belligerency. It is a question whether they have any application to insurgents, but if they have not there is no law to punish them. It was that fact to which President Harrison adverted in his message of 1891 when he suggested an amendment to the neutrality laws to accord with that which is called the admiralty and shipping law of Great Britain.

I desire to make a correction of what I suppose to be an inadvertent statement of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] when he first took the floor; perhaps he has corrected himself. He stated that my position was that there should not be a single Spanish soldier or the least vestige of Spanish force upon the Island of Cuba before independence is recognized. What I did say, as the Senator correctly stated in his last remarks, was that the cause should be utterly desperate. I quoted in that regard from a letter from Mr. Adams, the Secretary of State, to Mr. Monroe, October 24, 1816. I will merely read five or six lines of it.

> There is a stage in such (revolutionary) contests when the party struggling for independence has, as I conceive, a right to demand its acknowledgment by neutral parties, and when the acknowledgment may be granted without departure from the obligations of neutrality. It is the stage when the independence is established as matter of fact, so as to leave the chance of the opposite party to recover their dominion utterly desperate.

The concluding sentence is as follows:

> But the justice of a cause, however it may enlist individual feelings in its favor, is not sufficient to justify third parties in siding with it. The fact and the right combined can alone authorize a neutral to acknowledge a new and disputed sovereignty.

Therefore I say that the fact and the right must be combined. As stated by the Senator from Missouri, that fact must be solved by whoever has the disposition of the matter, and he states that he believes that Cuba has virtually accomplished her independence. I do not, I regret to say, and therefore do not care to be bound by that statement.

I desire to say with reference to the other subject referred to by the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Maine, that the decision of the circuit court of appeals of the ninth circuit in the case of The United States vs. The Steamship Itata, reported in 56 Federal Reporter, contains a full discussion of this entire subject, and settles the law with reference to the right of parties, whether insurgents or belligerents, to come to this country, buy arms in open market, and take them home with them, if they can escape the enemy on the high seas.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me?

Mr. LINDSAY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we have spent two hours very profitably on this subject this afternoon, and as the matter is to be disposed of at 4 o'clock to-morrow and there will be then two hours for debate which will give the Senator from Kentucky and others an opportunity to speak, I move that the Senate adjourn, unless some Senator desires to speak this evening.

Mr. LODGE. I merely desire to have the resolutions read which I send to the desk, so that they may be printed in the RECORD and that we may have them under consideration.

I will say that they are resolutions reported by the House Committee on Foreign Relations on this topic and I should like to have them in a form that all the members of the Senate can see them to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That, in the opinion of Congress, a state of public war exists in Cuba, the parties to which are entitled to belligerent rights, and the United States should observe a strict neutrality between the belligerents.

Resolved, That Congress deplores the destruction of life and property caused by the war now waging in that island, and believing that the only permanent solution of the contest equally in the interest of Spain, the people of Cuba, and other nations would be in the establishment of a government by the choice of the people of Cuba, it is the sense of Congress that the Government of the United States should use its good offices and friendly influence to that end.

Resolved, That the United States has not intervened in struggles between any European Governments and their colonies on this continent; but from the very close relations between the people of the United States and those of Cuba in consequence of its proximity and the extent of the commerce between the two people, the present war is entailing such losses upon the people of the United States that Congress is of opinion that the Government of the United States should be prepared to protect the legitimate interests of our people, by intervention if necessary.

Resolved, That Congress pledges its support to the President in carrying out the foregoing resolutions.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the resolutions may be printed in the form of an amendment to the pending resolution, in case anyone should desire to offer them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 28, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 27, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY M. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—VAN HORN VS. TARSNEY.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] is recognized.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twenty minutes left.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, the majority of the committee insist that owing to the fraudulent transactions proven and admitted in the Second Ward and in the fifty-second precinct of the Ninth Ward the votes and returns there should be cast out entirely. In support of that position a section of law from McCrary on Elections was read on yesterday. I desire to read a further section in support of the position of the majority. I read from McCrary on Elections, third edition, section 548:

> In Littlefield vs. Green, Bright's Election Cases, 493, it appeared that in a precinct containing only about 450 voters there was actually cast, counted, and returned, 2,820 ballots. It also appeared that a large number of names on the poll list were recorded in alphabetical order. It was a clear case of fraud, and the only question considered was whether there was any proof upon which the poll could be purged and the legal votes separated from the illegal. The court refused to allow any of the votes cast at the precinct in question to be counted, on the ground that there was no sufficient proof of any legal vote whatever. It was shown that there were over 400 persons in the precinct who were entitled to vote, but there was no proof outside of the return that any of these voted, or as to how they voted. The court properly rejected the return as utterly unreliable and unworthy of credit. The return was therefore not admissible in evidence for any purpose, and it was the duty of respondent—> to have shown the legal vote by other evidence. There was no proof upon which the court could purge the return and separate the good votes from the bad, and therefore the whole poll was necessarily thrown out.
> The contestee in this case—

This authority is in support of our contention. It holds that where an alphabetical list of names has been voted and that fact is shown by the returns and by the evidence, as in the case at bar here in the House, that poll and that return must be thrown out. In this case that evidence has been adduced in behalf of the contestant; that evidence is admitted by the contestee; that evidence is admitted by the report of the minority. No man will stand upon the floor of this House and say that that is not the evidence in the record, and it is by the record that this case must be adjudged one way or another, as it is upon the record that the report presented to this House by the committee is based. This being the state of facts, the vote of that ward and of that precinct must be thrown out.

But it is insisted by the gentlemen of the minority, and it is insisted by other gentlemen on this floor, that legal voters ought not to be disfranchised; that it is contrary to the spirit and genius of our institutions that legal voters should be disfranchised. That is true. There is no question about it. But when the vote at a given precinct has been shown to be corrupt, when the return has been shown to be corrupt, only one thing can be done under the law, and that is to throw out the return and throw out the poll. It follows that all these votes in this precinct must go out. But gentlemen say that is disfranchising somebody. But, Mr. Speaker, is there a bit of evidence within the confines of this record which shows that there were legal voters in that precinct? The contestee had ample opportunity to prove that fact if it exists. Did he? Was there a bit of evidence adduced by the contestee which showed that there was a legal voter in that precinct? If so, why did not the contestee call that legal voter before the tribunal which took the testimony, ask him as to his being a legal voter, and whether he voted at that election and how he voted? That was the proper thing to do. The law is, as I have read it, that—

> The return was therefore not admissible in evidence for any purpose, and it was the duty of respondent to have shown the legal vote by other evidence.

The evidence closed on the part of the contestee on March 25, 1895. It is all in the record. The fraud is there, and it is admitted by contestee; he has admitted it on the floor of this House. But in answer to that the contestee says this:

> I did not have an opportunity to see the poll book because it was not attached as an exhibit to this deposition until in May, at the time of the closing of the taking of my evidence.

The contestee further asserts that by the law of Missouri he could not get at the ballots, and that therefore the best evidence was denied to him. That is his position. Let us meet it manfully. If he is right, let us say so, and if he is wrong let the House know it.

Now, the record in this case discloses the fact that immediately following the election a committee of citizens was appointed by the people of Kansas City irrespective of party, a committee consisting of two Republicans, one Democrat and one Populist; that that committee, appointed by a nonpartisan meeting of citizens and aided by a fund raised by those same citizens for the purpose of pursuing and investigating this illegal voting—a committee appointed long before this contest originated and, as I have said, by a nonpartisan body of citizens—the record shows that that committee at once went to the recorder of voters, got the poll books which the contestee says were denied to him until May, 1895, and used them in that investigation.

The record discloses the fact that within eight days after the election these committeemen got the certified poll book which the contestee says he could not get, went from house to house making a critical examination, and found over 1,102 fraudulent votes in the Second Ward alone. The contestee says he knew nothing of it. The record shows that other men knew of it within three or four days after the election. The record further shows that he knew it, because the evidence discloses the fact that there was a certified copy presented to the notary on March 25, and it was made a part of this record. So that portion of the gentleman's excuse falls to the ground, because it is not based upon the evidence; and, gentlemen, you must try this case on the evidence, not upon anything outside.

Now, as to the next contention he says: "By the law of Missouri I was not permitted to see the ballots, and therefore the best evidence was denied me." What good are those ballots, gentlemen? They are fraudulent; they are corrupt. No man as a lawyer in this House could for a moment recognize such fraudulent ballots and give any credence to them whatever. The evidence which the gentleman says is the best evidence is no evidence at all. It would be worthless to any committee or any member of this House when searched or probed to the bottom.

Now, how do we know that that which the gentleman says is the best evidence was denied him? Is there any evidence of it in this record? On March 25 the record closes so far as the contestant is concerned. On May 10—forty-five days after the evidence had closed on the part of the contestant—the contestee proceeded to take evidence. There is not a word in the record which shows that the contestee in this case ever sought to get at the ballots. He never made application; he never went to the contestant and said: "Let us agree to investigate these ballots." Nowhere did he ever make effort to do it. But he waits forty-five days before he does anything, and then he takes evidence upon other points and does not touch the very vital question in this report and this discussion.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Let me ask the gentleman, did it not appear by the statement of Mr. Small, one of Mr. Van Horn's attorneys, before our committee, that when the snap tally was taken, he, as Mr. Van Horn's attorney, went to the clerk, made affidavit, and gave warning that the parties were liable to indictment for having examined the ballots and made known how the vote for Congress was cast in the fifth precinct?

Mr. PRINCE. That may be; but it is no justification of the contestee's action or of his inaction in this case.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Does the gentleman claim that in spite of that Mr. Tarsney should have made an effort to get at the ballots?

Mr. PRINCE. I do say that Mr. Tarsney, the contestee in this case, should have made application to the proper parties through the proper channels; and if what he sought had been denied him, then he could stand up before this House and say: "Within the time prescribed by the law I tried to do what I could. I knocked at the door and asked for the ballots, and I was refused; and now, as I tried within my time to do this thing, I ask this Congress to stretch out its long arm, which it has power to stretch over every inch of American soil, and to go into the ballot boxes, as it has the right to do under its broad power as judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members."

Mr. MAGUIRE. Now, will the gentleman, after a full investigation of this matter, tell us what was the proper source to which Mr. Tarsney should have applied in order to get at those ballots and put them in evidence?

Mr. PRINCE. There were various ways that he could have applied.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Will the gentleman name them?

Mr. PRINCE. He could have subpœnaed before the committee this man Owsley, who had the vote, and asked him to recount the ballots so far as the Congressional question was concerned. That could have been done when they were taking evidence before a United States officer in the person of the notary.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Is it the gentleman's opinion as a lawyer that Mr. Owsley could or would have done that?

Mr. PRINCE. I say that if Mr. Owsley had refused to do it, then the contestee would have had some standing in this House, because he would have been able to say: "I have exhausted all the means within my power, and my efforts have been fruitless."

Mr. MAGUIRE. But if Mr. Owsley could not do legally what the gentleman suggests he might have been called on to do, will the gentleman insist that Mr. Tarsney should have performed an idle act in demanding that Mr. Owsley do it? Is it the gentleman's opinion as a lawyer that Mr. Owsley could lawfully have submitted those ballots to any commissioner or other officer that Mr. Tarsney might have selected?

Mr. PRINCE. I believe—it is only my opinion; it has never been tested in this case—that if Mr. Owsley had been subpœnaed before that officer, that if Mr. Tarsney had gone before the officer clothed with authority to conduct the investigation, and had subpœnaed before him this officer of the election, that officer would have disclosed the ballots so far as the result of the election was concerned.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Is it your opinion as a lawyer that he could have done it under the laws of Missouri?

Mr. PRINCE. I think he could have done it in a case of this kind. But admitting, if you please, for the sake of the argument, that he could not have done it under the law and that he refused to do it—I will go as far as the gentleman can ask—I will take the very position that he does—that the officer could not do it, that the law would not permit him to do it, if that satisfies the gentleman. What follows? Then in that event he would have done all that he could have done in support of his own case. But he would have done more. He would have endeavored to secure what you claim to be the very best evidence, but which we claim to be fraudulent and corrupt, and he would then be relegated, if he failed to secure that evidence, to the next best evidence, which is the voter himself. The ballots were fraudulent, and he did not try to get them. He did not call the voter to purge the poll, and did not exercise in his own behalf that diligence he should have exercised in the protection of what he claims to be his own rights in the matter.

Gentlemen say that this Committee on Elections wanted to disfranchise the voters in Missouri. It is not so. We are following the law, and the law says that it is the duty of the respondent to show the legal vote cast for him by other testimony. Then contestee in this case is the only one who is disfranchising the voters in the Second Ward, if anyone may be said to be engaged in that operation.

Mr. HYDE. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a question?

Mr. PRINCE. Certainly.

Mr. HYDE. What does the record show with reference to the question as to whether any honest ballots were cast in this ward or not?

Mr. PRINCE. It does not show that there was an honest ballot cast; there is not a bit of evidence introduced either pro or con that has any bearing upon that fact.

Mr. HYDE. Does the record show whether they were or not?

Mr. PRINCE. It simply shows this, that there were 1,624 cast in a ward that never before in any election, State or national, or even in the municipal elections, had voted over 800, and that the largest vote of 800 was in the city election, where you and I know that men go all around the streets with a fine-tooth comb and bring up people from all quarters for the purpose of electing the mayor. When that process is gone through with, when the fine-tooth comb is run through the voting precincts, only 800 have been found, and yet in a contest in which the voters did not, as you know and as I know, take so much interest as they do in local matters, we have a total vote of 1,624.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PRINCE. Certainly.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Your contention is, as I understand it, that the contestee has been guilty of negligence——

Mr. PRINCE. I do so contend.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. And has not exhausted his remedy?

Mr. PRINCE. I do so contend, and I desire to read the following extract from an authority on the subject which I think will be a sufficient answer to the inquiry.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. It is an important question.

Mr. PRINCE. Undoubtedly, and I propose to answer it fully. I read now from Paine on the Laws of Elections, section 1009:

Under that provision of the Constitution which makes the House of Representatives the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members, the House may adjudicate the question of right to a seat in either of the four following cases: (1) In the case of a contest between a contestant and a returned member of the House, instituted in accordance with the provisions of Title II, chapter 8, of the Revised Statutes; (2) in the case of a protest by an elector of the district concerned; (3) in the case of a protest by any other person, and (4) on the motion of a member of the House. The proceedings in the first of these cases is, by Revised Statutes, made a proceeding inter partes—a suit or action in which the contestant is plaintiff and the returned Representative is defendant. The management of this suit or action is by law placed in the hands of the parties. They are not only permitted, but required, to frame and serve the pleadings which give form to the controversy. They are permitted and required to serve upon each other notices under which the depositions are taken. They may stipulate to take depositions without notice. In taking the depositions they may appear in person or by agent or attorney. In a word, notwithstanding the controversy involves interest of a public nature, its form and fate are subjected, by the law, to the control of these parties. Their acts, omissions, diligence, laches, waivers, admissions, and stipulations may, under the law, always prove decisive of the contest. As between these parties, therefore, the contest provided for in the Revised Statutes is in the strictest sense a suit, an action, a litigated case. The allegations made in the pleadings filed by either party are binding on such party, because they are his own allegations made in a suit to which he is a party. The proofs taken according to law in the case are legally admissible as between the contestant and contestee, because taken in a suit to which they are parties, subjected to the right of examination and cross-examination. The stipulations of either party are binding upon him because he has made them. His laches conclude him, because incurred by him. In all these particulars the relations of the parties to the contest are analogous to those of parties to a suit at law or in equity.

Does that satisfy the gentleman with reference to this proceeding?

McCrary, section 417:

The House of Representatives of the United States will not grant to a sitting member whose seat is contested an extension of time in which to take testimony unless it appear that he has not by the use of great diligence been able to procure his testimony within the time allowed by the law. The reason for this rule is thus stated in the report of the Committee on Elections in the case of Giddings vs. Clark in the Forty-second Congress:

"It must be borne in mind that the party now asking an extension is a sitting member. He is now, and has been during a large part of the term, exercising the functions and receiving the emoluments of the office in question. In a litigation of this character the thing in controversy grows daily less, and does not, as in most ordinary lawsuits, remain intact to be recovered by the successful party in the end. In this particular case the extension asked for would be very nearly equivalent to a final decision of the case in favor of the sitting member upon the merits. We are now near the close of the second session of the Congress. If the parties are to be sent back to Texas to take further testimony, of course no further action can be taken until the opening of the third and last session, which is of but ninety days' duration, and would be necessarily far spent before a final decision could be reached. It does not follow from these considerations that a sitting member can in no case be allowed an extension after the time allowed by law for taking testimony expires; but your committee think it does follow that no such extension should ever be granted to a sitting member, unless it clearly appears that by the exercise of great diligence he has been unable to procure his testimony, and that he is able, if an extension be granted, to obtain such material evidence as will establish his right to the seat, or that by reason of the fault or misconduct of the contestant he has been unable to prepare his case."

I am reminded that my time is up. I ask this House to sustain the majority report of the committee because it is based upon the evidence in the case and is in accord with the law thereto.

I ask the House to sustain the majority report of the committee because in so doing it will put its seal of condemnation upon the alien and revolutionary methods employed at the election November 6, 1894, in Kansas City, Mo.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAILEY. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire to reach any agreement as to the time at which a vote shall be taken?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. No arrangement has been made, but I was expecting to make one at the conclusion of the gentleman's remarks. I am now concluding an arrangement which I hope to be able to report to the House in the course of a few moments. I understand gentlemen on the other side are willing to take an hour and a half as their time. I was about concluding an arrangement as to the time to be used on this side when the hammer fell.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, it remains for two of the minority of the committee to address the House, but appreciating the fact that it is desired and that it is desirable to reach a vote on this question this afternoon, and recognizing the fact that neither one of us could make a satisfactory argument within less than an hour and a half, I have concluded to say to my colleague [Mr. MAGUIRE] that I prefer that he should occupy the entire time which may be allotted to the minority of the committee. I myself, of course, feel an interest in the question and in the decision of it, but I am perfectly sure that my colleague, Judge MAGUIRE, can better present the question by occupying all the time than both of us could each occupying half of the time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from California——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Very well, then; with that understanding the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LONG] will take the floor for three-quarters of an hour.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Can we reach an agreement now as to the time for voting?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. With the understanding that gentlemen upon the other side will occupy an hour and a half, we can announce positively the time at which a vote shall be taken.

The SPEAKER. What time does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I think I may announce that the vote will be taken promptly at 5 o'clock.

Mr. BAILEY. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that that would give gentlemen on the other side three hours, against only an hour and a half for our side; and while making no point on that fact, yet it is a fact that gentlemen on the other side have already occupied more time than we have.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. But the gentleman will bear me out that on yesterday I was insisting that gentlemen on the other side should go in when there was fighting all along the line, but they declined to do so.

Mr. BAILEY. We think it was splendidly fought all along the line by the gentlemen who addressed the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman ought not to complain, then.

Mr. BAILEY. We do not complain. We are entirely willing that whatever may have been the inequality of the time heretofore occupied, that shall be passed. And as to the division to-day, I will suggest——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Then say half past 4. Will that be satisfactory?

Mr. BAILEY. At 4 o'clock?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. At half past 4.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that he agree to take two hours and a half for himself and the other gentlemen on that side who desire to address the House, and agree that Judge MAGUIRE shall be entitled to two hours.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I will only take an hour and a half. I think we ought to be able to vote at half past 4. I understand that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LONG], a member of the committee, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] of the committee, on the other side, desire to speak. Of course we do not desire to limit you as to how you shall appropriate your time. So we get an hour and a half the other side may have two hours and divide the time as they please. I think that ought to be enough.

Mr. BAILEY. I agree to that.

Mr. MAGUIRE. We will take an hour and a half, and we ought to be able to take a vote in four hours.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I think the gentleman ought to be satisfied with the hour and a half that they ask, and we are willing to take the vote at half past 4.

Mr. BAILEY. That is satisfactory.

Mr. MAGUIRE. That is satisfactory.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. We will be able to arrange as to the division of time on this side.

Mr. MAGUIRE. That is a matter for yourselves.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I am able to announce that debate will close and that a vote will be taken promptly at half past 4 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires the attention of the gentleman from Indiana. Under this arrangement, to whom is the floor to be yielded now?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The floor will be taken by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LONG], on behalf of the committee.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I am one of the majority of the committee that presented this report. I wish the indulgence of the House to explain and give the reasons why we reported as we did, why we present a resolution asking for the seating of Colonel Van Horn, and why we oppose the resolution of the minority to take additional testimony. With the exception of a few words from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE], who has just taken his seat, nothing has been said in regard to the question of the diligence of the contestee in this case. Remember that the testimony of the contestee and the contestant was closed when the record was presented to the committee. The contestee tried to show that he was elected. He took his evidence. He admits now that it fails to prove his election. He took it within the time allowed by law; and the question is, Shall the House give him additional time?

The committee has not followed any rule in this case different from the rule that has obtained in this House for years. If it is wrong, this House can adopt another. But we took the rule as we found it laid down, not by Republican Houses alone, but by Democratic Houses also, and the rule that has obtained in this body since 1811, when the case of Taliaferro vs. Hungerford was decided. The House declined to open up that case, notwithstanding the committee had reported a resolution in favor of opening it. I want to call your attention to the rule as announced in the Forty-second Congress, in the case of Giddings vs. Clark. The report was made by Judge McCrary, who has written a book on elections which is authority everywhere in the United States.

> It does not follow from these considerations that the sitting member can in no case be allowed an extension after the time allowed by law for taking testimony expires, but your committee think it does follow that no such extension should ever be granted to a sitting member unless it clearly appears that by the exercise of great diligence he has been unable to procure his testimony, and that he is able, if an extension be granted, to obtain such material evidence as will establish his right to the seat.

That is the rule laid down in the Forty-second Congress. Has it been followed since? I read from the case of Thobe vs. Carlisle, in the Fiftieth Congress, a case in a Democratic House. It ought to be good authority on the other side of this Chamber:

> In the opinion of your committee the laches of the contestant and his counsel has been such as to preclude him from asking further indulgence of the House.

Again—

> The case should not be reopened unless it appear to the House that on a new hearing the contestant would probably be able to procure evidence which would entitle him to his seat.

Who presented that report? The gentleman from Georgia, an ex-Speaker of this House, the present leader of the minority. He ought to be good authority in this House, because he follows the rule that has been observed for years on the authority approved by Judge McCrary in the Forty-second Congress. [Applause.] Before you censure your committee for refusing to open up this case, change the rule. Understand, however, that if you adopt this minority report you change the rule of this House, that has been followed by all parties for almost a century. What is it? That the sitting member, the one desiring to open up the case, must show that by great diligence he could not have obtained the testimony. What was the testimony he desired? The ballots in these four precincts. Did he apply to the custodian of the ballots? No. Did he take his evidence and try to secure a recount? No. Did he apply to any court and ask for an order compelling the custodian to produce the ballots? No. Not only that, but there is not a syllable of evidence in the whole record, taken by the contestee, as to the Second Ward; not a particle; not a line.

He comes into this House and says, "I did not know of this fraud." Right here in this record is a list of the voters. If you will look at it you will see that 600 of them voted in alphabetical order. The record contains the names of over a thousand fictitious voters in this ward. That evidence was taken in January and February, 1895, but the contestee did not take a particle of evidence to refute it. Gentlemen say that he could not have obtained this evidence if he had wanted to. I differ from them on that proposition. This House, under the Constitution, is the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members. Under that constitutional authority Congress has enacted a law providing how contests shall be carried on and the number of days each party shall be allowed for taking testimony; and I want to call attention to the provision of that law relative to the power of the officer taking the testimony (Revised Statutes):

> SEC. 123. The officer shall have power to require the production of papers, and on the refusal or neglect of any person to produce and deliver up any paper or papers in his possession pertaining to the election, or to produce and deliver up certified or sworn copies of the same in case they may be official papers, such person shall be liable to all the penalties prescribed in section 116. All papers thus produced and all certified or sworn copies of official papers shall be transmitted by the officer, with the testimony of the witnesses, to the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Do you mean to tell me that under that section of the Revised Statutes the officer taking the testimony could not have subpœnaed Owsley, could not have brought him before him and compelled the production of these ballots? If he could not have taken the ballots from the possession of the officer having charge of them, he could have taken copies of them. The evidence could have been taken and the contestee could have done all that within the time allowed by law. It is no new thing for officers to compel the production of ballots in election cases under the statute I have just read. The older members here have doubtless personal knowledge in regard to this. So, Mr. Speaker, I say that the laches of the contestee utterly precludes him now from being permitted to reopen this case. If you adopt the rule for which he contends, you reverse the policy of the House of Representatives for years. Not only do you do that, but you reverse the rule that has been adopted not only by this election committee but by the other two election committees of this House, for they also have been following the rule laid down by the House, and if you open this case you must open up other cases. One of these election committees, I am informed, declined to open up a case although the applicant was a member of the party that controls this House.

Mr. MCRAE. Does the gentleman think it extraordinary that the same rule should be applied to gentlemen who are not members of the controlling party that is applied to those belonging to the majority?

Mr. LONG. I think they should be treated all alike, and that is what we have done in this case. We have not adopted a rule for a man who belongs to the minority different from that which we apply to a member of the majority. We have proceeded according to the law and according to the rule laid down in this House for years.

Now, what else is necessary? Says Mr. CRISP in this report to which I have referred:

> It is necessary for the person desiring to open the case to show that he would probably be able to procure evidence which would entitle him to his seat.

That is necessary. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] says that in his opinion an investigation of this matter would show that Mr. Van Horn was elected. When the gentleman made that admission on the floor of this House he "gave away" his case. His position only amounted to this, that he believed that Van Horn was elected, but he made an earnest appeal to this House to permit the man who was not elected to continue here a few months longer.

But further, the evidence must be material. Recollect, gentlemen, that the minority do not seek to call the voters. They do not want to get behind or beyond the fraud. They want to get into it, that is all. They want to go to these ballot boxes, but not to the voters who cast the ballots. Look at their minority resolution and you will see that it does not ask for the calling of the voters. Why? On that proposition the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] said that we could not go so far as that; that the contestee was precluded from calling the voters, because he had had an opportunity to do that when he took his testimony. So they do not present that kind of a resolution. They are willing to go just as far as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] is willing to go and no further. But, is the evidence of these ballots material? What is the law on that point?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I did not hear the speech of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] from the beginning to the end. Do I understand you to say that he admitted without any qualification whatever that in the event of a recount of these ballots the result would not be changed so far as the election is concerned?

Mr. LONG. I understood that to be the gentleman's admission—that is, he stated that as his opinion.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, I suppose the gentleman from Wisconsin wants to know what we are still debating this case for? [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, I should like to know why, in view of that admission on the part of the minority, it is necessary to discuss this case further?

Mr. LONG. Well, it is a question of law that this House is now discussing, an abstract question of constitutional law. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Ohio was not present in the Constitutional Convention to see that the Constitution did not provide for the House of Representatives being the judge of the election, return, and qualifications of its own members, and consequently it contains that provision, although he thinks it wrong; but he holds certain opinions on abstract propositions of law that he wants this House to indorse. [Laughter.]

Now, to return to the ballots. Under what circumstances can you count the ballots? The law on that point is plain. Paine on Elections lays it down. I read from section 776:

When the return and certificate of election are invalid, and are set aside, the election will not be avoided, if the true result can be ascertained, independently of the defective record and return; and, to ascertain the result, the ballots cast for Representative, if properly preserved, will be recounted.

Before courts or legislative bodies can give weight to the results of recounts of ballots there must be absolute proof that the ballot boxes containing such ballots have been safely kept, and that the ballots are the identical ballots cast at the election; and when these facts are established, beyond all reasonable doubt, full force and effect will be given to the developments of the recount.

Under this rule can we examine these ballots? I believe there are a thousand ballots conceded to be fraudulent by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER], but how many the minority concede I do not know, for their report is somewhat indefinite on that point, and I hope the gentleman from California who follows me [Mr. MAGUIRE] will give us definite information as to the number of ballots that they concede to be fraudulent in the Second Ward.

Mr. MAGUIRE. The minority admit, upon the competent evidence in the record, that there were 600 fraudulent ballots put in the boxes in the Second Ward. We do not recognize as competent evidence of fraudulent voting the testimony of canvassers who simply testify that they went around and asked questions of other people who were not sworn, and got certain answers on which they based their calculation that there were 400 other fraudulent ballots there.

Mr. LONG. Does the gentleman seek to secure other evidence as to who are fraudulent voters, outside of the ballots?

Mr. MAGUIRE. We propose to accept the competent proof on that subject that is in the record; but we do not accept the unsworn evidence of people who told the canvassers throughout the city that the alleged voters did not reside at the places from which they were registered.

Mr. LONG. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] admits that there are probably a thousand in the ward. How many do you say?

Mr. MAGUIRE. We have not come to that.

Mr. LONG. It is absolutely necessary under the theory on which the minority want to open up this case that they decide, before they take this evidence, as to the number of illegal or fraudulent ballots in that ward—not only as to the number but as to the names of the fraudulent voters—because they do not want to take any more evidence on that proposition. If it were conceded that there were exactly a thousand or just 800 illegal ballots and that the remainder were the ballots of legal voters, I believe the proposition of the minority might receive some consideration. In other words, if 800 illegal voters came up to the polls in those three precincts which comprise the Second Ward and imposed on the judges and secured the admission of their ballots, and if the rest of the ballots were legal, then, if you found the names of those fraudulent voters, you could take their ballots from the box and count the remainder. The presumption would be that the officers of the election did their duty, that they followed the law, that they were honest, and that therefore the remainder of the ballots were legal. But when you show that fraud was committed by the election officers themselves, you then destroy the integrity of all their official acts and you can not presume that they acted honestly in any particular. That is the law. It is not that the fraud only goes so far as you may prove it; it goes to all their acts. In support of this position I want to call attention to the very clear and pertinent language used in the report in the case of Clayton vs. Breckinridge in the Fifty-first Congress, a report made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY]:

If the returns have been falsified by the election officers, it is a well-settled rule of law that they cease to have any prima facie effect, and each party can only be credited with such votes at the box in question as he may show by other evidence. This rule is one of long standing, and one of which contestee, as an old member of Congress, must have had notice. It works no hardship upon contestee which does not fall as heavily on the contestant. The contestant is required in the first instance to show the fraud in the return, and then must follow that up by proving his vote; or, in some instances, the proof of the fraud is connected with the proof of his vote.

Further along in the report the committee say:

Courts can not take the fraudulent statements of the election officers and analyze them, and select the true from the false. The whole stream is sullied by the impurity, and all that can be done is to reject the returns altogether and seek other sources of evidence.

That is the law; not only the law as adopted in this House for years and years, but the law as administered in the courts throughout the land. Suppose you go to those ballot boxes and take out a thousand of them—as the gentleman from Ohio would like to do—the thousand that represent nobody, that are fictitious ballots, not representing the act of any voter. Now, let us see about the 624 ballots that represent voters, men who voted there. Suppose you take the ballot that was found under the sidewalk. I call attention to page 476 of this record, where you will find the evidence of Mr. Olson, chairman of the Republican committee. He found a ballot under the sidewalk on the Saturday night following the election, in front of the polling place of the seventh precinct. It had the judges' initials on the back, and the voting number of the ballot was 372 and the registration number 21558.

Now, on the next page of the record you will find that Peter Green, a voter, a man living in the precinct and a qualified voter, says (the ballot being exhibited to him and he having looked at it), "That is my ballot; or I voted one just like it." When you turn over to the list of voters you find that Peter Green voted at that election and that his number was 372. Now, I ask the gentleman, what is there to be done about ballot No. 372? [Applause.] Are you going to count it? Here is the evidence of the man who voted it. The ballot was found under the sidewalk—not in the ballot box. But there is a ballot in there that represents it. There was a substitution.

Now, turn to page 577 of this record and look at the evidence about the ballot of William A. Clevenger. You will find that he is a voter; that he was registered; that he went to the polls at fifteen minutes past 5 o'clock in the evening; that he received a ballot; that they did not ask him his name; that he did not know the judges; that they did not ask him whether he was registered, but that they gave him a ballot; that he prepared it and handed it back to them, and that they did not ask any questions. He went away. They said he voted. Turning to the list of voters you find that he is recorded as having voted, and you will find that the number of his vote was 348. He cast it at fifteen minutes past 5 o'clock in the evening. There were 621 votes returned from that precinct. In other words, after he cast that ballot at fifteen minutes past 5 o'clock in the evening 273 voters must have cast their ballots. And the polls closed at 7 o'clock.

Are you going to count his ballot? What action would you take in reference to it if you did open the box? When you come to ballot No. 348 what would you do with it?

Turn to the testimony of Corum, found on page 668 of the record. He testified that he went in and was given a ballot, prepared it, and went up and handed it to a man to put into the box; but the man did not put it into the box, but another man took a ticket and put it into the box in its stead. You turn to the record and find the number of his ballot. Are you going to count that ballot? I ask the gentleman from Ohio or any other gentleman who seeks to open up the case in this way and wants to go into the ballot boxes alone, What are you going to do with such ballots as these? You will not find the identical ballots that were cast by the legal voters, because they were changed.

There is testimony of over a dozen men who declared that they were legal voters, but did not go to the polls at all, and yet their names are here. They appear upon the poll books as having voted and were duly returned by the judges. Are you going to count their ballots? Then my friend from Missouri [Mr. BURTON] showed how easy it would be to make changes in the office of the recorder of voters. Take one of the fraudulent alphabetical ballots put in for Tarsney—a straight Democratic ticket—mark off the name of Tarsney and write in the name of Van Horn on that fraudulent ballot. Then take a straight Republican ballot that was cast by some voter; scratch off the name of Van Horn and write in the name of Tarsney. The result would be precisely the same. You will have the same number of votes for each candidate in the total tabulation. But when you come to a recount and do not go further than the ballots themselves, then you throw out the fraudulent alphabetical ballot with Van Horn's name on it and count the legal ballot with Tarsney's name on it—and you could not do otherwise if you simply take the evidence of the ballots themselves. Is there any probability that such changes were made? I wish to call your attention to some evidence on that point. I have not time to go into the matter in detail, but will refer the House simply to the fact that there is evidence that changes were made in the office of the recorder of voters as to other candidates. Sloane testifies that changes were made. Now, take Miller's affidavit in this case and see what he says. This is on the question that the ballots have been safely kept and are in the same condition as when they were cast at the election. He says:

About a week or ten days after the election—

And I ask you to note the time—I hope the gentleman from Ohio will do so—

About a week or ten days after the election John May asked me if there were any unused ballots left over in the sixth precinct. I told him then that I thought there was. He told me to get them if I could. I went to the polling place and found some 200 or 300 unused ballots and took them and gave them to May. When I gave them to him he said he might need me in connection with these ballots; that he would let me know. In a few days I saw him again, and he said he did not need me, as my precinct, the sixth, was all right. He did not say what he wanted me to do, but as I am one of the judges who had put my initials on the ballots, I inferred he wanted me to put my initials on some of the ballots for the purpose of further fraud of some kind with the ballots in the recorder's office.

Now, my friend from Ohio, in the face of this evidence, wishes to open the boxes and take these ballots as evidence and go no further.

The reason why the majority of the Committee on Elections declined to reopen the case and look at the ballots, as proposed by the minority, is because they do not believe the evidence would be worthy of consideration or that the ballots have been properly preserved. There is also evidence that about the 5th of March, 1895, when the ballot box in the fifth precinct of the Second Ward was opened on a recount for a county office, that the ballot box was open and not sealed, as required by law, and the tickets in it were unstrung. Do you want us to take this kind of proof to establish the right of a member to a seat on this floor? Why, Mr. Speaker, it is the most preposterous proposition that was ever presented to the House of Representatives. I am sure if the House wants additional testimony on this question it will never direct us to go into these ballot boxes and no further.

This committee has been criticised upon this floor by a gentleman of age, experience, and reputed knowledge of the law [Mr. POWERS] because they do not go far enough. He said that they went right up to where the evidence was and did not go a step further. I do not see the gentleman in his seat this morning. The members of the committee are not of the age that he is. They have not had the experience in the law. The majority of them come from the West. They have been practicing law in their own way, but they have been reading the books and the record of this case. [Applause.] I ask the members of this House, in the face of this showing, on the evidence as to the kind of ballots that are in those boxes, whether you are going to censure us for not taking the step?

This committee has been criticised on this floor because they have done an injustice to Col. Van Horn in the fifty-second precinct. It is said that we have not given him votes enough. I want to tell you why we excluded the fifty-second precinct and did not subtract 170 votes from Tarsney and add 170 votes to Van Horn. Van Horn in his brief asked us to do that very thing. He asked us to make that addition and subtraction. The committee believed in treating both these gentlemen alike, and that the same rule of law should be applied to both.

The fraudulent acts were committed by the judges. If there was not any question as to the remainder of the ballots, we might have made the addition and subtraction, possibly, without doing any harm. But there was a question as to the rest of the ballots. I call your attention to Canney's testimony, on page 77. This was after they had abstracted 115 Republican ballots and put in 115 Democratic ballots, and after they had abstracted 55 additional Republican ballots and put in 55 additional Democratic ballots, making 170 in all. He was asked this question:

Q. Now, you may state whether any other ballots were substituted or abstracted that day that you know anything about.

A. Why, after the 55 were all fixed up and credited down the list, after being marked and numbered with the registration and voting numbers, they concluded that they would stop there and let everything go straight after that but Moses and Hansen after that got back there in some way and fixed up 25 more in the same way. These 25 ballots Moses wanted put in when we were opening the last box and Mullins spoke up and said, "The books won't stand it," and so these 25 ballots with—oh, it must have been 25 or 30 at least in the last box we opened—these 25 bogus ballots and the ballots that were in the box at the close of the poll were all put together and twisted up, and Martin took and threw them behind the last grain bin, and then Moses or Morrison said, "You * * * fool, what are you doing?" and he went back there and got these ballots and put them in his overcoat pocket that way, and I did not see them any more during the day, or what was left of the afternoon, rather.

You see they did not complete the count of the ballots. Twenty-five or thirty ballots were rolled up and taken away by them without completing the count.

Canney also says:

All that were left from the work in the afternoon were there, and Moses had some little slips in his hands and Bergman would get up and leave his place at the receiving table, and Morrison would set down there in Bergman's seat and copy the registration number off the books, and then during the day he did that occasionally and in that way got in a good many ballots.

This was outside of the 170 ballots. This is the reason, gentlemen, why we did not take 170 from Tarsney and add 170 to Van Horn, because the evidence showed that that was not the extent of the fraud. So, as a member of the majority of the committee that presented this report, which has been criticised by members on this side of the House, I say that under the evidence I believe we were justified in taking this position.

In the light of this evidence do you say that we should make this addition and subtraction? You might if you lived in the blue ethereal air of constitutional law in which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] alone exists, but ordinary, common, everyday lawyers like PRINCE, STRODE, JOHNSON, and myself, did not feel like taking such a course. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLER. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLER. Suppose there was no fraud outside of the fifty-second precinct, and you found the condition of facts you have described there existing, the contestee having a majority of 100 outside of this fifty-second precinct. What would you have done?

Mr. LONG. We would have thrown it out.

Mr. TAYLER. And elect the contestee, who was not legally elected?

Mr. LONG. We would have thrown it out, and if Van Horn wanted any votes from that precinct he would have had to prove his vote by other evidence, just as Mr. Tarsney will have to do it in the Second Ward if this House follows the law. [Applause.]

Mr. Van Horn is not entitled to any benefit or support in this House because he belongs to the party that is in the majority, but I say to the members of the majority, do not treat him unfairly because he happens to belong to your party. We do not need his vote here to pass a party measure. If we did, it would not be a good reason for seating him; but because we do not need his vote is not a good reason for keeping him out. [Applause.] The people of the Fifth Congressional district of Missouri are entitled to be represented upon this floor by the gentleman whom they elected at the polls, and it is our duty to seat him just as soon as we have examined the evidence and find that he is elected, and let us not postpone this case for two or three months for the purpose of discussing a legal proposition with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER].

One word more and I am through. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] will call your attention to the fact that if you admit Mr. Tarsney's claim and give him all that he asks it still shows that he is defeated. In other words, he utterly fails to show that if he procures this evidence it will establish the fact that he is entitled to the seat, which is a necessary requirement for reopening the case under the rule approved by the Fiftieth Congress in the report made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

This case is of great interest to the people of the Missouri Valley. It is presented to a House that is supposed to be in favor of honest and fair elections. It is presented to a House the majority party of which has a record in favor of fair and honest elections. They believe that this House will do justice. I believe it. Indorse your committee by adopting the resolution presented by the majority and declare that the people of the Fifth Congressional district of Missouri are entitled to be represented on this floor by their choice at the polls. [Loud applause.]

CUBA.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will assent to my interrupting the proceedings for a moment, I would like to make a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and to have the consent of the House that this report, with four resolutions in regard to Cuba, shall be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SULZER. Is there any objection to having the report read?

Mr. HITT. Not at all, if the gentleman desires it.

Mr. SULZER. I would like to have the report read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. HOPKINS]. Does the gentleman embody that as a part of his request—that the report be read?

Mr. HITT. That is desired by the gentleman from New York, and I assent to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked by the gentleman from Illinois that the report shall be presented and read at the present time. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. How long will it take to read it? How long is it?

Mr. HITT. One page.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. We have no objection whatever.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HITT, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, submitted the following report:

"The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred House resolutions Nos. 34, 47, 89, and 157, having fully considered the same and the numerous petitions relating to the same subject, report the following concurrent resolutions as a substitute for the several said resolutions, and recommend their adoption.

"Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the opinion of Congress a state of public war exists in Cuba, the parties to which are entitled to belligerent rights, and the United States should observe a strict neutrality between the belligerents.

"Resolved, That Congress deplores the destruction of life and property caused by the war now raging in that island, and believing that the only permanent solution of the contest equally in the interest of Spain, the people of Cuba, and other nations would be in the establishment of a government by the choice of the people of Cuba, it is the sense of Congress that the Government of the United States should use its good offices and friendly influence to that end.

"Resolved, That the United States has not intervened in struggles between any European Governments and their colonies on this continent; but from the very close relations between the people of the United States and those of Cuba in consequence of its proximity and the extent of the commerce between the two peoples, the present war is entailing such losses upon the people of the United States that Congress is of the opinion that the Government of the United States should be prepared to protect the legitimate interests of Americans by intervention if necessary."

The reading of the report was greeted with applause.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois when he purposes to call up his resolution.

Mr. HITT. There is another resolution.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, there is a fourth resolution, which I ask shall be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Resolved, That Congress pledges its support to the President in carrying out the foregoing resolutions."

[Applause.]

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that these resolutions be made the special order for next Tuesday morning immediately after the reading of the Journal. It is a very important matter, and in my judgment the people of this country expect their representatives to take some action upon it as speedily as possible.

Mr. MEREDITH. I ask unanimous consent to pass the resolutions right now. [Applause.]

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I do not desire to take the gentleman from Illinois off the floor; but time is running.

Mr. MEREDITH. It would not take two minutes.

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman will tell the House when he purposes to call up the resolution.

Mr. HITT. If the gentleman from Indiana will permit me to answer the inquiry, I will state I am instructed by the committee to obtain the earliest possible consideration in the House that the business and rules of the House will permit. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Regular order.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—VAN HORN VS. TARSNEY.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, the questions involved in this case, as it is now presented to the House, are few and simple, and they have been pretty thoroughly discussed. I will not attempt to deal in detail with the case, as if it had not already been thoroughly argued, but, presenting such arguments as seem to me not yet to have received full consideration, will endeavor to be very brief in dealing with questions that have been sufficiently argued. Indeed, so far as the case of Mr. Tarsney is concerned, nothing can be added to the splendid argument made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER], who, speaking as a representative of the majority party on the Committee on Elections, made a showing that it seems to me ought to cause that party to hesitate long before unseating the contestee, without at least endeavoring to get at the truth of the case by the means pointed out by that gentleman. That, however, is a matter for them, and the argument of the gentleman from Ohio directed to them especially must receive their consideration for what they may think it is worth.

I am pleased to note throughout this discussion the absence of partisanship such as commonly characterizes election contests. A desire on the part of the representatives of the majority party here to deal judicially with this question has been manifested, at least by those who have spoken, and it is gratifying. That is the true rule which ought to be applied to all contests. Election contests have been too often treated here, by both parties, as if a contest threw the election of Representative into the House, and left the members of the House free to elect whichever claimant they might regard as the best representative of the Congressional district in question. I am pleased to see the disposition on the part of the gentlemen of the majority party to repudiate that rule and to treat this contest as a judicial question. We are here not to select the man who represents our views, or who, in our opinion, would best represent the district. We are here merely to decide who was elected to the office by the legal voters.

Now, what are the issues in this case? They are made up by the several reports from the Committee on Elections. These reports show that it is impossible to ascertain from the record how the legal vote of the Fifth Congressional district of Missouri was cast. The majority of the committee, in order to support their conclusions, find it necessary to reject entirely from consideration the votes of a very large number of the citizens of that district who voted for Representative in Congress at the election held in 1894. The conclusion that Mr. Van Horn was elected and that Mr. Tarsney was not elected is reached only by entirely rejecting from consideration all of the votes legally cast by qualified electors in the fifth, sixth, seventh, and fifty-second precincts of Kansas City. There is a showing in the record, which we do not contest, which we have not from the beginning contested, and which Mr. Tarsney himself has never contested, that in the Second Ward, embracing the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts, at least 600 ballots were put into the ballot boxes fraudulently. They were put into the ballot boxes with apparent regularity and in manner conforming to the laws of Missouri. Upon every one of those fraudulent ballots the number identifying it with the voter or with the registered name upon which it was voted appears.

Each of such fraudulent ballots can now be found identified and segregated from the legal ballots. The question before the House, as it seems to me, with reference to the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts are these (I will speak of the fifty-second precinct later because a different line and a different character of evidence applies to that precinct): The frauds committed in the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts are clearly shown to have been committed in pursuance of a conspiracy which embraced those three precincts especially, and which had no relation to other precincts. Speaking first, then, of the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts, the question is, can the polls be purged of the fraudulent ballots that were thus put into the ballot boxes, not by voters, but by election officers fraudulently depositing them? In addition to the 600 ballots thus fraudulently put into the boxes, in pursuance of the conspiracy, it appears that in at least two of these precincts, during the day of election, certain additional ballots were fraudulently put into the boxes as the votes of absent electors. There is evidence which I think fairly shows that in these three precincts about 100 additional ballots were thus put into the boxes fraudulently during the day. And here, perhaps, I may as well deal with the question as to the other 300 alleged illegal voters whose ballots appear in the boxes.

It is claimed on the other side that over 1,000 fraudulent ballots appear from the evidence to have been deposited in those three boxes. I reject the evidence tending to show that 300, or about 300, of those ballots were fraudulent. It is not legal or competent evidence to establish the fact. I concede 100 in addition to the admitted 600. I think there were a little less than 100; approximately, however, that number is correct. I did not attempt to go through the evidence in absolute detail to determine exactly by what evidence the testimony of the canvassers to whom reference has been made in this debate was corroborated. I reject the testimony of the canvassers as to all facts not within their own knowledge, except where their testimony is corroborated by witnesses having actual knowledge of the facts. Let me explain what I conceive to be the fatal weakness in the canvassers' testimony.

After the election in question a committee of Republicans and Democrats got together to investigate the frauds alleged to have been perpetrated, and to take means to put a stop to such frauds in the future. They appointed canvassers to go about the city of Kansas City, to ascertain as well as they could who, among the registered voters whose names were checked or numbered as having voted, were in fact legal residents of the wards and precincts in which they appeared to have voted. These canvassers did go about the city on that errand.

So far as appears, they performed their duties faithfully enough. There is nothing in the record but their own testimony to show what they did. They testified that after making the examination which they were ordered to make they were unable to find upward of 1,000 of the registered voters upon whose names ballots were put into the box. They furnished lists of those who could not be found. Those lists are in the record. The weakness and insufficiency of that evidence is this—that, without impeaching the integrity of any of those witnesses or challenging the truth of any of their statements, every report that they made may have been inaccurate, because they relied, not upon their own knowledge as to whether or not these people resided at the places from which they were registered, but in testifying they relied upon what they learned from others who were not called or sworn. The weakness of the testimony of the canvassers lies in the fact that it rests upon the unsworn statements of those whom they interrogated about the alleged voters in question and their residence or nonresidence at the places specified.

So that I say to the gentleman from Kansas that not exceeding 700 votes at the outside in the Second Ward can be considered as being shown by the evidence here—the competent evidence—to have been fraudulent.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. MAGUIRE. I will.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman please state how he makes up the 700 ballots that he says were illegal?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Six hundred of them were the ballots voted alphabetically; 100 were ballots deposited upon other names fraudulently, according to the testimony of the canvassers, corroborated by other evidence—neighborhood evidence—showing that the alleged voters were not residents of the places from which they were registered.

Mr. PRINCE. That is the way you make it up?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Yes, sir.

Mr. PRINCE. Was there any evidence introduced on the part of the contestee to contradict the returns those officers made?

Mr. MAGUIRE. No; and I apprehend there was no need of the introduction of evidence on the part of the contestee to overcome any showing of the contestant that is not made by legal and competent evidence. The facts to which the canvassers testified—the only facts to which they could testify—were that, according to the information which they had received from other people, these alleged voters did not reside at the places from which they were registered. As to those conversations, their evidence was of their own knowledge; but they did not and could not testify of their own knowledge as to the fact of residence or nonresidence.

Concede, then, that in the Second Ward 700 illegal ballots were put into the ballot boxes in this way. We have the names upon which all of these illegal ballots were deposited. It clearly appears from the evidence that whenever a ballot was put into a box it was numbered in accordance with the law of Missouri; that the poll list was resorted to; that the corresponding number, the number of the ballot, was entered upon the poll list opposite the name of the voter, as was also his registration number.

Can we then purge the polls of the Second Ward of the fraudulent ballots thus ascertained to be contained in them? I answer yes. We can do it if we can get at the ballots as evidence, and if it appears that the ballots are in the same condition that they were in when cast on election day. Can we get at the ballots, if the application of Mr. Tarsney to reopen the case for the purpose of taking evidence be granted, or if, as limited by our resolution, the case be reopened for the taking of this specific evidence? Clearly we can. The evidence is documentary evidence, tending to show who was elected to the position of Representative in Congress from the Fifth Congressional district of Missouri.

The Constitution of the United States makes the House of Representatives the judge of the election, return, and qualification of its members. That constitutional provision is the supreme law of the land, State constitutions to the contrary notwithstanding. The ballots, if they have been kept in legal custody and free from the danger of having been tampered with after they were cast, are the very best evidence of the election of Representative in Congress from the district in question. They are the best evidence, because they contain the written expression of the will and voice of each of the electors who cast them. I do not conceive it possible at this time for the House of Representatives to doubt that it has the power under the constitutional provision making it the judge of the election, return, and qualification of its own members to search this country over, if necessary, and to compel the production of all evidence, oral and documentary, that may aid it in reaching a correct decision as to who was and who was not elected to Congress in case of a contest.

It would be an extraordinary thing if, with the documentary evidence existing in the possession and custody of citizens of the United States, within the reach of the processes of our courts, within the reach of the arm of this House itself, that evidence should yet be denied us in the determination of the question which the House is bound to determine, and to determine upon the best evidence obtainable. It is legally impossible that this House of Representatives can be unable to procure this evidence because of a prohibitory provision in a State constitution passed, of course, long after the adoption of the provision of the Federal Constitution to which I have referred. I do not believe that any further argument upon that branch of the case can be necessary. We can get at the ballots. If we can get at the ballots, can the legal ballots be segregated from the illegal ballots? Under the laws of Missouri they can, as I have already shown. We have ascertained by evidence in the record that there are a certain number of illegal ballots in the boxes. We have ascertained the numbers which these ballots bear and by which they can be identified. The moment you open a ballot box you can, by comparing the ballots with the poll lists, ascertain to a certainty by whom or in whose name each ballot was cast.

Mr. BARHAM. If the gentleman will permit me there——

Mr. MAGUIRE. Certainly.

Mr. BARHAM. If we could agree on the number of votes that are admitted to be fraudulent it would be so. But you say that there are 700 fraudulent votes and the committee says 1,011. Now, how can we ascertain about the three hundred and odd votes that constitute the difference between the two estimates? If we agree upon the number there would be no difficulty, I admit, but, not being able to agree upon the number, how can you say which number shall be regarded as fraudulent ballots and which shall be regarded as legal ones?

Mr. MAGUIRE. The ballots upon which we do not agree are identified just as perfectly as are those upon which we do agree. That is to say, they claim that the evidence of the canvassers, who did not testify of their own knowledge, ought to be accepted as sufficient evidence that all these names were fraudulently registered and fraudulently voted. Now, if it be decided by the House that this hearsay evidence is sufficient, why then, of course, these 300 additional ballots can be identified and segregated just as well as those upon which we have agreed.

Mr. BARHAM. Now, as to this secondary evidence——

Mr. MAGUIRE. It is not secondary evidence, but hearsay evidence.

Mr. BARHAM. Well, as to this evidence, whatever it is. Do you not think it was enough evidence, or sufficient evidence, to put Mr. Tarsney on the side of showing that the votes so returned were legal? Why could not he call the men who voted to show that the committee had improperly reported 300 voters who were not in existence?

Mr. MAGUIRE. That is the theory on which Mr. Van Horn and his attorneys evidently proceeded, but, in my judgment, it can not be the correct rule. Manifestly, the statement of a man that another man told him a thing is no evidence at all of the fact.

Mr. BARHAM. But why not call the other man?

Mr. MAGUIRE. These two men made sweeping statements that numbers of persons—I do not say that that is their exact testimony, but with reference to their method of investigation it is substantially their testimony—that three hundred and odd men who were registered and marked as "voted" could not be found at the places from which they were registered. Such testimony—necessarily hearsay and not even relating to the day of election, but to a later day—could not justify, much less require, contestee to subpœna 300 witnesses to deny it. The testimony was absolutely worthless, and an answer to it was unnecessary.

Mr. BARHAM. Is it not perfectly good evidence, if it is received?

Mr. MAGUIRE. I think it is absolutely worthless, whether objected to or not.

Mr. LONG. I would like to ask the gentleman from California a question. Have I permission?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Yes, sir.

Mr. LONG. I presume you indorse the proposition that it is necessary to show that the ballots in the boxes are the identical ballots which were cast by the voters at the election in question?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Yes, sir.

Mr. LONG. I am speaking now of the 624 ballots.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Yes; I say that it is necessary to show by such testimony as is ordinarily required for that purpose that they are the same ballots that were originally cast. The evidence so required is that since they have been cast they have been in legal custody, and that there has been no reasonable opportunity for tampering with them. That evidence raises the presumption, of course, that they are the same ballots.

Mr. LONG. Now, when the officers themselves are detected committing a fraud, or it is admitted, as in this case, what is the presumption as to the remainder of the ballots, on which there is no evidence?

Mr. MAGUIRE. The presumption, where the officers of election are detected in the commission of a fraud, is against all of their acts.

Mr. LONG. What is the presumption as to the legality of the ballots on which there is no evidence?

Mr. MAGUIRE. The presumption as to the legality of the other ballots, as to which there is no evidence, in my opinion, is not affected. The other ballots, being cast by the legal voters, should be counted. They are not official acts of the fraud-tainted officers. If the proof of any act of fraud on the part of election officers would necessarily destroy the value of the ballots in their keeping as evidence, then whenever election officers are shown to have made false returns, not only the returns but the ballots would be destroyed as evidence. That can not be the law.

Mr. LONG. What would the gentleman do with the ballot of Peter Green—I do not mean the ballot found under the sidewalk, but the one in the box?

Mr. MAGUIRE. I would refuse to count it upon the evidence before us.

Mr. LONG. What would you do with the ballot of Clevenger?

Mr. MAGUIRE. I would also refuse to count it.

Mr. LONG. What would the gentleman do with the ballot of Corum?

Mr. MAGUIRE. I do not remember the testimony concerning that ballot.

Mr. LONG. Why, the judge kept his ballot and another judge put another ballot in the box.

Mr. MAGUIRE. That occupies the same position, and I would refuse to count it.

Mr. LONG. Then your proposition is, so far as the fraud is proven, you would exclude such ballots, and presume that the other ballots, which had been in the custody of the judges of the election that committed the fraud, are legal? [Laughter.]

Mr. MAGUIRE. Yes, sir. I would exclude the illegal ballots and count those legally cast.

Mr. LONG. Very well; I only wanted to understand the gentleman's position.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Fraud is never presumed; except that where fraud is shown in a part of any particular act it is presumed to taint the whole act, and where officers are shown to have acted fraudulently in any particular transaction all of their official acts with respect to that transaction are presumed to be tainted with the same fraud. In such case all of their official certificates and returns are discredited and must be disregarded; but it does not follow that the ballots legally cast by legally qualified voters must on that account be disregarded. The ballots are the acts of the voters, not the acts of the officers, and those voters are not to be disfranchised because of the frauds of the officers unless there is sufficient reason to believe that the ballots were tampered with after they were cast. In the fifty-second precinct, for example, there is evidence tending to show that the election officers tampered with the ballots after they were put into the box. In such case all the ballots are tainted.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Will the gentleman from California permit me one question?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Yes; my only objection to interruption is that my time will be taken up with questions and answers instead of being devoted to the argument that I desired to make.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. The law provides that at the end of one year these ballots shall be burned?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Yes.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Is there anything in the record to show that that law has not been complied with?

Mr. MAGUIRE. I think there is.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Will you please tell me the page of the record which shows that?

Mr. MAGUIRE. That evidence is not in the record, because the testimony in the record was taken long before the expiration of the year; but there is evidence in the affidavits filed on Mr. Tarsney's application to reopen the case, that the ballots are still being preserved for State contests, some of which, I believe, are yet to come off.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Is it not true that all of the State contests have been determined?

Mr. MAGUIRE. That is not my understanding.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I think the gentleman has been misinformed.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Besides, it appears that the ballots are being preserved for the purposes of criminal prosecutions that are pending in the State courts of Missouri.

Now, as to the ballots mentioned by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LONG], exactly the same rule prevails as to the other ballots. They can be identified, and they can be segregated and rejected from consideration. The evidence in this case shows a certain number of specific ballots that are fraudulent and ought not to be counted. In so far as there is no contradictory evidence, the legal evidence in support of that position should be accepted, but the hearsay evidence, as I have said, should be disregarded. The ballots in the boxes purporting to have been cast by registered voters should not be rejected upon mere hearsay to the effect that they did not live at the places from which they were registered. The case of contestant was susceptible in this respect of better evidence, and it should have been produced. The contestant was bound to present at least some legal evidence in support of his contention before the contestee was called upon to make any answer to it at all. The burden of proving that fraudulent ballots were cast was upon the contestant; the burden of purging the polls of such fraudulent ballots upon the contestee.

Now, upon either theory as to what evidence is legally sufficient we can readily ascertain the number of fraudulent ballots cast, and, as I have shown, it is easy under the laws of Missouri to segregate those ballots from the legal ballots.

Assuming, then, that the polls can be purged, should Mr. Tarsney be permitted to produce evidence for that purpose at this time? That depends upon two other questions. First, has he unreasonably neglected to obtain the evidence which he now seeks to have this House either secure for him or give him an opportunity to secure? If he has been unreasonably negligent in that matter, then this House has an undoubted discretion to refuse his application. Indeed, he should not be allowed to go back now and take testimony or evidence of any kind which he might have taken within the time allowed by law, but which he failed to take because of his negligence. Again, if it should appear to the satisfaction of the House that the evidence which Mr. Tarsney now seeks to take could not possibly change the result, I apprehend that the House might properly refuse to allow him to take it.

I will briefly address myself to these questions.

Could Mr. Tarsney have procured the evidence which he now seeks to produce within the time fixed by law for the taking of testimony in this contest on his part?

After an examination of the whole matter the gentlemen of the minority have concluded he could not do it. I think it has sufficiently appeared in the course of the argument here that no member of the majority of the committee can say, as a matter of law, that he could have obtained that evidence by any effort possible on his part without appealing directly to this House to aid him by the exercise of its constitutional power—not by delegating such power generally to any officer authorized to administer oaths whom he might select to take depositions, but by directly exercising its power through a duly constituted and appointed commissioner or representative of the House itself.

Mr. LONG. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Yes.

Mr. LONG. What has the gentleman to say of the doctrine laid down in the case of Greevy vs. Scull, in the Fifty-second Congress, as to the power of an officer under the statute taking the evidence to compel the production of the ballots, the report having been made by Mr. O'Ferrall?

Mr. MAGUIRE. If the gentleman will read the doctrine as laid down in that case I shall be pleased to state to him what is my offhand opinion about it. I have not examined that case. At any rate, I do not now remember it.

Mr. LONG (reading):

> In the opinion of the committee the contestant would have found ample authority for the production of the ballots in sections 122 and 123 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. In section 123 full power is given the officer engaged in taking depositions in a contested election case in the House of Representatives "to require the production of papers," and if "any person refuse or neglect to produce and deliver up any paper or papers in his possession pertaining to the election," he is made liable to heavy penalties.
> The ballots were papers pertaining to the election; they were numbered so that each one of them could be identified as the ballot cast by the particular voter whose vote was in controversy; they were the best evidence; they were mute witnesses, yet told their own story, and were unimpeachable; they could not be bribed nor corrupted. In most instances, according to the testimony, they had been safely preserved and no corrupt fingers had handled them.

I call the attention of the gentleman to that case.

Mr. MAGUIRE. From what State did that contest come?

Mr. LONG. From the State of Pennsylvania, and the House was a Democratic House. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MAGUIRE. If this contest came from the State of Pennsylvania, with the laws of which he dealt, I might be inclined to agree with Governor O'Ferrall. If his report were upon an election contest arising in the State of Missouri, under the laws of that State, which we are considering, I would give a great deal of weight to his decision because of my respect for his opinion as a lawyer. But I do not regard this as a question of Federal law exclusively. The statutes of the States can not be ignored, and the statutes of Missouri are peculiar in that respect. I think there is no other State in the Union in which it would be impossible for even the highest trial courts in the State to procure the ballots as evidence upon the indictment of an election officer for fraud in conducting the election in which those ballots were cast. State laws can not override the Federal Constitution nor laws passed pursuant to its grants of power, but varying State laws may make different procedure necessary in different States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Do not the Constitution and laws of the United States extend to Missouri?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I thought so. Do the Constitution and laws of the State of Missouri contain anything which would preclude an officer performing a duty under a law enacted pursuant to the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. MAGUIRE. I think not, if the officer be directly clothed with Federal authority. I said that yesterday, and I have not changed my mind about it. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURTON] seemed at first to have taken a different position, but I must have misunderstood him. Of course this House must have the power, regardless of any State law to the contrary, to examine ballots cast at a Congressional election so long as they remain in existence. Upon that question I think we are all agreed. The question is not as to the constitutional right and power of Congress in the matter. We admit it. We invoke it.

The question is: Did Mr. Tarsney have a right, in spite of the constitution of Missouri, to appoint a commissioner of his own choosing to open the ballot boxes and recount the ballots, without invoking the direct action of Congress? We say he could not, and that any effort on his part to that end must have been futile. That power over State elections is vested in Congress and can not be delegated to candidates for Congress.

We hold that Congress must exercise that power directly and must designate an agent of the House itself for that purpose, in order to get at the ballots contrary to a State law. If Governor O'Ferrall's decision is contrary to that view, then I disagree with Governor O'Ferrall.

Mr. LONG. Then the gentleman disagrees with the report of the committee in the Fifty-second Congress?

Mr. MAGUIRE. As applied to a case arising under the laws of the State of Missouri, I do.

Mr. LONG. This statute, the gentleman must understand, that Mr. O'Ferrall was speaking of in this report is a United States statute.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I understand that perfectly, and if there were no law in Missouri——

Mr. LONG. I will ask the gentleman whether, when an officer is designated to take testimony under a statute of the United States, he is not an officer of the United States for that purpose?

Mr. MAGUIRE. He is an officer, of course, but not necessarily a representative of this House for the purpose of going into the ballot boxes of a State in any way contrary to the constitution and laws of such State. Why, it would be thoroughly and utterly absurd. If the position for which you contend be maintained, then no State in this Union could make an effective law to guard the secrecy or the purity of its ballots, because any man receiving 5 votes in an election for Representative in Congress, becoming a candidate perhaps for the sole purpose of qualifying himself to open and examine under color of Federal law the ballots cast at a State election, may give notice of a contest, and then have the ballot boxes opened and the ballots examined by any commissioner whom he may select for that purpose. That is a dangerous and, it seems to me, an untenable doctrine.

Mr. LONG. The position of the majority of the committee is simply this, that no State in its constitution or by a statute can make a law that will prohibit the Congress of the United States under the power given it by the Constitution and laws enacted to carry it into effect, from obtaining testimony in a given case. That is our position.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I agree to that, and it is upon that theory that we are asking that these ballots be examined. Your contention, if put into practical operation, would be destructive of the laws and constitution of a State intended to guard the secrecy and purity of its ballots. Conceding the power of Congress in the matter, we say that it must be exercised with the greatest possible regard for the otherwise absolute power and right of the State to guard the secrecy and purity of its elections and the integrity of the ballots after election.

By the method which we propose to adopt in this case all the secrecy, all the sacredness, all the purity which the laws of Missouri cast about the ballot boxes of that State are preserved inviolate, and yet the superior authority, the supreme law of the United States, is maintained as paramount. All the power that Congress needs in the matter of procuring evidence of all kinds to aid it in executing its constitutional functions is likewise preserved.

If this House shall adopt the theory advocated by the majority of the committee—and we have that theory now plainly presented—it means this: That, notwithstanding the State may fully recognize the principle which we lay down as controlling in the matter of taking this additional evidence which Mr. Tarsney now seeks, notwithstanding the State may fully recognize the right of this House to send its authorized agent or commissioner at any time into its territory to examine the ballots, nevertheless the State constitution and laws prohibiting the indiscriminate examination of ballots and the indiscriminate opening of ballot boxes shall be of no avail; because if the theory of the majority of this committee be sustained that Mr. Tarsney could have secured the evidence that he now seeks to obtain by merely having a commissioner or any person authorized to take depositions in a contested election case, selected by him alone, to go into the State ballot boxes in spite of the laws and the constitution of the State, and in spite of any law or constitutional provision which the State might make, then the sacredness of the ballots cast in State elections is destroyed. We say that that is a wholly untenable doctrine, and that the rejection of it, as the minority of the committee does reject it, is not at all inconsistent with the paramount authority of the supreme law of the land, which Mr. Tarsney now invokes, and of which we contend he should have the benefit. The ballots, so far as the evidence shows and so far as the ex parte showing goes on this application for leave to reopen the case and take further evidence, are still in the hands of their legal custodian in the State of Missouri, and are, if our theory of the power of the House in this matter is correct, now accessible to the House and can be counted.

Are those ballots in the same condition in which they were when cast on election day? There is nothing in the record to show that they are not. There is evidence before this House now, on this application, showing that several contests for other offices involving the recounting of these very ballots in the State courts of Missouri have been instituted, and some of them at least carried to completion. There is evidence that these very ballots were counted by order of the State courts, upon a judicial decision by courts of competent jurisdiction as to the legal custody and safekeeping of the ballots.

This, I think, is sufficient prima facie evidence that the ballots are now in the same condition as when cast.

Mr. LONG. What does the gentleman mean by the ballots being in the same condition as when cast?

Mr. MAGUIRE. The same ballots unchanged, not tampered with.

Mr. LONG. Do you mean the condition in which they were when prepared by the voter, or the condition they were in when they were put into the box on that day by this corrupt board?

Mr. MAGUIRE. The condition they were in when they were put into the box. You have shown what ballots were fraudulently put into the box, and I say they should be thrown out and the others should be counted.

Mr. LONG. One other question. I will ask the gentleman whether there is not evidence showing that on the vote for other officers there were changes made on these identical ballots in the office of the recorder of voters?

Mr. MAGUIRE. There is an ex parte affidavit of Mr. Van Horn to the effect that such a change did appear, but the answer to that is that the ballots were recounted by the State court after hearing the showing as to the alleged changing of those ballots, and that recount involved an adjudication by the State court that the ballots were in a condition to be recounted when the court ordered the recount to proceed.

Mr. LONG. I know the gentleman does not wish to misrepresent the evidence, so I will ask him whether there is not an affidavit of Mr. Sloan, in addition to the statement of Mr. Van Horn, showing that there were changes made upon those ballots in the office of the recorder of voters?

Mr. MAGUIRE. I think not. There is no evidence that there actually were changes made. There is an affidavit such as you mention, to the effect that there was a difference of 7 votes between the returns and the ballots, as appeared by the ballots when opened. Probably a showing was made to the court to that effect for the purpose of impeaching the ballot box, but the evidence is that the ballots were recounted under the order of the court, after it had heard all of the evidence concerning their having been changed. The probability is that the returns were changed, and not the ballots.

Mr. LONG. Now, will the gentleman refer the House to the evidence in the record or in the affidavits showing that the court counted those ballots that had been changed?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Yes, sir; the affidavits of the eight clerks of the election commissioners. They testify that in the progress of the recount of the ballots in the fifth precinct of the Second Ward they counted the Van Horn and Tarsney votes as the recount proceeded in that precinct.

Mr. LONG. The gentleman does not understand me. Is there any evidence in this record or in the affidavits showing that the Missouri court counted these changed ballots in that contest?

Mr. MAGUIRE. I do not know, and I do not care about that.

Mr. LONG. But that is the proposition.

Mr. MAGUIRE. It is enough that the court found the ballots in the boxes of the fifth precinct in a condition to be counted and did count them, and that these eight men swear to the recount and swear that, in the progress of the recount made under the order of the court, they inspected each of the ballots and ascertained how they were marked for Representative in Congress.

Mr. LONG. One other question, if the gentleman will permit. I do not want to consume his time unnecessarily. Is there evidence in the record or in the affidavits that the recount as made by these designated officials was confirmed by the court?

Mr. MAGUIRE. The evidence is that the recount was made——

Mr. LONG. By those designated officials?

Mr. MAGUIRE. By the officers authorized under the laws of Missouri to conduct recounts when ordered by the courts of Missouri in judicial proceedings.

Mr. LONG. Is there any evidence showing what the court decided on that recount?

Mr. MAGUIRE. I do not know that there is. My experience in the matter of recounts generally—and I think Missouri is not an exception—is that the court determines before the recount of the ballots whether they are in a condition to be recounted. Perhaps the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURTON] can answer whether Missouri is an exception to that rule. It is enough for my present purpose that the ballots have been judicially held to be in condition to be recounted. I take it, then, that there is a complete showing now before this House that the ballots, in spite of the impeaching evidence to which gentlemen refer, were, after a judicial investigation of their condition for the purpose of a recount, recounted and were so recounted as legal ballots.

Is it material for us to have the evidence which Mr. Tarsney now seeks to have the House procure in this matter? I think it clearly is. Gentlemen of the majority of the committee, when closely pressed in this debate, have told the House that, even if it should not appear upon the showing made in their report that Mr. Tarsney ought to be unseated, and even if the additional evidence should turn out to be as favorable to him as he claims it to be, still gentlemen of the majority of the committee claim that, outside of the evidence discussed in their report, there is other evidence as to votes cast elsewhere in the district which would justify the adoption of their resolutions. The claim is that if all the votes to which Mr. Tarsney seeks to establish his right by this additional evidence were credited to him he would still be defeated. I am disposed, as was the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER]—and I think his position perfectly legitimate—not to discuss at random evidence relating to other precincts and other places concerning which the committee did not deem it necessary or proper to advise the House in the majority report. The issues are made up on such showing as the majority of the committee has chosen to make to the House in its report and upon the counter showing made by gentlemen of the minority, who in submitting their views have discussed the case as made by the majority.

Gentlemen on the other side were inclined to criticise the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] yesterday for discussing this case without a sufficient knowledge of it. It was suggested that he did not understand the case because he had not read the evidence. Upon what theory is that criticism made? Should not a member of this House get a sufficient knowledge of a case of this kind by carefully reading the reports coming from the committee, as Judge POWERS had done? The very purpose of referring the case to the committee was to get a complete statement of it in condensed form, so that all members could get a thorough understanding of the case, for all purposes, without reading the voluminous record. Yet we are told that members who have simply relied upon the reports do not understand the case. If that be so, the committee itself should ask to have the case recommitted.

The case upon which this House will act is the case presented in the report of the committee, as the result of its investigation of the record. Of what avail is it to appoint a committee to examine the record and digest it and give the result of its investigation to the House if, after it has reported, and after the report has been carefully read and examined, the right of a gentleman of unquestionable legal ability and great experience to discuss the case upon the report before the House must be challenged on the ground that he is not familiar with the facts of the case? If he is not familiar with the facts of the case, then the case has not been fully or properly presented to the House by the committee, and the House is not in a position to act intelligently on the case. Indeed, the gentlemen of the majority go outside of their report for the facts, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURTON], who supports their conclusion, repudiates their law.

The case must be treated as contained in the pages of their report, or the case is not in a condition to be presented and considered here. How absurd the whole proceeding would be if we should discard the reports and go into the case at large upon this voluminous record, referring members of the House to the record and asking them to unseat a member upon propositions that are not contained in the report.

I therefore prefer to discuss the case as it has finally been made by the digested statement of facts and law in the report. By that method of procedure every gentleman on the floor who has read the reports will be fully qualified to discuss the case and to vote upon it. Otherwise he must be in no better position to vote upon the case than he is to discuss it.

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRUMM. I find that the minority of the committee have proposed a resolution to send this case back for the taking of further evidence. The resolution which they propose seems to contemplate that there shall be an examination of the ballots only, and that by such examination the illegal ballots shall be separated from the legal ones. Now, what I want to know is this: Suppose that upon an examination of the ballots there is not such evidence as will enable the committee to segregate the illegal votes from the legal, will this resolution empower Mr. Tarsney to go further and examine the voters for the purpose of getting at the true state of the vote?

Mr. MAGUIRE. No. The gentleman from Illinois and possibly the gentleman from Kansas stated correctly the reason for that limitation. It was that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER], who agreed with us as to the principles upon which this case should be decided and the method to be pursued, was yet unwilling to open the case generally for the taking of testimony of voters in those precincts. For that reason, while we were very willing to take the testimony suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM], we have in our resolution restricted the taking of testimony within the limits fixed.

Mr. PRINCE. That is, restricted the investigation to an examination of the ballots themselves.

Mr. BRUMM. Now, let me ask this further question: Suppose there should prove to be a great many illegal ballots; suppose it should appear that names have been changed, so that votes which should have been counted for Mr. Van Horn have been counted for Mr. Tarsney, or vice versa; suppose it should turn out that the recount should reverse the count as returned, does the gentleman mean to say that the committee would be so limited that they could not inquire further, although they might discover this state of facts?

Mr. MAGUIRE. The gentleman states it correctly. Mr. Tarsney's effort to secure additional evidence would then fail at that point. The moment it appeared that the ballots could not for any reason be counted the leave granted him to take additional evidence under our resolution would be of no avail. He would not be permitted to go to the voters and ascertain how they voted. As the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] said, if it should appear upon an examination of the ballots, or upon an examination concerning their custody since the election, that they are not in a condition to be recounted, then the House, being unable to purge the polls, would merely have purged its own conscience. That, at least, we think it should do. It should make an effort to get at the best evidence in the case and, failing that, act upon the incomplete record before it. We would be glad to go a step further, and take the testimony of the voters themselves, but, for the reasons that I have given, we abandoned the idea of asking the House for that privilege.

Mr. BRUMM. Undoubtedly that ought to be done; and if so, why not do it?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Because it was urged that Mr. Tarsney ought not to be permitted to take such testimony now, on the ground that he could have taken it at the beginning, within his time as allowed by law.

Mr. BRUMM. But why not now provide, to the extent to which it may be necessary to establish how the legal voters did vote, that this door should be opened to the contestee? Of course I refer only to those precincts in which this alleged fraud was committed.

Mr. MAGUIRE. As I have said, we have no objection to the addition of such an amendment as that, if the gentleman thinks proper to present it. But we have endeavored to get all who are in favor of opening up the case on any ground or in any way to agree upon some proposition, and act in harmony in supporting it. To carry out that purpose we compromised upon the resolutions presented by me.

Mr. BRUMM. I hope it will be presented in both shapes and that the House will have an opportunity of determining between them.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I could not present it in both shapes myself, but for my part I would be glad to have such a proposition presented and voted upon and adopted, if it will not endanger our proposition to reopen the case at all.

Mr. TAYLER. If the gentleman from California will yield to me for a moment, I think I may be able to satisfy the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The contestee desired to take such testimony as the gentleman from Pennsylvania indicates ought to be taken. But I took the view as to that character of testimony that the contestee had a sufficient opportunity to answer the charge that certain persons, whose names were presented as having no right to vote, had illegally voted. He was advised of that when he had an opportunity to take the testimony of the individual voters. That, however, I contended, under the peculiar ballot law in the State of Missouri, was not the best testimony attainable, but that the ballots themselves were. Therefore the minority of the committee, while desiring to spread the inquiry over a larger area than I was willing to admit, necessarily went with me as far as I would go, and the result was that the resolution was limited to an examination of the ballots themselves, so as to obtain the proof of the ballots themselves for whom the alleged illegal voters cast their votes.

Now, then, if the examination of the ballots should disclose any infirmity or depravity arising out of actions subsequent to the count, then their validity as a basis of a recount would be destroyed, but the House would have done all it could do; we could not go any further, but must pursue and adopt the doctrine with regard to the returns that they are so fatally tainted with fraud that the efforts to purge them can not be successful and that they must be entirely disregarded.

Mr. BRUMM. Now, that is the very turning point of the whole controversy. On that point I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Let us suppose, on an examination of the ballot boxes and the poll lists, it should turn out—for the purpose of illustration, we will say—that there was a unanimous vote for Mr. Tarsney? In that case would you contend that Mr. Tarsney should have the benefit of that vote?

Mr. TAYLER. In that case the entire precinct would be shown to be so fatally tainted with fraud that it would have to be totally disregarded and entirely thrown out. Then comes the moment when the principle of law I have just recited is justly invoked and given expression to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. If the gentleman from California will permit me a moment, I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question to see if I understand the point that he is now making?

Mr. MAGUIRE. I yield to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman from Ohio says that in the examination of the ballots if it should disclose the fact that they were all cast for Mr. Tarsney, the condition of affairs would then have arisen to justify the throwing out of the entire precinct.

Mr. TAYLER. I understood the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to be substantially this: That you found the ballots in the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts had Mr. Tarsney's name on them exclusively; then their apparent condition being different from that indicated by the promulgated returns on the night of the election, and afterwards by the officers of the election, and that being the case, it would follow of necessity that the ballots had been tampered with after they were cast, and they would necessarily be totally disregarded in making up the count.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman does not apprehend the question I asked him. Do I understand him to say that if it appears on an inspection of these ballots that they were cast for Mr. Tarsney, then the condition of affairs would arise that would justify throwing them out?

Mr. TAYLER. An examination of all the ballots, yes, if they were all cast for Mr. Tarsney. Of course there then would be a difference between the condition of those ballots as evidenced by the returns, by the official count, and by the report made by the canvassing officers, and the condition in which we now find them, which would of necessity invalidate them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman does not apprehend my question; but never mind.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I may say this, that to reach the purpose suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM], by adopting the resolution presented here about two months ago by Mr. Tarsney, all of the testimony suggested by the gentleman could and should be taken under that resolution. Mr. Tarsney's original application was for leave to take testimony which would include all that the gentleman from Pennsylvania suggests. If the House desires to go further than the minority of the committee have expressed the purpose of going, why, then, adopt Mr. Tarsney's original resolution and let the evidence be taken. Let the ballots be examined first, and, if not satisfactory, take the testimony of the voters.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I desire to ask the gentleman from California a question.

Mr. MAGUIRE. In just a moment I will yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I will yield in a moment. If it should appear, either upon an examination of the ballots or upon testimony taken to ascertain whether or not the ballots have always been in legal custody and whether or not there has been any reasonable opportunity to tamper with them, that there is a reasonable probability that they were tampered with, they would be rejected and the contestee would be driven to the other form of evidence, namely, the testimony of the voters themselves. Under Mr. Tarsney's resolution as originally offered by him to this House and referred to the committee, that testimony could, and doubtless would, be taken.

Mr. BRUMM. That would throw the burden of proof on Mr. Tarsney, of course.

Mr. MAGUIRE. The burden of proof is on Mr. Tarsney now.

Mr. BRUMM. Well, I say even under that arrangement it would be.

Mr. MAGUIRE. It would not change the burden of proof.

Mr. BRUMM. I think that ought to be done.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I desire to ask the gentleman from California a question. In the RECORD, page 2392, appears this colloquy:

> Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. It is, then, your belief that the examination of those ballots will reveal the very thing that the committee has reported—the election of Mr. Van Horn?
> Mr. TAYLER. That is my hope and expectation.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, let me ask the gentleman from California this: If a man expects a thing to be proved to be true he believes it will be proved to be true?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Yes; practically. But belief is the expression of a settled conviction, while expectation is not.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In other words, on his statement, if the ballots be counted, the result will be that Mr. Van Horn will be seated?

Mr. MAGUIRE. It may be. That is, at most, a mere expression of belief—of Mr. TAYLER'S hope as a Republican and his belief as a man that his fellow-partisan will ultimately triumph.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, let me state an analogous case, and see if I state it correctly. Suppose that the counsel for a client in court should go in with an affidavit and ask for a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence, and the court should read the affidavit and he should look at the counsel and say, "But this will not change the result?" and the counsel should say, "No; I do not think it will change the result." "But do you ask me to grant a new trial for the purpose of the admission of evidence that you yourself say will not affect the result at all?" The court would say, "Your motion is denied."

Mr. MAGUIRE. The case is not analogous. This is not an application for a new trial. This is an application for an opportunity to take evidence in support of Mr. Tarsney's position on an original trial. The trial is now in progress before the House on the depositions taken, and he asks leave to take other evidence which he could not get within the time allowed him for presenting the evidence on his own behalf, and which he can not get now without invoking the power of this House.

Now, let me suggest an analogous case. A man has recently been arrested in California, charged with the crime of murder. I believe him to be guilty. I believe upon a fair trial he will be convicted. Now, would you suggest, because I entertain that belief, or because any other man does, that he ought not to have a trial, but that he should be hanged on our belief, and the expense and delay of a trial avoided? Certainly not. Mr. Tarsney's case is on trial now. There is a showing of probability that the result would or might be changed by the additional evidence that Mr. Tarsney desires to present. The probability that the evidence might change the result is sufficient to justify his application and the recommendation of the minority.

Now, what does it matter that Mr. TAYLER, as a Republican, hopes it will turn out finally that the evidence will be favorable to his fellow-partisan? Mr. TAYLER'S "expectation" is no more potent, from a judicial standpoint, than his expressed hope. It would be impossible, even for him, to determine how far his expectation is based upon his hope.

Mr. LONG. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Yes, sir.

Mr. LONG. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] in his report says there are probably a thousand fraudulent votes in the Second Ward?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Yes.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Van Horn had 342 votes returned in that ward?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Yes.

Mr. LONG. You state in your report that there is a reasonable probability that you will be able to show that less than 550 fraudulent votes were cast for Mr. Tarsney. Will you explain how that probability will arise?

Mr. MAGUIRE. I will. The statement, so far as 550 votes is concerned, is hypothetical. It is assumed in our report that Mr. Tarsney will lose 180 votes by the throwing out of the fifty-second precinct. That would reduce his plurality from 745, as returned, to 565; then if he should lose less than 550 votes in the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts, he would still be elected by 15 or more plurality, and he would be entitled to his seat.

The suggestion of 550 votes was arbitrary, and the statement in which the suggestion occurs is hypothetical. If Mr. Tarsney's contention turns out right he will not lose 550 votes; he will not lose more than 450 votes in the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts of the Second Ward. He would still have quite a large plurality to his credit. Indeed, he could afford to lose 650 votes in the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts, since it appears conclusively that Mr. Van Horn loses at least 100 votes in the fifth precinct, thus increasing Mr. Tarsney's apparent plurality to 845. Upon no reasonable theory deduced from the evidence in this case can Mr. Tarsney be said to lose 650 votes in those precincts. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOUTELLE). The gentleman from California has four minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Well, I can not conclude my argument, but I will try to close in that time. It is admitted on all sides that in this matter of frauds Mr. Tarsney was an absolutely innocent party; that so far as he is concerned his garments are unsullied by any taint of fraud, and that whatever advantage may have come to him from the frauds that were committed was due to the fact that his name was printed in the column on the ballot which was used by the conspirators (Republican and Democratic) for marking. It appears that there were fewer Republican candidates for office to be benefited by the frauds contemplated than there were Democratic candidates, and for that reason they took the Democratic column on the ballot as the basis of marking, and marked in the names of the Republican candidates who were parties to the conspiracy and on whose behalf in part the fraudulent ballots were deposited.

Mr. Tarsney is entirely innocent in the matter. There is not a scintilla of evidence in the record showing that he knew of them, nor is there any evidence to show that he had any knowledge of the conspiracy or of the frauds growing out of it until long after the election, and then only as other citizens knew it. There is no evidence that anybody connected with the conspiracy or with its execution, had any interest in the Congressional election. Mr. Tarsney, in his affidavit, states that in September last he was informed by leading Republicans of Kansas City that the conspiracy involved the deposit of fraudulent ballots for candidates for local offices, Democrats and Republicans, and that in order to obtain the assent of some of the conspirators, who were friends of Mr. Van Horn, but without the suggestion that Mr. Van Horn was a party to it, insisted that as to the Congressional election the fraudulent ballots should be equally divided.

The evidence is that upon examination of the ballots in one precinct it appears that that plan, whether it was an agreement or not, was actually carried out to the letter, and that Van Horn's name appears upon 101 of the fraudulent ballots in that precinct. Now, I say, under Mr. Tarsney's claim that the ballots not only were not fraudulently deposited for his benefit, but that the frauds were committed not with reference to the Congressional contest and that Mr. Van Horn got a large share of the fraudulent ballots, he could not in any event lose more than 450 votes in the Second Ward. His majority is returned as 745 votes, and Van Horn loses at least 100 votes in the fifth precinct, thus increasing it to 845.

Now, as to the fifty-second precinct. How does that stand? I can not go into a discussion of the evidence, new and old, concerning Elmwood and other precincts; but I admit that there is some showing in the new poll books that have been offered for some purpose, claimed by us to be merely as evidence upon this application to open the case, and by the chairman of the committee to be evidence for all purposes, that there was suspicious alphabetical voting to the number of perhaps 50 to 70 ballots altogether, in two other precincts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I should like to finish this statement.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to conclude his remarks.

Mr. MAGUIRE. No; I do not desire that. I want to keep the agreement made with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I ask that the gentleman have a few more minutes to conclude his remarks.

There was no objection.

Mr. MAGUIRE. As to the fifty-second precinct, which I conceive to be the only other precinct under consideration at this time, as it is the only other precinct whose alleged frauds are discussed by the majority in their report, I decline, as Mr. TAYLER declined, to go outside of their report to scour the rest of the district.

We concede that upon the evidence now before the House that precinct must be thrown out and that there is no evidence that it can be purged. By throwing out the precinct Mr. Tarsney loses 180 votes, but there is no help for it. In making this admission I desire to say that I do not believe the testimony of Mr. Canney, who swears that 115 Republican ballots were taken out of the box and burned and 115 Democratic ballots substituted for them. His statement to that effect is inherently improbable. But I have no time to discuss that phase of the matter. We concede that the vote of the precinct must be thrown out and disregarded.

Mr. Tarsney then loses 180 votes in the fifty-second precinct and 450 in the Second Ward; but he will still have a clear plurality of 215 votes, entitling him to the seat, so far as the frauds discussed in the reports are concerned, and this margin of 215 more than covers the outside frauds discussed by gentlemen on the floor, but not in their report. If the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts are thrown out, of course Mr. Tarsney is not elected, and we concede that upon the evidence now before the House they can not be counted; but they should not be thrown out. They should be purged and recounted. If this be done, the recount will show that Mr. Tarsney was legally elected a Representative in Congress from the Fifth Congressional district of Missouri. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I have no time to devote to useless exordium. I go at once to the heart of this controversy. My first proposition is that at the Congressional election held in the Fifth Congressional district of the State of Missouri on the 6th day of November, 1894, there was a gross and widely diffused fraudulent registration of voters made in Kansas City by Democratic officials and politicians in the interest of the Democratic party. The testimony of the witness Bradbury establishes this fact beyond the shadow of a doubt. This witness was a Democratic orator and the publisher of a Democratic newspaper in the campaign which terminated with this election. He swears that he was the boss of a gang of colored men employed upon the streets of Kansas City under the supervision of John May; that there were other gangs employed there under the charge of persons who were Democrats; that, commencing in August, 1893, and ending with the election for mayor in the city in the spring of 1894, by the direction of May and with the knowledge and consent of one Owsley, the Democratic recorder of voters, who was by law the official who had charge of registration, he and the other bosses frequently took gangs of these colored men to the office of the recorder of voters and there had them fraudulently registered under divers names. It appears that a large portion of this fraudulent registration was made in the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts of the Second Ward of the city, but that it was by no means confined to these precincts, but extended, together with other fraudulent registrations, to many other precincts.

The proof of this wrongful registration does not rest simply upon the statement of this witness, who, by the way, is not contradicted by anything that appears in the record, but is strongly corroborated by the registration books in the office of the recorder of voters. The existence of this registration is also shown by the testimony of the canvassers of the committee of public safety of Kansas City. After the result of this election became known there was a widespread feeling of indignation among the people of the city, irrespective of party, on account of the outrages which had been committed at the polls. A nonpartisan meeting of citizens was called, and, having assembled, it appointed a committee of public safety, composed of Republicans, Democrats, and Populists, whose duty it was to investigate the election frauds and to drag the guilty perpetrators to judgment. In each one of a large number of precincts in which fraud was suspected a couple of intelligent, well-equipped canvassers were sent by this committee, within ten days after the election, bearing in their hands exact copies of the poll books that had been used at the election in that precinct, showing who had voted and who were registered in the precinct. Their mission was to find how many of the persons who were registered and had voted in the precinct actually resided there. These persons made a careful house-to-house canvass of the precinct, making careful and conscientious inquiry in it, after which they made their report.

The gentleman from California [Mr. MAGUIRE] insists that these reports can not be credited, because he says they are simply hearsay; but the fact is that these canvassers reported, not simply the information they had obtained by inquiry, but also, in innumerable instances, they reported that names of men who were recorded on the poll book as having voted and been registered were registered from vacant lots and from houses which had stood tenantless for months, and they reported further that great numbers of these names were registered from little houses into which it would have been absolutely impossible to compress one-tenth of the number of persons there registered. These reports show that in the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts of the Second Ward and in the fifty-second precinct of the Ninth Ward alone there were 1,101 men recorded as registered and voting who could not be found by these canvassers in their rounds. Not only this, sir, but citizens were called from all over the city, citizens who lived in the houses from which these false registrations were made, and these citizens, being put upon oath, testified that dozens upon dozens of the persons so registering from their houses had never resided there at any time.

Mr. MAGUIRE. How many cases of that kind are there?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Well, sir, I have a tabulated statement here which shows that over and above the alphabetical ballots, which amounted to 600 in these three precincts of the Second Ward, there were 146 such cases testified to in these precincts alone, and this statement is made up after only a partial examination of the evidence on this point. The evidence will show a great many more such cases, I have no doubt.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this false registration was proven, as I have said, beyond the shadow of a doubt. The contestee did not dare to deny it. It was done at the instance of this man Owsley, the Democratic recorder of voters. It was done at the instance of this man John May, who is attempted to be palmed off here as a Republican. The testimony shows that May, while he once held office at the hands of the Republican party and sometimes figured in the primaries as a Republican, was at heart a Democrat; that he had held the office of superintendent of streets under a Democratic administration; that he never went into the Republican primaries except for the purpose of controlling them in the interest of the Democratic party; that, like the Hessian soldier, he invariably fought for pay, and that he was mainly working and laboring for Mr. Tarsney and the Democratic ticket on the day of the election in question.

The Republicans of Kansas City found out before the election that this false registration had been made, and the Republican committee thereupon sent into each one of a number of suspected precincts two intelligent and qualified men, who took with them books, visited every building in the entire precinct, and obtained the names of all the persons entitled to vote therein and recorded them in their books. They then took these books to the office of the Democratic recorder of voters, compared them with the registration list of voters in the precinct there kept, and discovered an enormous disproportion; they then put down on their books the names of the additional persons registered as voters in the recorder's office and went back again and made a second careful canvass of the suspected wards, struck off the names of the very few additional voters which they discovered there, and then put these books, as amended and completed, into the hands of the chairman of the Republican committee. These books, when so completed, showed, Mr. Speaker, that there were 4,500 false and fraudulently registered voters in those precincts.

The chairman of the Republican committee then waited upon Mr. Owsley, who, by virtue of his office, was ex officio president of the board of revision, whose duty it was under the laws of that State to purge false registrations, called his attention to this careful canvass that had been made, pointed out to him the fact that there were 4,500 falsely registered names in these precincts, as shown by the books, and begged him to use his influence with the board of revision, then just convened, to have it appoint canvassers who would go back to those precincts and go over them with the canvassers of the Republican committee and verify said books, and thereby find out who were illegally registered, to the end that the board of review might, as they were bound to do under the law of Missouri, strike the illegally registered names from the registry list before the election. But, sir, Owsley put him off on one pretext or another; he virtually refused to use his influence in the way suggested, and, as a consequence of his conduct, the election which was held on the 6th day of November, 1894, was conducted with 4,300 of these 4,500 illegally registered voters upon the registration lists of these precincts. And this was done, now remember, over the protest of the Republican party, made through its proper officers.

Now, the Republicans of the city, seeing that they could not obtain a purged registration list, knowing that they had to go into the election under these circumstances of discouragement, next turned their attention to obtaining intelligent, honest, and capable Republicans to represent their party upon the various boards of election. The law of Missouri, Mr. Speaker, provides that the recorder of voters shall, a certain number of days before the election, appoint six judges of election to preside at each poll; that he shall select them from opposite political parties—from the two parties polling the highest vote at the last preceding election. That would have required Owsley as an honest official to appoint three Democratic judges and three Republican judges. And under the law he was also obliged to appoint one Republican and one Democratic clerk at each poll. To the end that there might be no impairment of their rights in the matter, the Republican committee selected from each one of the sixty-odd precincts in the city the names of a number of intelligent men, men of integrity, men of property, who were Republicans and wrote them down upon paper. They then waited respectfully upon this Democratic official, handed him the list of names, and asked him if he would not select the Republican judges from it. He answered that it would be impossible for him to do this, but that when he made the appointment of Republican judges he was confident that they would be satisfactory to the Republicans of Kansas City. In the course of a few days, as required by law, he published the list of judges appointed by him, both Republicans and Democrats. The very moment that list was published every man of intelligence saw that this man was attempting for fraudulent purposes to violate the law.

Why, sir, it appears that these Democratic judges were "plug uglies," ward heelers, keepers and habitues of saloons; that they were men without intelligence, competency, or character—men in no wise representative of the intelligent and respectable Democratic element of the city. So far as the alleged Republican judges and clerks were concerned, a diligent search of the precincts in which they were appointed failed in many instances to disclose that any such persons lived there. It showed that many of them were nonresidents of the precincts; it showed that others of them had moved in there recently pursuant to a conspiracy long before concocted, and had made a mere pretense of residence by sleeping in vacant rooms for one night, in order that they might go on the boards of election to represent the Republican party. It showed, too, that they were men of no intelligence. Many of them were positive Democrats; others of them were men whose party fealty had long been mistrusted by the Republicans; and, as with respect to the Democratic judges, they were found to be the keepers of saloons, barroom loafers, ward heelers, and disreputable scoundrels who had no standing whatever among respectable people in the city.

Now, the effect of this disclosure, Mr. Speaker, was to startle the entire city. Men rose in solemn protest against the appointments; the press denounced them unsparingly. An indignation meeting was called, that the citizens might express their disapproval of the conduct of Owsley in the premises. Finding that this was about to be done, he entered into a solemn agreement, which was reduced to writing, with the members of the Republican committee, that in consideration that the meeting should be called off he would submit the question as to who should be appointed Republican judges and clerks of election to four men, who were named. Two of these men were intelligent, respectable Republicans of the city, known to the voters thereof; and two of them were intelligent and respectable Democrats, men of character and standing in the community. When this agreement was entered into, the Republican committee prepared its objections to these alleged Republicans who had been appointed by Mr. Owsley. They prepared also a list of names of intelligent Republicans, men of character, some of whom lived in each precinct in the city. They waited upon the gentlemen named as arbitrators and were about to hand in their objections and their lists to them. But, sir, on the morning following the making of the agreement Mr. Owsley went back upon it. He published a card in the papers repudiating it. And so these arbitrators who had been selected felt that they had no authority to act; and two of them having left the city, this effort on the part of the Republicans in Kansas City to secure their rights under the law to an honest representation upon the election boards fell to the ground, and, over the solemn protest not only of the Republican organization but of every honest citizen of Kansas City, whatever his political affiliations, this election for Congress in the fall of 1894 was held by these characterless vagabonds who had been in the first instance selected by the recorder for fraudulent purposes. In not a solitary instance did he appoint in any precinct for judge or clerk of election a Republican whose appointment had been requested by the Republican organization. He appointed the very men who had been selected in the first place. He put them on these boards, of course, with guilty knowledge and for a fraudulent purpose. And the record discloses (no man on this floor dare deny it) that these judges and clerks actually perpetrated at the election the very frauds and outrages which it was apprehended by the Republicans that they would commit if they got the opportunity.

Now, Mr. Speaker, having attempted in vain to procure the purging of a fraudulent registration list, having been compelled to go into this election with the knowledge that there were hundreds of fraudulent names upon the list, having been denied honest Republican representation on the election boards, the Republican party, as a last resort, turned for safety to that provision of the law which entitled them to representation at each precinct by a challenger and a witness to the count.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Will the gentleman pardon me for an interruption just at this point?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I know the gentleman desires to have the facts——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Now, if the gentleman will ask his question and not waste any time eulogizing my motives, I will be obliged to him.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I know you are a man of directness.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I am.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Is it not true that a resolution complimentary of this man Owsley for his aid in purging the registration list was adopted in October just before the election by the board for promptness in furnishing all desired information and for his assistance and support in the endeavor of this board to make the revision as correct and complete as possible?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. It is true that there was a board of revision, of which this man was ex officio president; it is true that he appointed this board and put on there a brother of the man Kreuger, a scoundrel who debauched the suffrage at one of the precincts at the election and endeavored to defeat the honest vote of the people of Missouri; it is true that he declined to purge the registration lists of 4,300 fraudulent names illegally upon it when he was called upon to do so; it is true that he did constitute a board, composed in part, at least, of such men as I have described, whom he was able to induce to pass resolutions eulogizing him for the acts that he had done [applause on the Republican side], and there is no more conclusive evidence in the record of this man's trickery, scoundrelism, and villainy than his ability to commit such crimes and then have it indorsed in this manner by men who were either his dupes or his confederates. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now let me ask the gentleman from California a question. Do you deny that an enormous fraudulent registration was made throughout the city of Kansas City prior to this election?

Mr. MAGUIRE. I do not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Do you deny that the man Owsley was a scoundrel?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Well, I—I——

[Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Well, I—what? [Laughter.]

Mr. MAGUIRE. I think I ought to have the benefit of the cause of the merriment on the other side.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman has already the benefit of the floor by my courtesy, and is holding it in time that belongs to me. I hope he will answer me immediately, as I have very much to say and a very limited time in which to say it.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Upon the question of scoundrelism—what I mean is that no man in his position had the right to refuse to appoint the watchers and challengers suggested by the Republican party——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I hope the gentleman will not consume my time, but answer the plain question. Was he a scoundrel?

Mr. MAGUIRE (continuing). And in so far he did an act——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman must answer or yield the floor. Was he a scoundrel?

Mr. MAGUIRE. I do not know whether he was or not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Well, I do know, and I will tell you why I know. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] Let us speak frankly and candidly to each other. The issue here presented is a great one; it involves the right of a Representative to a seat on this floor, and the right of a constituency in a great Congressional district to cast its ballots and have them fairly counted and honestly returned, and he who in any section of this Union, whether North or South, East or West, attempts, either by open violence or by secret fraud, to impair the right of suffrage, or to nullify the will of the people as expressed at the ballot box to representation on this floor by the man of their choice, is a scoundrel in the sight of God and man. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, why do I say that Owsley is a scoundrel? Is this the mere language of vituperation, or is it a truthful characterization of him? He is a scoundrel, first, because, as the testimony shows, he made many of these fraudulent registrations with his own hand, in his office; second, because, as the testimony shows, when some of the colored men in these gangs grew timid and refused longer to go and fraudulently register, Owsley was seen, and he assured them that it was all right, and thereupon they did register; third, because when he sent one of his deputies into one of the precincts, just before the election, to make local registrations, as the law required, and the man refused to engage in listing false registrations, Owsley was seen, and subsequently the man quieted his conscience and went on with the disreputable work. Why was he a scoundrel? Because there were registered right there, as the evidence shows, in his office, by the hundreds, men from vacant lots that were within a square, almost, of the office where the registration was made; men from tenantless houses which he passed every day as he went to and from his home. Why was he a scoundrel? Because he purposely and knowingly appointed dishonest men upon election boards, against the protest of the best sentiment in Kansas City, regardless of party, to commit the villainies which you are compelled to admit they did commit. This is why I have characterized this man as I have. His rascality further appears, sir, in another matter that I am now going to detail.

After the Republicans had failed in their efforts to secure a purged registration list, after they had failed to get honest representation on the election boards, they turned to the law which allowed them to have a challenger and a witness of the count at each precinct. The law upon this point was as plain as the sun in heaven on a cloudless day. The law under which the election was held consisted, first, of the recorder of voters act. It provided that a challenger should be selected by each political party—not by the recorder of voters, mind you, but by each political party—to be present at each precinct. Under the law the duty of the challenger was this: He was entitled to be present at the polls and make challenge of the men who came there to vote, if he thought they were not entitled to cast their ballots. He had no right to witness the count of the vote. He could not, in the very nature of things, give his attention to challenging voters and at the same time act as a witness to the count, which count, under the law of Missouri, is carried on while the vote is being polled. In addition to this, part of the count is necessarily conducted after the polls are closed at night, and the challenger had no right to remain there after that time to witness that part of it.

Now this law, that is, the recorder of voters act, as I say, gave to each political party a challenger at each precinct, and then went on to provide that the election should be conducted under its provisions, and also under the provisions of the general election law of the State of Missouri, so far as it was not in conflict with the provisions of the recorder of voters act. Now, the general election law of the State thus referred to contained a provision that each political party should have a witness to the count at each precinct, a man to stand there and witness the counting of the votes. How could he witness the count if he had to challenge the voters? Besides, he had no right to challenge voters. He was entitled to stay in the room with the election board after the polls were closed and until the votes were all counted and properly returned. Any man that had a grain of sense, any tyro in the law, would have known at a glance that this provision of the law allowing witnesses to the count was applicable to this election in Kansas City, for the reason that there was no conflict between it and the recorder of voters act. Owsley, however, in the interest of fraud, raised the contention that the provision of the general election law was inapplicable, and that there was no authority of law to appoint a witness to the count for the various polling places in the city; but the force of public opinion compelled him to make a test case upon the question and to bring it before the circuit court of that county. This court was composed of three judges, each one of whom was a Democrat. I imagine that Mr. Owsley thought that because of their political bias they would prostitute the judicial ermine to his dirty purposes and hold with him in his pretended and ridiculous view of the law; but when the case was submitted to them, two of them, in clear and direct opinions, held point blank that he was wrong, and that each party was entitled to appoint a witness. As to the challenger, of course the right of each party to appoint him goes without saying. The express provision of the recorder of voters act, as I have declared, clearly authorized that.

Now, after this decision of the Democratic court, two of the judges concurring and the other one dissenting in an opinion which was so weak and apologetic as to render it absolutely contemptible, judgment was entered upon the finding, and notification of it was given by publication in the newspapers of the city at least three days before the election, and it was known and applauded by men of all political parties. Notwithstanding all this, however, Owsley called these Democratic election officers together before the election was held and instructed them that under the law it was for them to determine whether or not they would admit both the challengers and the witnesses to the polls.

On the morning of election day, sir, the Republican challengers and witnesses, equipped with certificates of their appointment signed by the chairman and secretary of the Republican committee, went to all the precincts in the various wards in the city and there presented their credentials to the election boards and asked admission to the voting places, but thereupon the election officers, the pretended Republicans joining in every instance, refused to receive or admit them, and, in many instances, actually heaped upon them personal indignities and menaced them with violence. These challengers and witnesses, having been told by the election officers at some of the precincts that they would be admitted if they could bring appointments from the recorder of voters, repaired to his office, Mr. Speaker, and there rapped in vain at his door for admission. At first they got no response, but, on finding that men were in there, they made such a demonstration that they finally succeeded in getting word through the closed door that Owsley was not in. Some of them then hunted him up on the street. They knew they had a right to appear at the precincts independent of his appointment, but they were willing to "stoop to conquer;" they were even willing to go down to the low depths in which he dwelt long enough to appeal to him for a recognition of their rights. On meeting him they stated that they had taken the certificate of the Republican committee to the polls but had been ejected, and had been told that his appointment would insure their admission, and asked him if he would not appoint them so that they could go in to enjoy their prerogative. He turned away from them, sir, saying that it was a matter that he had nothing to do with.

And so this election for Congress in the Fifth Congressional district of the great State of Missouri was held under a fraudulent registration list upon which there were at least 4,300 illegal names, put there and retained there over the protest of the Republican party; so this election was held with Democratic judges alone on the election boards; so this election was held without Republican challengers and Republican witnesses to the count. The only men, Mr. Speaker, who could have prevented these outrages were driven like sheep from the polls, and yet the Representatives who have made the minority report on the other side of this Chamber, supported by the opinion of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER], who has abandoned his Republican colleagues to go over to his Democratic colleagues when they are wrong—and therein lies his wrong—tell us that notwithstanding this stupendous fraud we must be very careful to deal tenderly with Mr. Tarsney and that it is the proper thing to credit the acts of these disreputable officers and an easy task to segregate the honest ballots from the whole number of ballots which are proven to have been fraudulently manipulated by their dishonorable hands.

I now propose, Mr. Speaker, to address myself to three inquiries which are necessarily connected in the argument that I have mapped out in my mind. First, was fraud actually committed at the polls by the officers of election? Second, in whose interests was this fraud committed? Third, what was the extent of this fraud, as shown in the evidence? I affirm without reservation, sir, and shall undertake to demonstrate it, first, that fraud was committed, unblushing and outrageous fraud; second, that this fraud was committed for John C. Tarsney; third, that the evidence now in the record shows that the fraud was extensive enough to and actually did defeat Mr. Van Horn, and that he is now clearly entitled to his seat.

The question, then, is, was fraud committed? Take, if you please, the fifty-second precinct of the Ninth Ward. What was the evidence as to this precinct? Mr. Canney, who was appointed as a Republican judge, testifies that one Edward Findley, a notorious gambler and policy man, a Democrat in politics [laughter], sent for him the night but one before the election and revealed to him a scheme concocted by Owsley and other Democratic politicians whereby they were going to carry the election by fraud for Tarsney and the Democratic ticket, and informed him that he had procured Owsley to appoint him a judge of election in the precinct, and promised him compensation if he would act. The man swears that he did act. He swears that when they went into the polling room on the morning of the election Findley and other Democratic heelers organized the board, and that during the entire day these men came frequently into the room and consulted there, although the law positively forbade their presence there. The very first thing they did was to take soap from their pockets and soap the windows, so as to destroy their transparency, not to protect the secrecy of the ballot, as some gentlemen have undertaken to say in this debate, for it is shown that where the ballots were prepared the voter could not possibly have been seen had the windows been undisturbed, but for the sole purpose of hiding the scoundrelism and villainy which they were about to perpetrate. [Applause.]

This witness further testifies that he went out at noon for dinner, and that when he came back he found that these election officers had abstracted 115 straight Republican ballots that had been voted, but not counted, from the ballot box, and that they went ahead and prepared the same number of straight Democratic ballots by writing thereon the initials of the judges and by copying off the number of the votes and the number of the registrations from the backs of the Republican ballots, and that when they had done this they put all of these Republican ballots in a basket and sent them out of the polling place, and then strung, counted, and subsequently returned these Democratic ballots for the Democratic candidates. That thereafter during the day 55 more Republican ballots were taken out, and after the same process of preparing, substituting, counting, and returning Democratic tickets in their place had been gone through with, the 55 Republican ballots were burned in the stove. He testified, too, that he saw these officers take a lot of Republican tickets that had been voted and cross off the names of certain Republican candidates for local offices thereon and write the names of the local Democratic candidates in their place and then string, count, and return the ballots according to this marking. Not only this, but he saw Morrison, a saloon keeper, one of the judges, go repeatedly to the poll books at various times during the day and copy off registration numbers onto straight Democratic ballots and hand them to another judge, who had them counted and strung whenever occasion presented itself. The same witness testified that toward the close of the polls in the evening they had prepared 25 or 30 other straight Democratic tickets, which they intended to count and return, taking out 25 or 30 ballots that had been lawfully cast and which were then in the ballot box, but that somebody suggested that the box would not stand it, and that thereupon they desisted, but took these 25 or 30 ballots that had been lawfully voted out of the box and twisted them into a bundle and threw them away.

Now, this man is corroborated from the beginning to the end of his testimony. Some gentlemen on the other side affirm that three of the Democratic judges denied these facts. What those judges said was that they did not know whether these things occurred or not; that they did not see them. That is what they said. These same gentlemen are now under indictment, and are about to be prosecuted for their crimes. One of the judges at this poll was appointed as a Republican judge, yet he swore that, although well advanced in years, he had never voted anything but the Democratic ticket in his life until at the spring election, when he had voted for the Republican candidate for mayor. [Laughter.] He swore that when he went away to dinner he left a large number of ballots with his initials on the back, and that when he returned he found that they had disappeared and that it excited his wonderment. It was during his absence, Canney swore, that these straight Democratic tickets were prepared and voted. He swore that he saw something like paper put into the stove by one of the judges. He did not know what it was, but that it made the place very hot. These were the Republican ballots which Canney says were burned. Not only this, but he swore that he was tremendously surprised at the very great majority shown by the returns for the local Democratic candidates at the precinct; that he was thunderstruck at the magnitude of the vote cast in favor of the Democratic ticket generally, for the reason that before the election he had talked with a good many old Democrats, who had told him that they were disgusted with the action of the Democratic party in Congress and discouraged by the hard times and that they were going to vote the Republican ticket, and that a great many of these men were ex-Confederate soldiers. This judge swears, too, that he saw one of the election officers down on his hands and knees in a feed bin in the room working with a lot of ballots. This is a judge whom Canney swears actually manipulated the ballots. An impartial witness, Mr. Speaker, looking through the glass late in the evening, at a place where the soap had rubbed off, saw one of these Democratic judges put ballots into the ballot box and run them in with the crank, by means of which the ballots were forced into the box. This he saw done repeatedly and at times when no voter had just voted or was engaged in the act of voting.

Mr. MAGUIRE. May I interrupt the gentleman by a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Is not that method of putting ballots into the box and marking them by a machine in the lid of the box the regular method at elections in Missouri?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Now, how do you account for Canney's testimony, assuming it to be true, showing that the Democratic ballots were "strung" without being put through that process?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. My dear sir, how do you account for the villainy of a great many dishonest transactions that you see in life? Canney is corroborated from the beginning to the end of his testimony. The evidence shows that many of the ballot boxes were broken and did not mark the ballots when voted.

Mr. MAGUIRE. But did he not enter into that conspiracy?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Certainly he did. Is it a new proposition to you, sir, as a lawyer, that a man may be tried and convicted and sent to the penitentiary upon the unsupported testimony of an accomplice?

Mr. MAGUIRE. But is he not a scoundrel?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Certainly he is; but he is sustained on this point and throughout by all the testimony in this case and by all the facts and circumstances. He is a scoundrel, testifying against himself. Do you deny the perpetration of fraud in this precinct?

Mr. MAGUIRE. I do deny Canney's testimony.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Do you deny the perpetration of fraud in that precinct?

Mr. MAGUIRE. I deny that there is any reasonableness in the statement that 115 ballots were strung and put in in that way.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Do you deny the perpetration of fraud in this precinct?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Oh, there were frauds there.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. There were frauds! Now tell this House in whose interest they were perpetrated.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Not in the interest of Mr. Tarsney.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Then tell this House whether the Democratic recorder of voters procured a fraudulent registration there in order to defeat the Democratic party. Did he appoint all the election officers from Democrats, and did he deny to the Republicans representation upon the board, in order that frauds might be perpetrated in the interest of the Republican party? Were the Republican witnesses to the count and the Republican challengers excluded from the precinct in order that frauds might be perpetrated against the Democrats? Why, the idea is preposterous.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Do you mean to say that there were not regular nominees of the Republican convention who got those fraudulent votes?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Yes, sir; I do. I mean to say, too, that the testimony of Canney, and the corroborating testimony, and the corroborating facts and circumstances that I have been mentioning, show beyond the shadow of a doubt that a vast number of illegal votes were returned at this precinct, and that they were every one of them returned for John C. Tarsney, and in my opinion it requires a great degree—I will not say of effrontery, but of assurance—for any man who has read the testimony in this case and who is familiar with the facts to rise in his place and state anything to the contrary. Mr. Speaker, what was the return made by the judges from this poll? Three hundred and sixty-three votes for Tarsney and 183 votes for Van Horn, a majority of 180 votes for Tarsney in a precinct which had gone Republican at a previous election, as the testimony shows. It is worthy of remark, Mr. Speaker, that it is shown by the report of the board of canvassers of the committee of public safety, made within a very few days after the election, that there were 20 fraudulently registered votes at this precinct.

Can any man doubt that the fraudulent votes at this poll were Democratic votes? Does not the organization of the election board show it? Does not the exclusion of the challengers and witnesses show it? Does not the testimony of Canney show it? Does not the corroborative evidence of Frenkle, the judge, to whose testimony I have referred, show it? Does not the testimony of the man who looked through the window and saw the frauds committed show it? Does not the fact that there was a much larger vote than usual, a vote vastly in excess of the usual vote at this precinct, show it? How can any man stand before this House and contend to the contrary?

But what is the answer that is made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr TAYLER] to all of this? I sought to "catechise" him, as he put it, while he was making his speech on yesterday, but he would not permit me to do so. He was making a speech that flowed along as smoothly and musically as a little brook, yet when he was brought face to face with a searching inquiry his speech became like unto a roaring cataract, and he objected to being "catechised." What was the explanation that the gentleman from Ohio made to this point? Why, that the committee had dealt too tenderly with Mr. Tarsney; that they ought to have taken Canney's testimony as true and counted the precinct 160 for Van Horn, instead of simply throwing it out from the count, as they did.

What fault have Mr. Tarnsey's friends on this floor to find with the committee which has thus treated him too tenderly; which has thus construed everything at this precinct against his opponent? We have sinned against ourselves. We have been too liberal in the exercise of charity. How our consciences smite us when we reflect upon the enormity of our offense! If the gentleman from Ohio insists upon it, I will yield to him in his contention and count this fifty-second precinct 160 for Van Horn. I am willing that this precinct shall be settled on the figures which he has presented to the House.

This plurality of 160 votes for Van Horn, however, is obtained solely by regarding the 170 Democratic tickets substituted for as many Republican tickets. But this man Canney also testified that the officers at this precinct went ahead during the whole day and fraudulently voted at intervals other and additional Democratic ballots, and that they threw away some 25 or 30 legal ballots at night. So, considering this circumstance, Van Horn's plurality at this poll would be much greater than 160 votes. Fancy, too, the gentleman from Ohio going down to Kansas City as a member of a subcommittee of Committee on Elections No. 2 to purge this precinct in the interest of the honest voters, and finding those 25 or 30 legal ballots that the officers threw away at that precinct on that night. [Laughter.] What kind of ballots were they, pray? Were they Democratic or Republican? There is nothing in the record to show, and the ballots are gone. How, then, would the gentleman purge them?

Now go to the other precincts. Here are three others—the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts of the Second Ward. What is the proof of fraud here? Why, sir, it is shown that in this ward some of the greatest registration frauds were committed. There were in the ward, according to the report of the canvassers who made a canvass right after the election, 1,011 falsely registered votes. Here is the record: Fifth precinct, 400; sixth precinct, 341; seventh precinct, 270. There was in these three precincts and in this fifty-second precinct of the Ninth Ward to which I have referred a grand total of 1,101 falsely registered voters, all of whom had voted at the election.

Now, let us look a little further. We find that we do not have to depend for proof of fraud simply upon the facts that there was great illegality in registration in this ward, that the election boards were wrongfully constructed, for the purpose of committing frauds, that the Republican challengers and witnesses were driven from the polls; here is an additional circumstance, one fraught with extraordinary significance; this ward polled 1,600 votes at this election—twice as many votes as it had polled at the preceding spring election—twice as many votes as it had polled at the preceding election for Congress in November, 1892, when Mr. Tarsney was a candidate.

Let us take the vote by precincts, that we may realize the enormous excess of votes returned in 1894 over those returned in 1892. In 1892 the total vote returned was as follows: Fifth precinct, 351; sixth precinct, 155; seventh precinct, 243. Now look, if you please, at the vote returned in 1894: Fifth precinct, 621; sixth precinct, 509; seventh precinct, 514. And yet, Mr. Speaker, a number of witnesses who were about the polls in these precincts during the entire day of the election in contest tell us that the attendance of the voters was very light, and that there was a great and unusual apathy there displayed by the people. How, then, can any reasonable mind reject the idea that this extraordinarily heavy vote returned in 1894 was the work of the corrupt officers of election? But here is another demonstration: There were found on the poll books of the ward over 600 names which were voted alphabetically, and all of which were marked on the books as the names of colored voters by the election officers. Is it possible that this could have occurred naturally? Why, sir, such a contention is preposterous! The contestee himself is finally compelled to admit that these votes were fraudulent. The minority concede it in their report. Even the gentleman from Ohio affirms it to be the case. But these alphabetical votes were not the only illegal votes cast and returned from this ward. They fall nearly 400 short of the total illegally registered vote cast here, as shown by the report of the canvassers, made right after the election was held. The record, too, is replete with evidence demonstrating that other and additional illegal votes were cast and returned.

Remember now, sir, that I am not simply contending that fraud was perpetrated, but that I am also insisting that it was committed in the interest of John C. Tarsney, and that its extent can be determined from the record as now made up with sufficient certainty to show that a plurality of legal votes at the election were cast for Colonel Van Horn. Did any of these 200 alphabetical votes cast and counted in the seventh precinct go to Mr. Van Horn? Were they equally divided between him and Mr. Tarsney? Why, sir, in this precinct Mr. Tarsney received 449 votes and Mr. Van Horn only 57, according to the returns. How, then, could Van Horn have received half of these 200 alphabetical ballots, as some gentlemen have had the temerity to contend he did? If he did not receive a single legal vote in the precinct he only received 57 in all out of the 200 fraudulent alphabetical votes which are admitted to have been cast.

So in the sixth precinct of the Second Ward it is admitted that Mr. Tarsney was returned 420 votes and Mr Van Horn only 84. Certainly there was not an equal division of the 200 fraudulent alphabetical votes between the two candidates here, because Mr. Van Horn falls short 16 votes on his half; and in making this calculation you must assume that he did not get a single legal vote in the ward, although the testimony shows that there were legal votes cast for him there.

Ah, Mr. Speaker, the thing is very plain. Every vote of the few votes returned for Van Horn in the sixth and seventh precincts were honestly cast for him. These alphabetical votes were, every one of them, cast, counted, and returned for John C. Tarsney and went to make up in part the enormous and fraudulent pluralities returned for him in these polling places.

Let us examine now the fifth precinct of this Second Ward, where 413 votes were returned for Mr. Tarsney and 201 for Mr. Van Horn, giving Mr. Tarsney 212 majority. Who received the 200 alphabetical and the other illegal votes which were cast and returned in this precinct? Right here I want to digress a while from the line of my argument to advert to some matters concerning which gentlemen upon the other side have spoken upon this floor. They have asserted, and have attempted to prove it (though they have nothing to show for it except the ex parte affidavit on which they seek to have this case reopened and new evidence taken), that fraud was committed for Mr. Van Horn as well as for Mr. Tarsney in this fifth precinct. In support of this contention they cite the fact that Mr. Van Horn ran ahead of his ticket about 130 votes, and Mr. Tarsney ran behind his ticket about the same number. Sir, this fact does not warrant any inference that fraud was practiced here for Van Horn. The election board here, as elsewhere, was constituted for Democratic frauds. There were none but Democratic officers on the board. The Republican challengers and witnesses were excluded from the poll. The precinct polled nearly twice as many votes as it had polled on any previous occasion. The mere fact that Mr. Van Horn ran ahead and that Mr. Tarsney ran behind their respective tickets does not prove that fraud was committed in the interest of Mr. Van Horn. It simply shows that not quite so much fraud was committed against him as was committed against the other candidates on the Republican ticket.

This, sir, is the solution of this whole matter.

I utterly repudiate and deny, too, the statements which have been made that Republicans were parties to the fraud practiced in this Second Ward; that there was a division of iniquity there; that both parties were responsible for the outrages there committed; and I am unwilling that John C. Tarsney shall pose before this House with an air of injured innocence as a man whose skirts are absolutely clean and whose party, if it committed any fraud at all, was careful to do it in such a way as not to affect the result of the election for Congressman, or to make him the beneficiary. This is not true in point of fact; and not being true, I do not hesitate to antagonize and denounce it.

What are the facts with respect to this matter? The facts are that there lived in this fifth precinct a man named Kreugar, who, as the testimony shows, posed as a Republican, but who often voted the Democratic ticket. There lived in the Second Ward also a man of precisely the same general character named Brennan.

These men were respectively the Republican candidates for justice of the peace and constable in this Second Ward. They had gotten the nomination by fraud and by overriding the primaries by Democratic aid. John May, whose political status I have already commented upon, and another pretended Republican, named Moran, gave Kruger and Brennan their support, and so did every Democratic conspirator at this election. This evidence, sir, from beginning to end, shows that all of the frauds that were perpetrated were designed for the benefit of the entire Democratic ticket, Mr. Tarsney included, with the exception of the pretended candidates of the Republican party for justice of the peace and constable. These men were, in the frauds practiced, run right up with the Democratic ticket, and there is not a single man in the whole community of Kansas City who honestly claims that John May, or any other man who committed the frauds, lifted his hand in behalf of the gentleman who is contesting for a seat here, and who now sits near me, and is listening to my argument in this case. There was no fraud whatever practiced in his behalf. This statement is clearly established by the evidence. I repudiate all allegations to the contrary absolutely and entirely. John May for Van Horn! Frauds practiced for the Republicans! Why, the affidavit of Wallace Miller, which was read in the hearing of the House the other day, during the remarks of my friend from Nebraska [Mr. STRODE], shows beyond any question what was the aim of this disreputable conspiracy and how it was carried out; shows that May superintended the preparation of the 400 alphabetical ballots which were manipulated the night before the election in the back room of Kruger's drug store, and that every single one of the ballots so prepared were straight Democratic ballots with Tarsney's name on them for Congress, except that they were scratched for Kruger for justice of the peace and Brennan for constable. It shows, too, that in all 300 alphabetical tickets with Tarsney's name on them were voted at the sixth precinct, where Miller was one of the judges, and that May came to the precinct on election day and urged the stuffing of the ballot box for Tarsney, for the reason, as he then and there stated, that this gentleman was running behind in the country. Once more, sir, the witness Bradbury swears that Jeffrey, a judge of the fifth precinct, told him after the election, in explaining why so large a vote was returned from that precinct, that May called and urged the casting and counting of additional ballots for Tarsney, and assigned as the necessity for such work that Tarsney was not running up to the expectation of his friends outside of Kansas City.

And yet gentlemen have the assurance to stand up on this floor, presuming that the members of this House have not read the testimony in this case, and assert that the fraud perpetrated was a copartnership affair entered into by both political parties in which Mr. Tarsney had no part and so cunningly devised that he was not even the beneficiary of it. Mr. Speaker, I have known in my experience as prosecuting attorney during two terms I had the honor of filling that office in my native county of hardened criminals being arraigned for crime in cases where their guilt was so plain that their counsel did not have the heart to make arguments in their behalf and where the jury returned verdicts of guilty without even leaving their box, and yet, when subsequently called upon by an impartial judge to state why judgment should not be passed upon them, these malefactors actually arose and in all seriousness protested to the court that they were innocent. [Laughter.]

But, sir, I saw on yesterday Herod out-Heroded. I saw the capstone put on the monument of effrontery. I saw, and I hope to God I may never see it again, a man whose very garments were reeking with the corruption of this election, arise upon the floor of this Chamber, and, holding in his hands muniments of title which were all discolored and dishonored by fraud, not only assert his own innocence, but also actually complain, with the air of a man who had been greatly wronged, that the report of the committee did not exonerate him from guilt. Aye, I saw him even turn upon his honest accusers and attempt to cover them with suspicion and to attach odium to the title of his honorable competitor.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a little further. This is a time for plain, frank speaking. Having arrived at my conclusions in the case by a careful, patient, and judicial examination of the law and the evidence, I have now all the zeal of the advocate, a zeal born of the conviction that my conclusion is a righteous one, and I therefore do not hesitate to speak with the utmost emphasis upon the grave and momentous question involved. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Tarsney] insists that he had no personal participation in these frauds, that he is not the beneficiary of them, and that he ought therefore to be whitewashed by the committee. What right has he to make such a statement as this? What equity is there in such a demand for exculpation? Bradbury's testimony shows, as will appear by the record, that he was a judge of election at one of the precincts in the Second Ward when Mr. Tarsney ran for Congress in 1892, and he swears that fraud was then committed at that precinct in the interest of Tarsney. Wallace G. Miller, whose solemn affidavit I have already called your attention to, which was read during the course of the remarks of my friend from Nebraska [Mr. STRODE], states that he was a judge of election at another precinct in this ward in 1892, and that gross frauds were then perpetrated at that precinct in Mr. Tarsney's interest, both by stuffing the ballot box and by illegal votes cast for him by repeaters.

It has thus been shown that frauds were perpetrated for John C. Tarsney at a previous election at which he was a candidate. Something more than this—here at the election in contest was a thoroughly organized and wide spread scheme to commit fraud at the polls in the interest of Mr. Tarsney and the entire Democratic ticket. It was organized long before the election. It was participated in by a great number of persons, nearly every one of whom was of his political household. It was carried on at a time when he was living in the very vicinage. I do not say that he knew all the particulars of the scheme, just how it was to operate or just how many fraudulent votes were to be cast and returned in his behalf; but I do say that it requires the utmost confidence in his veracity and his integrity to believe that he did not have an inkling of it in advance and that he did not permit it to proceed without interruption. One thing, however, I do know and can safely assert, and that is that he is the undoubted beneficiary of all this fraud, and that he stands here as the apologist and defender of Owsley, who was the principal conspirator in the whole infamous transaction.

Mr. Speaker, I remember an instance, early in the session of this Congress, where a distinguished Democratic gentleman, a resident of the great city of Chicago, who had been returned elected to the House, came upon this floor and said to the members of this body: "I have discovered that I was elected by fraud. I will not accept my seat." The House, acting on his honorable declaration and applauding this manly sentiment, seated his competitor. I point the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Tarsney] to-day to the conduct of this high-minded gentleman as a proud example which is in every way worthy of his emulation. [Applause.]

When the gentleman stands here and insists, as he has in his speech to-day and as he did also in the speech that he delivered before the committee, a copy of which has been laid on the desk of every member—when he stands here and insists that there were only 600 fraudulent ballots cast at the election, they being the 600 alphabetical ballots cast in the Second Ward, he does this right in the face of these vast fraudulent registrations, right in the face of the corrupt organization of these election boards, right in the face of the challengers and witnesses who were driven from the polls, right in the face of the testimony of Canney and its strong corroboration, right in the face of the report of the canvassers of the committee of public safety, right in the face of innumerable instances of men shown to have fraudulently registered and voted over and above the 600 alphabetical ballots, and right in the face of much other evidence which lack of time will prevent me from referring to, but which is strong and convincing.

Now, the gentleman has read a dispatch here in the presence of the House to-day, a dispatch which announced that yesterday on the trial of John May, who was this afternoon convicted by the jury for his participation in these crimes and sentenced to two years in the penitentiary, as appears from a telegram just received [applause], that some startling revelations affecting this contest had been made. This dispatch, it seems, came from the counsel of the gentleman, from his paid lawyers in this contest, who stood by him in the taking of testimony in the case. The dispatch was intended to stampede a House composed of men of intelligence, with well-balanced minds, men who are most of them lawyers, and who at least lay some claim to statesmanship. It came here just at a time which the senders probably supposed would be opportune. What is the dispatch? A falsehood on its face. It states that the testimony of certain election judges, given yesterday as witnesses on May's trial, showed that at one of the precincts—I believe it was the fifth precinct in the Second Ward—the total number of fraudulent alphabetical ballots voted was 400, and that they were equally divided between Tarsney and Van Horn, each of these gentlemen having had cast and returned for him from this precinct 200 such ballots.

Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand the return from this precinct as it appears in the evidence, and it shows that Mr. Van Horn got in all only 201 votes in the precinct. So, if the statements in this telegram contained are true, that he got 200 alphabetical fraudulent votes, he must only have received 1 legal vote at this precinct. I therefore now take the opportunity of congratulating Colonel Van Horn on his popularity with the legal and bona fide voters of this precinct. [Laughter.]

Now, I want to ask this House, both sides of it, whether it is going to break into a stampede on account of such transparent falsehood as is thus wired into this Chamber. Why, I imagine that even the distinguished gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS], who the other day made a speech on this contest without having previously gone to the trouble to examine either into the law or the facts of the case, and who, therefore, saw very clearly that the committee was greatly in error—I doubt very much whether even he would want to base any action on such testimony as this. This, notwithstanding he wants to turn down this committee, which has painstakingly and conscientiously followed page after page of the voluminous testimony, investigated the law carefully, and tried hard to reach a just conclusion. I am wondering, too, sir, when this vote comes to be taken, if we shall see in this Chamber the manifestation of a very singular mental phenomenon. I wonder if it will turn out that every member on the other side of the House will take precisely the same view of this case, and vote in exactly the same way, and if, when you come to this side of the House, you will find there is quite a diversity of opinion, and that there will be a lack of unanimity in the vote. If this takes place, I should like some gentleman to tell me how it is to be accounted for. I will not be able to account for it myself except upon one hypothesis. I shall watch with some little curiosity the calling of this roll to see just how many gentlemen on the Republican side are caught by the kind of chaff which has been scattered here by the friends of the sitting member.

Mr. Speaker, I think I have said enough to demonstrate that all the fraud that was committed at this election was in the interest of John C. Tarsney. Now I also assert that the election of Mr. Van Horn is established by the evidence already in the record, and that hence there is no possible reason for taking new testimony to purge the vote.

The committee could from the record have so reported, but inasmuch as they could not purge the entire vote of certain precincts, and throwing the whole of these precints out produced the same result, and was clearly warranted by law, they preferred to adopt the latter instead of the former method.

Now, for the evidence that the record establishes the election of Van Horn. As I have said, sir, the testimony shows that there was 180 plurality returned for Mr. Tarsney at the fifty-second precinct of the Ninth Ward. If I were to count the vote in this precinct, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] wants me to count it, for Mr. Van Horn, there would be no question about my proposition, but I am content to simply follow the action of the committee and throw the entire poll out, and this takes 180 votes off from the returned majority for Mr. Tarsney. Then I proceed to the seventh precinct of the Second Ward, where these alphabetical ballots were cast. It is admitted that there were 200 of these ballots in this precinct, in which precinct Mr. Van Horn only got 57 votes. I believe that those 57 votes were all legal votes, and that all the alphabetical ballots were cast and returned for Mr. Tarsney. They helped to make up his enormous vote of 449 at this precinct. I strike these 200 alphabetical ballots off of Mr. Tarsney's plurality. I go next to the sixth precinct of the Second Ward, where there were only 84 votes returned for Mr. Van Horn, and where it is admitted that there were 200 alphabetical votes cast and returned. I strike these also off from Mr. Tarsney's majority, for Mr. Van Horn did not get one of them. They are all included in the tremendous vote of 420 returned for his opponent in this precinct. I go then to the fifth precinct of the Second Ward, where, as already stated, there were only 201 votes returned for Van Horn, and I strike off from Tarsney's plurality the 200 alphabetical votes found here, which, I insist, the evidence clearly shows were all cast and returned for him by the officers of election.

Mr. Speaker, the result of all this is that I have stricken off 780 votes from Mr. Tarsney, and inasmuch as he is only returned elected by a plurality of 745 votes it necessarily follows that Van Horn is elected by 35 plurality. Now, add to this, sir, only one-half of the difference between the 600 alphabetical votes and the total number of the persons marked registered and voted on the poll book of the Second Ward and the fifty-second precinct of the Ninth Ward, but who were fraudulently registered, as shown by the reports of the canvassers of the board of public safety, and Van Horn's plurality is increased 250, making his total plurality 285.

This addition is of course made, sir, upon the theory that all of the fraud at the election was committed in the interest of Tarsney; but who doubts this to be true?

But, Mr. Speaker, I am not yet through with this demonstration. It is not denied that the alphabetical voters in each of these three precincts of the Second Ward were consecutively numbered from 1 to 200 on the poll books and ballots. Now, I hold in my hand a list of persons whose voting and ballot numbers are all higher than 200 who were marked as registered and voting on the poll books of these three precincts in the Second Ward, and who are clearly proven in the evidence, outside of the report of the canvassers of the board of public safety, to have been either fraudulently registered or else fraudulently voted in these precincts. This is only a partial list, but it aggregates 146 names. If these names are duplicated in the report of the canvassers, this only shows the reliability of their report and the accuracy of the figuring I have done upon it as my basis.

Why, the gentlemen argue as though the committee had exhausted their resources in this matter; as though its report embraced a complete statement of all the fraud which the record discloses to have been practiced in behalf of Tarsney. Not at all. They simply analyzed the vote of four of the fraud-ridden precincts and then stopped short, for the reason that Van Horn's election clearly appeared. Why should they have taken the time and trouble to proceed further? Mr. Speaker, I say here, on my honor as a man and a Representative, that if we had given an examination to the other precincts and analyzed them I am satisfied that Mr. Van Horn would have appeared elected, not by the mere plurality of 375 given in the report, but by a plurality of not less than 1,200 to 1,800 votes.

Now, let me call your attention to a matter which will demonstrate this to be the fact. In the Second precinct of the first Ward there were 27 alphabetical votes found to be cast and returned. Tarsney got 151 votes, Van Horn 49, a plurality for Tarsney of 102 votes. In this precinct there were fraudulent registrations, wrongfully constituted election boards, and excluded challengers and witnesses to the count. Do you not believe that Tarsney got every one of these alphabetical votes? Are you not sufficiently satisfied as to this fact without requiring the committee to go into the ballot box at this precinct to establish it? Again, in the twenty-seventh precinct of the Sixth Ward, where they ejected the challenger and the witness to the count, and where all the judges and clerks constituting the election board were Democrats, there were 42 alphabetical votes cast and returned. Here the vote was returned—Tarsney 259, Van Horn only 78; plurality for Tarsney, 181. Can any human being contend that these fraudulent ballots, registered by Democrats, and voted, counted, and returned by Democratic election officers, who had excluded Republican challenger and witness from their polling room, were so voted, counted, and returned for Mr. Van Horn? If this was not done, for whom were they counted and returned? For John C. Tarsney.

But, Mr. Speaker, I have still something in reserve. I am now going to read to you the record of three precincts as they appear in the evidence. Mark you, these are additional precincts to those which have been analyzed by the committee. In each one of them there was a fraudulent registration, in each one of them the election officers were all Democrats, in each one of them there was no Republican challenger or witness to the count. Now, listen to the reading: Twenty-eighth precinct, Sixth Ward; fraudulent registration, 116 votes; 141 votes returned for Tarsney, 62 for Van Horn; plurality for Tarsney, 79. Forty-ninth precinct, Ninth Ward; fraudulent registration, 118 votes; 255 votes returned for Tarsney, 137 for Van Horn; plurality for Tarsney, 118. Fifty-third precinct, Ninth Ward; fraudulent registration, 179 votes; 274 votes returned for Tarsney, 219 for Van Horn; plurality for Tarsney, 55. And so I might go on through this record indefinitely and show you the wide and extended character of these frauds. Do you ask your committee, who have devoted themselves earnestly and intelligently to the analysis of certain of these precincts, to go into an examination of the balance of them, when there is already proof of fraudulent votes to the extent I have stated, and when the result of a further examination will evidently only serve to increase the plurality of the contestant?

I had intended, Mr. Speaker, to devote some time to showing that Mr. Tarsney is not entitled to open up the case and take new testimony, for the reason that he has been guilty of negligence. But I find that I am unable to do so, and inasmuch as this point has already been very ably discussed by the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LONG] I shall pass it by. I wish, however, to make a single observation. There has never been an instance since Congress convened under the present Constitution in which the House has opened up a contest for the taking of new testimony in behalf of a sitting member who was guilty of negligence in failing to take his testimony at the proper time. And as to purging the vote, no case can be found where the House has gone outside of the record as made up to purge it at the instance of a member who has been guilty of laches, or where there has not existed a very strong probability that the voluntary taking of testimony by the House could readily enable the legal to be segregated from the illegal vote.

Mr. Tarsney, sir, has "sinned away his day of grace." When the testimony for Van Horn closed, he and his lawyers knew very well what it contained. They knew all these facts that I have called attention to had been established. They knew that the testimony showed the election officers to have practiced the most unblushing frauds, including the casting, counting, and returning of these alphabetical ballots. They knew as a proposition of law that on account of this fraud the returns of these officers were tainted and were not admissible to prove the result of the election. They, therefore, knew that the vote of the precincts would have to be thrown out unless it was otherwise shown what the true vote was and for whom these alphabetical ballots were cast. Why then did Mr. Tarsney not inspect these ballots and prove for whom they were cast when he came to take his testimony in the case?

What answer is made to this? It is said that there is a law of the State of Missouri forbidding the inspection of ballots in contests for a seat in Congress, and that Tarsney could therefore not take testimony concerning them. There is nothing of the kind. The law of the State of Missouri simply provides for an inspection of the ballots in local contests; but it does not go further and prohibit an inspection in contests for a seat in this House. You do not have to override the constitution and the laws of the State of Missouri to get an inspection of these ballots. Indeed, you act in conformity with the law and the constitution when you obtain such inspection. The Constitution of the United States creates a Congress; it declares that each House shall be the judge of the election, qualifications, and return of its own members; and it provides that the Constitution and the laws made in pursuance thereof shall be the supreme law of the land, and shall be binding on the judges of the States, anything in the constitution or in the laws of the State to the contrary notwithstanding.

In pursuance of the Constitution of the United States and of its right to purge itself of unlawful membership, Congress passed a statute providing for the institution of contests, for the serving of a notice, the serving of an answer, for the taking of testimony before certain designated officers, and for the sealing and return of that testimony and its opening by the Clerk of the House. What more is needed? No local law is necessary to put this statute of the United States into force. The very moment an officer is selected by the parties in a contest to take testimony he becomes an officer of the United States, and it is expressly provided by the statute that he shall have an inspection of ballots. It is not necessary that Congress shall be in session and make an order for inspection in order that it may be obtained and if in this case the contestant and the officer taking testimony had made application for an inspection of the ballots, and it had been denied, he could have gone into a local court, and on proper showing it would have enforced the inspection, because the court would have recognized the supremacy of the Constitution of the United States and of the laws made in pursuance thereof in such matters. In this way John C. Tarsney could have secured an inspection of the ballots in question and could have gotten his evidence into the record.

Why, sir, this method is not a novel one; it has been resorted to on two occasions during the present session of Congress. In the case of Mitchell vs. Walsh, now pending before your committee, the notary public before whom the testimony had been taken refused to certify up the testimony, and Mr. Mitchell went into the local courts of New York for a writ of mandate compelling him to do so. Mr. Walsh raised the question of jurisdiction, but the court decided in favor of Mitchell and mandated the officer, and, in compliance with the mandate, he sent up the evidence, and it is now before your committee. All of these proceedings, Mr. Speaker, occurred before Congress assembled. So, in the case of Coleman vs. Buck, decided the other day by the committee in favor of the sitting member, the contestant appeared before the committee and asked that an order for the production of certain poll books in the parish of Jefferson, in the State of Louisiana, be entered. The order was made by the committee. Thereupon the contestant went down there and asked for the poll books, and the legal custodian of them refused to produce them. The contestant then went into the courts and prayed for a writ of mandate in the premises, and the courts of the Democratic State of Louisiana issued that mandate and compelled the production of those books, and the committee inspected them during the argument of the case.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that John C. Tarsney did not want to go into these ballots at that time. He has been guilty of gross and inexcusable negligence, and he can not come in here now and ask that this case shall be reopened and this committee shall take additional testimony, which can only serve "to make assurance doubly sure," or "to do a righteous thing in a righteous way," to borrow the language employed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] when that gentleman was upon the floor the other day and practically admitted that the whole evidence demonstrated that all the fraudulent votes had been cast and returned for Mr. Tarsney, though he had to part from his Democratic brethren in order to make this admission. When he went further and said that he believed that if his plan of inspecting the ballots was carried out it would demonstrate the correctness of the very thing claimed by the majority of the committee, to wit, the election of Mr. Van Horn, he gave his entire case away. And when he went still further and said that the committee had erred by dealing too tenderly with Mr. Tarsney in not counting the fifty-second precinct for Van Horn he simply made it impossible for anyone to accept his view of this case without parting company with reason and good sense. The gentleman is a good Republican and a good lawyer. I will not say that he founded his report and his speech upon mere pique, but I will say that he founded it on a mere pride of opinion which is utterly unsustained by the evidence and the facts in this case.

Now, I hurry on, Mr. Speaker, to discuss another phase of this case. It is proposed by the gentleman to purge the vote by inspecting and offering in evidence the ballots themselves. I insist that this can not be lawfully done. It is a well-established legal proposition that when ballots have passed through the corrupt hands of dishonest election officers they are incompetent evidence. I shall not stop here to split hairs upon the proposition to consider whether such ballots are incompetent or merely incredible, because, for the purposes of my argument, and for the purposes of the action of this House, the result is the same whether they are the one or the other. I recognize the difference theoretically, of course, between competency and credibility. A man may be a characterless vagabond; it may be shown that he has every inducement to commit perjury; it may be shown that he has been actually bribed to commit that detestable crime; it may be shown that his statements are utterly at variance with all the direct and all the circumstantial evidence in the case, and yet, if he desires to do it, he has a right to go upon the witness stand and tell his miserable story. He is a competent witness, but is he a credible one? Would you believe his story when it is told? I say, therefore, that I do not care whether the law goes to the extent of saying that these ballots are incompetent or merely holds that when received they are incredible.

Do you believe, gentlemen of the House, that the officers who handled these ballots were honest men? If they committed fraud in one way, what assurance is there that they did not commit it in another? Fraud is multifarious. If it possesses any one quality in a marked degree, that quality is versatility. It is in its very nature ingenious. It baffles inquiry and avoids detection. These disreputable election officers are proven to have committed a variety of frauds. Some of them have been discovered. Do you know that you have discovered them all? Who can draw an arbitrary line and declare that they proceeded with their villainy just so far and no farther?

Mr. Speaker, everything that they touched was polluted. And to require this committee to go down into a ballot box which they handled and undertake to distinguish between the right and the wrong which they committed is to require them to perform a task which it is not within the power of any man within the hearing of my voice to accomplish.

But I pass on to the discussion of the proposition upon which the gentlemen of the minority base all the clamor which they have raised about the purging of the vote. I am surprised to see some confusion of thought with reference to this matter on the part of certain gentlemen on this side of the Chamber whom I have generally esteemed to be very accurate thinkers. What is this proposition of the minority and of our friend from Ohio with respect to the purging of these ballots? Now, I come to the real point at issue here; all else has been prefatory. What I have said heretofore has been simply in the nature of an approach to the stumbling block over which gentlemen who usually walk erect seem to have fallen. Their proposition is this: That the whole of the fraud practiced at this election was committed pursuant to a simple and single plan, which consisted in falsely registering voters before the election and then in the election officers voting these falsely registered voters, alphabetically and otherwise, and in their voting legal voters who were lawfully registered, but who did not actually vote; that the officers of election wrote down upon the poll books voting numbers opposite to the names both of the actual voters and of those fraudulently voted, and copied the proper and corresponding voting numbers upon the ballots before they were deposited in the ballot box; that they then counted and returned these ballots precisely as they appeared after thus going into the box, or counted and returned them "honestly," if I may be permitted to use such an expression with reference to any act performed by the vagabonds who conducted this election. [Laughter.]

Now, the gentlemen insist that, with the poll books and these ballots before them, they can easily pick out the ballot voted by each person whose name appears as a voter upon the poll books, and by inspecting it ascertain for whom it was cast, and that then, by referring to the evidence, they can find out whether the person who cast the ballot was a legal or a fraudulent voter, and that in this way the legal can be "segregated" from the fraudulent ballots and the entire vote purged.

Mr. Speaker, I deny the major premise. Why, sir, in listening to the gentleman from Ohio you have but to concede his major and his minor premise, and his conclusion flows from them as irresistibly as the waters of Niagara. But the trouble with the argument of the gentleman from Ohio is that his major premise is wrong, and hence he necessarily errs in his conclusion. This plan pointed out was one of the ways in which frauds were committed at this election; it was indeed the main way; but it was not the sole and exclusive way. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] practically admits this, for in the somewhat remarkable view which he has submitted to the House in writing in this case he says:

> Substantially all of the fraud shown to have existed in the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts of Kansas City was expressed in the padding of the registration roll and poll book. Probably a thousand illegal votes were cast in these precincts. But each of these ballots, so fraudulently cast, represented a name on the poll book; each had its voting number and its corresponding name.
> When the count was completed, and the ballots and poll books were turned over to their proper custodian—the recorder of voters—the fraud was completely perpetrated and its perpetrators had exhausted their fraud.
> It is true that there is evidence of other fraud in these precincts, but it is trivial and could not for a moment, standing alone, be deemed of sufficient gravity to call for a rejection of the entire return.

And on this subject of purging the vote, mark with what timidity and caution the gentleman expresses himself; like a blind man he feels his way, not exactly certain whether he is on the right track:

It is clear to me—

That is, if his peculiar idea is adopted—if you will follow the will-o'-the-wisp which he has pursued away from the beaten highway, you will become involved in the morasses just as he has become involved—

It is clear to me that these precincts, in which it is shown that frauds were perpetrated, can be substantially purged of their fraud and a conclusion be reached, fairly satisfactory, as to the honest vote of the several precincts. We can thus, with reasonable definiteness—

And so he goes on as though in his own mind he had a mental reservation always present.

Now, where is my evidence that those who committed the frauds at this election adopted other methods than the methods which the gentleman says they adopted? Why, sir, let us go watch those officers of election taking the 170 Republican ballots out of the box and substituting 170 Democratic ballots in their place at the precinct in regard to which Canney testifies. This was not done in pursuance of these exclusive methods. This was a departure from the plan. Go and observe this man Morrison, grinding ballots into the box at the same precinct, as he is shown to have done by the testimony of an impartial witness. Go find the voter who testifies that he was the seventh man who voted at this poll and that he found himself registered on the poll list as number 300. Does this look as if these gentlemen had been keeping the poll list exactly right—with mathematical correctness?

Now, leave this precinct and go to the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts. In the fifth precinct we find this state of facts: A witness has solemnly sworn—and no man has dared to contradict him—that he went into this precinct (this is where some of these alphabetical ballots were returned); that he handed his Republican ballot to the judge; that the judge looked at the poll book and said, "Yes, sir; you are all right." The man suspected him. He knew what kind of gentlemen were in charge of the poll, and he had a curiosity to see what would become of his ballot. The judge did not put the ballot into the ballot box, so the man stood and waited. The election officer said to him, "All right; you may go." But the man was a little pertinacious; he still stood there waiting to see whether they would deposit his ballot in the box. Then they said to him again, "You may go, sir." Still he lingered. The judge then put the ballot into the top of the ballot box, but failed to turn the crank so that it would be passed into the interior to its place with the other ballots. The man still stood there with his eye upon the ballot, and the judge then peremptorily dismissed him. So he finally went out, but he does not know to this day whether the ballot got into the box or not. Let it be remembered, sir, in connection with this incident, that the law of Missouri required that this ballot should be instantly deposited in the box in the presence of the voter. The species of fraud here doubtless committed, Mr. Speaker, is certainly of a different character from the species which gentlemen claim was exclusively employed at this election.

Now go into the sixth precinct for a moment. Here a witness swears solemnly—his affidavit was read in the hearing of the House the other day—that there were 100 extra alphabetical ballots put into the box on election day in addition to those prepared the night before. He says that all day the judges took the spoiled ballots and voted solid Democratic ballots in their places. What are the spoiled ballots. They are what are otherwise known as rejected ballots—ballots which can not be used and are thrown out. In this case the judges did not simply throw out the ballots, but substituted straight Democratic ballots in their places.

Now, we will go to the seventh precinct and examine the evidence of John L. Corum. His testimony appears in the record. He is a respectable man and a credible witness. He states that he prepared and handed to the election officer a straight Republican ballot; that he saw the officer to whom he gave the ballot hold it in his hand, and at the same time he distinctly saw another judge put a different ballot in the box in its stead. This kind of fraud is not included in this "exclusive plan" which you are going to purge. How are you going to correct a matter of this kind? I ask you to remember that I am simply giving fragments of the testimony upon this branch of the subject. It is utterly impossible, within any reasonable time, for me to go into it in detail and point out the numerous varieties of frauds practiced by these officers of election. I am simply giving an instance here and there to prove the falsity of the gentlemen's basic proposition.

Now, Mr. Olsen, the chairman of the Republican committee, was approached two or three days after the election by a man who gave him to understand that some Republican ballots could be found by an investigation under a board sidewalk near this seventh precinct. He went down there, got a crowbar, and pried up a part of the pavement, and the first thing he discovered was a Republican ballot. It was a ballot that had apparently been voted; it had on it the initials of the judges, the number of the registration, and the poll number as well, and was folded just as tickets are which have been through the ballot box. On examining the poll book of this precinct it was found that the voting and registration numbers on this ballot were those of Peter Green, a voter at the election.

Mr. Green was called as a witness, and remembered distinctly having voted the ballot. Mr. Speaker, this Republican ballot never was counted or returned by the election officers at this precinct. It was unquestionably taken out of the ballot box by them. What, then, was substituted and counted in its place? Evidently a Democratic ballot. But, oh; our friends say this incident does not destroy our theory. You have proof in the record in this case that this Republican ballot was abstracted and the Democratic ballot substituted. When you have proof of this kind of course we will not attempt to count such a ballot. Ah, but, Mr. Speaker, how about the other instances, the enormous numbers of other ballots that have evidently been treated in precisely the same way, and in reference to which evidence has not been taken? Who knows how many of these ballots went through that same process? If these officers of election would perpetrate such a fraud in the case of Peter Green, would they not be very likely to perpetrate it in numerous other instances? What would you do in a case of this kind? I give the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] five minutes in which to answer this question.

Mr. TAYLER. Mr. Speaker, the question propounded by the gentleman from Indiana is entirely characteristic of his way of arguing propositions. I can not expect to escape any more than any other gentleman on the floor of the House his mode of speaking.

When I answer an inquiry the gentleman sees fit to propound to me on the floor of the House, I will not permit the gentleman's mental operations to put a limit upon my mental operations, and when he puts a concrete and important question—important in this case to me—and tells me plainly that he gives me five minutes in which I shall answer it, I repudiate the invitation and decline it. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has succeeded in invoking applause from the other side of the House, but not a single particle of applause in his own political household.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana (continuing). I stand for the rights of individuals——

Mr. MILES. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana (continuing). I am not criticising the gentleman from Ohio simply because he sees fit to go with the other side. He has a right to do as he sees proper in that matter. But I am attacking the proposition he lays down.

Mr. DOVENER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the gentleman——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I decline to be interrupted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is entitled to the floor and declines all interruption.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. But when the gentleman from Ohio says that in the five minutes allotted to him——

Mr. MILES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I can not yield to the gentleman, and decline to be interrupted further.

Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Ohio is given five minutes' time in which to answer my question and does not even attempt to do so, I apprehend it is because he sees the weakness of his cause. Sir, I wish to get before this House the folly of the proposition here presented, that we shall go outside of the record as now made up, and attempt the impossible task of getting down on our knees in this labyrinth of fraud and separating the little which is lawful from the great mass which is corrupt. I gave the gentleman time in which to answer my inquiry. I did this for a purpose. He is a lawyer, a person trained in habits of thought. He has read carefully the 1,000 pages of testimony in this case and the briefs of the counsel. He has listened to the oral argument and has given to the questions of law and of fact involved much thought and reflection. Finally, he has reported his views to the House in writing, and made a speech in support of these views on this floor. In this speech, in response to my questions, he virtually gave his contention away, and now, after all this preparation, he finds himself unable to answer the simple interrogatory which I have put to him. This shows the inherent weakness of his cause. I have no desire to be offensive to the gentleman; I am contending for what I believe to be the truth. He is at liberty to interrogate me at any time. I challenge contradiction, for I feel that I am in the right.

Let me put an inquiry to you gentlemen, you who are going to vote for the substitute resolution—let me put it to you and ask you in the time that intervenes between now and the taking of the vote to answer it if you can, even to your own satisfaction. Suppose a man by the name of John Jones to have lived in precinct 5 of Ward No. 2; that he was a legally qualified and registered voter in that precinct; that he went to the polls on election day and received a ticket from the election officers and stepped into the booth to prepare it for voting. It was a wide piece of paper, having printed on it, side by side, first the Republican, next the Democratic, next the Populist, and next the Prohibition ticket. He drew a straight line with his lead pencil through all of these except the Republican. This made of it a Republican ballot. He then walked up to the judge of election and handed it to him that it might be put into the ballot box. They put his voting number down right on the poll book and copied it correctly, together with his registration number, upon the back of the ballot.

Now, suppose that, as with the ballot of this man Corum, the election officers did not put it into the box, but instead put in a Democratic ticket, and John Jones did not happen to see through the legerdemain whereby they made the change. Or suppose that they put his ticket into the box, but when they came to count it they did as they did in the fifty-second precinct of the Ninth Ward, threw it out and counted, tallied, and returned a straight Democratic ticket in its place. Or suppose they just took a piece of india rubber and rubbed out the mark over the Democratic ticket and drew a lead pencil mark over the Republican ticket, thus converting it into a Democratic ballot. Now, suppose my friend from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] goes down to Kansas City with his friends of the minority to purge this precinct by an inspection of the ballots. They open the ballot box to purge it in the interest of free and fair elections, with Mr. Tarsney retaining his seat in the House in the meantime, as he has already retained it for half the term, drawing a salary that rightfully belonged to that man [pointing to Mr. Van Horn]. They come to the name of this man John Jones. They take the poll book and get his voting number, and they find this number correctly written on the ballot. Will they not find it to be a Democratic ballot? Will they not have to so count it? There is nothing to show that the fraudulent change was made. All appears to be regular upon the face of the poll book and the ballot. John Jones did not see any tampering with his ticket. They do not propose to take verbal testimony down there and call him and interrogate him as to how he actually voted. They simply want to get into the ballot box and inspect the ballots.

Now, I ask you, gentlemen, how can you tell whether these rascally judges left that ballot as the voter handed it in or whether they altered it in any one of the various ways that I have suggested?

Who ventures to draw an arbitrary line and say that these officers went just so far in their villainy and then stopped and did not go a step beyond? Who dares to say they may not have committed one form of fraud as well as the other—that they did not do so? Who does not see at a glance that there is but one path of safety to pursue in this matter, and that is to take the record as it is already made up, as it is left by the negligence of Mr. Tarsney, and reach your conclusion on the ample demonstration of his defeat therein contained, or, if you prefer, by invoking the well-established principle of law that where there is no competent evidence offered to purge a fraudulent poll then you must of necessity throw it out? There is nothing wrong about throwing out a poll that is tinctured with fraud. You are not to do it, of course, when there is any evidence in the record by which it may be purged; but there is an unbroken line of decisions, many of them made by the House, that where there is no such evidence at hand the doctrine of rejection should be applied promptly and without hesitation, and that to do so is not simply the law of necessity but the law of justice and of right. It rests not simply in reason but also in authority.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary that I should consume any more of my time in the discussion of this case. I have simply this to say to the House in conclusion:

The question before you for consideration to-day is not whether Mr. Tarsney is a pleasant and sociable gentleman. It is not a question whether you have agreeable friendships with him which you dislike to see disrupted; whether you hate to see him humiliated, whether he is a Union soldier or a Confederate soldier or whether he was ever a soldier at all; whether he is a Protestant or a Catholic; whether he is a Republican or a Democrat; but the sole question for every man in this Chamber to consider on his oath is, Who is lawfully entitled, under the law and the evidence, to occupy the seat in contest? I hope and believe this House will make this the sole criterion by which this controversy is to be determined.

Your committee has certainly attempted to do its duty during the present session. It has considered innumerable matters of law and fact, which were preliminary to the merits of the various contested election cases before it, and has disposed of them all. It has reported in the McClellan case, confirming that gentleman in his seat. It has reported in the contested election case of Campbell against Miner, in favor of the contestee. It has already decided in favor of Mr. Buck, the Democratic sitting member, as against Mr. Coleman, the contestant, because, under the law and facts, whatever may have been its misgivings as to the extent of the fraud undoubtedly practiced at the election, it felt that it could not honestly reach any other conclusion. It has considered the pending case, and brought it into your presence. It has advanced far in the determination of the case of Mr. Boatner.

The voluminous testimony in the case I am now discussing has been taken up and read with painstaking attention, the briefs examined, the arguments carefully heard, the questions of law laboriously examined, and the whole case conscientiously considered. The committee has burned its midnight oil unstintingly in the matter. There has all along been a disposition to be fair to Mr. Tarsney. I, myself, after I had voted for the proposition to report back unfavorably his resolution to open this case, realizing that he had been guilty of negligence, but, nevertheless, desiring, if practicable, to heed the voice of the honest voters, if they could be ascertained, went to two or three of my colleagues on the committee and suggested the reconsideration of our action to report against him that we might read the testimony and briefs and hear the argument on the case and thus be better able to come to a correct conclusion in the matter. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] not being home when I called upon him, I addressed him a letter in which I acquainted him with my desire. This reconsideration, sir, was thereafter moved and carried, and further action on the resolution postponed until the testimony and briefs could be read and the argument heard. Mr. Speaker, the additional light thus gained not only confirmed the original opinion as to the negligence of Mr. Tarsney, but also satisfied us thoroughly that he had been defeated and that the opening up of the case for further testimony would be a serious mistake—a thing both unnecessary and unjust.

The question, sir, now is whether, after having authorized the committee to investigate this case, the House will adopt the report which is made to it after this careful and conscientious examination, or whether it will reject it at the instance of the minority and of a gentleman on the committee who insists on taking new testimony, which he declares will, when taken, prove that the conclusion arrived at in the report is entirely correct. If you pass this resolution for a reopening the committee will go down to Kansas City on its "fool's errand" and do the very best it possibly can to carry out your wishes, but this additional labor thus imposed upon it simply means that there is to be delay in hearing the other cases now pending before it. The contestants in these cases, entitled to have their titles promptly passed upon, must rap in vain for admission to the committee room, and the contestees who are anxious to have their rights adjudicated must endure their suspense for a while longer. Are you prepared to say to this already overworked committee that instead of taking up these cases one by one and examining them in full committee in an impartial manner and without regard to political lines, by reason of the additional labor which you impose these cases, in order to get them decided within a reasonable time, must be farmed out to subcommittees, decided largely upon hearsay, and brought into the House without that careful investigation which is absolutely essential if complete justice is to be done?

Mr. Speaker, I trust not.

Sir, if ever there was a case before a legislative body in which the right of the contestant was clearly proven, in my humble opinion it is this very case.

I say it again, even at the risk of too great repetition, that if this House votes for the substitute resolution and requires us to take testimony to purge these polls of their dishonest ballots it will simply be unjust to the committee, unjust to the contestant, and unjust to the good people of Kansas City. It will of course inure to the benefit of the contestee by enabling him to retain for a while a seat to which he was never elected and to pocket its emoluments, but ultimately you will be obliged to render precisely the same decision which every consideration of honor and of justice imperatively requires that you shall render now.

I thank the House for the attention it has given me. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution offered by the committee and on the substitute resolution offered by the minority. I suppose there is no objection to that.

Mr. MAGUIRE. There is no objection.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the case of Robert T. Van Horn against John C. Tarsney be recommitted to the Committee on Elections No. 2 for further consideration.

Resolved, That additional evidence be taken in said case, under such rules and in such manner as shall be adopted and prescribed therefor by the said committee, such additional evidence to be confined to the condition and custody of the ballots cast in the second, fifth, sixth, seventh, twenty-seventh, and fifty-second precincts of Kansas City in the Congressional election of 1894; to the segregation of the illegal from the legal ballots in such precincts, and to the recount of the legal ballots cast in such precincts for Representative in Congress, and to include also duly certified copies of all poll books of such precincts not now in evidence.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, it will save time to demand the yeas and nays at once. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 110, nays 163, not voting 82; as follows:

[Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the original resolutions, which the Clerk will report.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That John C. Tarsney was not elected to the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Fifth Congressional district of the State of Missouri, and is not entitled to a seat in the House.

Resolved, That Robert T. Van Horn was elected to the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Fifth Congressional district of the State of Missouri, and that he be admitted to his seat.

The resolutions were adopted.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted was laid on the table.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. Van Horn, is present and desires to take the oath.

Mr. Van Horn, escorted by Mr. BURTON of Missouri, appeared and took the oath, which was administered by the Speaker.

CUBA.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I presented a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs in regard to our relations to Cuba. So many gentlemen have asked that a proposition be made to the House that the resolutions be taken up and acted upon now, that, in compliance with that request, and also in obedience to the instruction which I received from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to urge the consideration of the report at the earliest moment possible, I will ask unanimous consent of the House to call up for consideration and action the resolutions which were read at the desk this afternoon. [Applause.] I will say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not wish to make any speech. The resolutions are so plain, so brief, so simple, upon a question with which everyone in America is so familiar, that I do not know that gentlemen desire to do more than vote upon them. [Applause, and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, with the understanding that the resolutions may be separated, I have no objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois. If the last resolution pledges Congress in advance to sanction anything that the President may see fit to do, I shall vote against it; but with that reservation I am perfectly willing that the resolutions shall be taken up now.

Mr. HITT. The last resolution that the gentleman refers to is one that was added in accordance with the views of gentlemen who scarcely insisted it added any force to the other part of the report, and I do not know that any of those gentlemen would now insist upon retaining it.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of these resolutions?

Mr. HITT. I ask that the resolutions be read before I make the formal request for consent.

The resolutions were again read as they appear in a previous part of to-day's proceedings.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, these resolutions, as I understand from what I can gather, as they have just been read for the first time at the Clerk's desk, involve the declaration of approval of the recognition of belligerent rights on the part of the revolutionists in Cuba, which may involve grave consequences to the large interests of American citizens in that island and on the high seas and possibly precipitate a war with Spain. I object to the summary passing of such resolutions without a word of explanation or any statement of the officially ascertained situation which has led the committee to recommend this very important action. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. HITT. Does the gentleman object to the consideration of the resolutions, if, when they are taken up, there be explanation?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Why, Mr. Speaker, it is now 5 o'clock in the afternoon, long after the usual hour of adjournment. The idea of our being asked to pass upon such a resolution at this time—the idea that any members of the House should appear disposed to vote upon a subject of this momentous gravity in this hasty way, seems to me amazing. For one, I want to know from the Committee on Foreign Affairs what the considerations are that have induced them to report this resolution, and whether they are such as will commend themselves to my judgment as an American citizen, as a patriot, and as a member of the House of Representatives. I think we have a right to ask that the facts on which the committee have reached their conclusion should be stated to us. We ought to take up this matter with at least some appearance of reasonable deliberation; to be informed as to the scope and probable consequences of the action proposed, and to have opportunity to scrutinize the terms of the resolutions, concerning the expediency of a portion of which a gentleman has already raised a question. I object to the present consideration of a resolution of such gravity.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, the request I made was made simply in view of what was supposed to be the fact and what so many gentlemen here said to me was true—that every member was familiar with all shades and sides of the question of belligerency. I simply complied with the request of many members whose statements I supposed to be correct. I will not trouble the House further at this time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am not prepared, for one, without a word of information from the committee, to vote upon a proposition which on the one hand may involve injustice to a people struggling, as they claim, for their independence against oppressive rule, and, on the other hand, may involve the unnecessary embroiling of my country in serious complications or war with a foreign power with which we are now at peace. I think we are bound to give some respectful and respectable consideration to a subject of so serious a nature. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The resolutions are not before the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. 5474) to provide for the extension of the time within which suits may be brought to vacate and amend land patents, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

DUPLICATE COPY OF JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. HOOKER. I offer the privileged resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to furnish the House of Representatives a duplicate copy of the joint resolution (S. The resolution was adopted.

On motion of Mr. HOOKER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DAVID S. GORDON.

Mr. PARKER, by unanimous consent, submitted the views of a minority of the Committee on Military Affairs upon the bill (H. R. 1567) for the relief of David S. Gordon.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the views of the minority will be placed on file and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection.

And then, on motion of Mr. DINGLEY (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I present a memorial numerously signed by citizens of Bigelow, Oreg., in which they remonstrate against the appropriation by Congress of the nation's money toward any institution or undertaking belonging wholly or in part to a religious sect. The memorialists declare that such appropriations are refused and denounced by almost every religious society in this country, as well as by the great masses of people not connected with any church. They state that these appropriations have been instrumental in causing the formation of organizations throughout the country to combat certain church influences, thus engendering, as they state, bitter strife, and, in some cases, loss of life. Such appropriations, they think, are unjust and not authorized by the Constitution and in direct contravention thereof. Appropriations of this character, they state, form a law respecting an establishment of religion which is forbidden by the Constitution. They go further, in the judgment of the memorialists, and provide for the maintenance thereof; and they believe that the discontinuance of what they term these obnoxious appropriations will remove the greatest cause for the dissensions now existing in various parts of the United States, and to the end that the funds of the Government may not again be diverted to a channel contrary to the design of the founders of the Government, and in opposition, as they avow, to the wishes of almost the entire people of this country, they pray for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution, to be termed the sixteenth article to the Constitution of the United States, reading as follows:

> Neither Congress nor any State shall pass any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or use the property or credit of the United States or of any State, or any money raised by taxation, to authorize either to be used for the purpose of founding, aiding, or maintaining by appropriation, payment for services, expenses, or otherwise, any church, religious denomination, or religious society, or any institution, society, or undertaking which is wholly or in part under sectarian or ecclesiastical control.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 665) to confer rank and pay of a first lieutenant of infantry upon the director of gymnastics and instructor in swordsmanship at the United States Military Academy, to report it favorably with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. The bill has the unanimous report of the committee, is recommended by the War Department, and recommended by the Superintendent of the Military Academy at West Point. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the President of the United States be authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint a director of gymnastics and instructor in swordsmanship at the United States Military Academy as a first lieutenant of infantry, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of officers of that class. The person appointed under this act shall be subject to the physical examination required for admission to the military service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill (S. 2308) providing for the purchase by the Government of the quarantine station at Portland, Me., was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying petition, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VEST introduced a bill (S. 2309) ratifying coal leases in the Creek Nation, Indian Territory; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the document?

Mr. CAFFERY. It is a document from the Interior Department containing a list of unconfirmed private land claims in Louisiana. The document is out of print, and it is very necessary to persons in Louisiana, in order to trace up and look after their titles.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the order?

The order was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 26th instant approved and signed the following joint resolutions:

The joint resolution (S. R. 59) extending the provisions of section 79 of "An act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents," approved January 12, 1895, so as to include monographs, bulletins, and reports of the Geological Survey published in 1894 and succeeding years.

DISPOSITION OF GARBAGE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] coming over from a previous day. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. STEWART on the 25th instant as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia is directed to call upon the Commissioners of the said District for a full report of their action under the act of March 2, 1895, in the matter of the removal of the garbage of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, with transmission of all papers; and the said committee is further directed to investigate the subject of the disposition of the garbage of large cities, with special regard to the health and comfort of the people and the location of garbage crematories or reduction plants, and to report what, if any, legislation is necessary.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why shall we direct a committee to do a thing that we can do ourselves? I move to amend the resolution so as to read "that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be directed" to send the information called for.

Mr. STEWART. I accept that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is accepted. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART subsequently said: Mr. President, with reference to the resolution which was passed this morning with regard to garbage in the District, the amendment which was made requires another amendment, to wit, the striking out of the last clause of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

And the said committee is further directed to investigate the subject of the disposition of the garbage of large cities with special regard to the health and comfort of the people and the location of the garbage crematories or reduction plants, and to report what, if any, legislation is necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The vote by which the resolution was passed will be regarded as reconsidered and the amendment agreed to, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none. The resolution, as amended, is agreed to.

A. H. LAZARE.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 28, 1896.

APPOINTMENT OF SECOND ACTING ASSISTANT DOORKEEPER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] coming over from a previous day.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. ALLEN on the 25th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That James B. Lloyd, a citizen of the State of North Carolina, be, and he is hereby, appointed to the office of second acting assistant doorkeeper of the Senate, at a compensation of $1,500 per annum.

Mr. ALLEN. In view of the fact that there seems to be some misunderstanding upon the Republican side of the Chamber with reference to this resolution, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the request?

Mr. ALLEN. I said, in view of the fact that there seems to be an entire misunderstanding on the Republican side of the Chamber with reference to this resolution, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection at all.

Mr. ALLEN. I had supposed, however, and had been led to believe from conversation had with the senior Senator from Ohio and some others, that there would be not the slightest objection to the passage of the resolution.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to make an explanation. I informed the Senator from Nebraska yesterday that if he would specify in the resolution the present officer of the Senate to be displaced, so that the number of employees would not be increased, I would make no objection to the passage of the resolution. The Senator, however, instead of accepting the suggestion from me, stated that he intended to withdraw the resolution, and I understood that an arrangement had been made which would not require approval by resolution of the Senate, which was satisfactory to all parties concerned. If that is not the case, I now repeat to the Senator from Nebraska that, so far as I am concerned, if he will specify the place now filled by some employee of the Senate which he wishes to have filled by Mr. Lloyd I shall certainly make no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to move, if the morning business is closed, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Cuban resolution.

Mr. ALLEN. The morning business is not yet completed. I want to have this resolution disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska that the Senator has a right to withdraw his resolution.

Mr. ALLEN. Then I withdraw the resolution. I wish to say in this connection, however, that the honorable Senator from New Hampshire did not have any understanding from me that an agreement had been entered into between any persons with reference to this matter, for no such agreement had been made. I withdraw the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution is withdrawn.

WAR IN CUBA.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Cuban resolution.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me to call up a bill that will provoke no debate?

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the resolution be taken up, and then I will yield.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by title.

The SECRETARY. A resolution reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations by Mr. MORGAN relative to the war in Cuba.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] is entitled to the floor upon the pending resolution.

NAVIGATION OF ST. MARYS RIVER.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the bill (H. R. 4779) relating to the anchorage and movements of vessels in St. Marys River. It is a measure in the interests of navigation that ought to be passed, and I trust there will be no objection to it. It was reported unanimously by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LINDSAY. The regular order is before the Senate, I understood.

Mr. BURROWS. I trust the Senator from Kentucky will yield for just a moment. This bill will give rise to no discussion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. LINDSAY. I yield for this purpose, but after the bill is disposed of I shall take the floor upon the pending resolution.

Mr. BURROWS. The bill was reported unanimously from the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, to add at the end the following additional proviso:

Provided also, That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend or repeal the act entitled "An act to regulate navigation on the Great Lakes and connecting tributary waters as far east as Montreal."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to submit a conference report on the pension appropriation bill. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that it will take about two minutes to dispose of it. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. LINDSAY. I understand there will be no controversy over the conference report.

Mr. ALLISON. None whatever. There are only three amendments, and they have been disposed of.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3537) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows;

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 3, and agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,
S. M. CULLOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

W. A. STONE,
R. W. BLUE,
S. M. ROBERTSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

WAR IN CUBA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported by Mr. MORGAN from the Committee on Foreign Relations on the 5th instant relative to the war in Cuba.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, as I desire to speak this morning to the resolution offered in the way of an amendment to the committee's report by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON], I will ask to have the proposed amendment read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

A joint resolution (S. R. 74) relative to the termination of the war in Cuba.

Whereas the President of the United States in his last annual message to this body says:

"Neither the warmth of our people's sympathy with the Cuban insurgents, nor our loss and material damage consequent upon the futile endeavors thus far made to restore peace and order, nor any shock our humane sensibilities may have received from the cruelties which appear to especially characterize this sanguinary and fiercely conducted war have in the least shaken the determination of the Government to honestly fulfill every international obligation, yet it is to be earnestly hoped, on every ground, that the devastation of armed conflict may speedily be stayed and order and quiet restored to the distracted island, bringing in their train the activity and thrift of peaceful pursuits"; and

Whereas he also declares that the present revolt is more active than the one which continued from 1868 to 1878; and as it appears there are no means of securing permanent peace to Cuba except by the recognition of its right to self-government:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the good offices of the United States are earnestly recommended to the favorable consideration of the Spanish Government for the recognition of the independence of Cuba.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, I do not think that in the present exigency the subject under consideration ought to be in any wise controlled by the past conduct of Spain to the United States. Considering the entire history of the diplomatic intercourse between the two countries and the sensibility of a country like Spain, whose power has been gradually declining, it may be said with truth that we are rather a debtor to than a creditor of Spain in the good offices of the past.

Nor do I think this subject ought to be discussed, considered, or decided by the Senate as though it were a case in court, to be governed alone by the rules of practice prevailing in questions arising out of international law and before the courts for adjudication. It is in a certain sense a question of humanity. At our very doors a war is being carried on between the people of Cuba and the Spanish Government, which can result but one of two ways, unless public opinion is very much mistaken, the independence of Cuba upon the one hand or the utter destruction of the Cuban people upon the other. Therefore we approach the discussion of this issue from the standpoint of humanity as well as of law, and in that spirit I shall discuss it.

Expressions of sympathy will avail nothing to the Cuban insurgents. A declaration that they have so far progressed in their revolution as to be entitled to the treatment of belligerents will accomplish little in the end, if I be right in my position. If the United States are to take any step to bring about a condition of affairs in Cuba different from that which has existed there during the last seventy years, that step should be in the direction of the ultimate independence of the Cuban people. It may be true, it is true, that the revolutionists have not yet accomplished enough to justify us in acknowledging the independence of Cuba, but I may say that the United States in the past have not hesitated to take that advanced ground, in instances where a revolution like that in Cuba had scarcely passed beyond the scope of the success which has now attended the arms of the Cuban people.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] read yesterday the conservative message of President Jackson in relation to the acknowledgment of the independence of Texas. Let us contrast the conduct of the Government of the United States, including the President, with the language of that message, and see whether that conduct will not justify us in taking now even a more advanced step than is proposed by this resolution.

The President's message was sent to Congress on the 21st day of December, 1836. March 1, 1837, the Senate passed a resolution looking to the recognition of the independence of the Republic of Texas. Almost contemporaneously with that resolution the House, by an amendment to an appropriation bill, appropriated money to pay the expenses of a diplomatic agent to the Republic of Texas, and on the 4th day of March, 1837, the last act of the President who wrote the message of the 21st of December, 1836, was to nominate a chargé d'affaires to the new Republic. Within sixty days after this conservative message had been sent to Congress, the Government of the United States had acknowledged Texas to be a free and independent nation. How did the conditions of Texas then compare with the condition of Cuba at the present time? At that time, according to the report of Henry M. Morfit, the American agent who had been sent to Texas to investigate the affairs of that country, the population of the entire Republic was 52,670. Thirty thousand of these were Anglo-Americans; 3,470 were Mexicans; 14,200 were Indians, and 5,000 were Africans.

The Mexicans and Indians were elements of weakness rather than of strength to the struggling Republic, and it may be said that at the time when the independence of Texas was acknowledged there were but 30,000 Texan people who were actually engaged in the struggle for independence.

What was the then condition of the Texan army and what the condition of Texan finances? Reading from Yoakum's History of Texas, volume 2, page 205, I find this statement:

At the close of 1836 the Texan army consisted of about 700 men enlisted for the period of the war and 80 who had six months longer to serve. The troops had neither flour nor bread; beef cattle there were in abundance on the prairies, but no horses in camp to drive them up. They had likewise a good supply of ammunition, but were without flints.

The condition of the Mexicans was this:

The Mexicans had again increased their forces in and about Matamoras. At the latter point there were 1,335 infantry, 670 cavalry, and 400 chained convicts ready to be distributed among the several companies. They had 28 pieces of cannon and 2 mortars. There were also en route from San Luis Potosi 150 cavalry, 300 infantry, and 4 pieces of artillery. Besides these forces there were at Saltillo 2,500 men of all arms and at Laredo 150 cavalry, making in all an aggregate of over 5,000 troops ready to invade Texas.

From the 1st of January to the 4th of March, 1837, there had been no improvement in the condition of Texas and no diminution of the power of Mexico, yet the Senate of the United States passed the resolution looking to Texan independence, the House of Representatives provided for a contingency that only could arise upon the Executive acknowledgment of independence, and the President took that step by the appointment of a chargé d'affaires to the new Republic.

What may now be said of the Cuban war for independence? A ten years' war, from 1868 to 1878, which Spain could not successfully bring to a close except upon the promise of reforms which have never been made, is followed by a revolution which has existed for over twelve months, and which, according to the message of the President, is more active than that of 1868, and yet we are told that a case has not yet arisen in which the Executive of the United States will be justified in considering steps looking to the independence of this people.

It is not correct, as a matter of international law, that the independence of an insurrectionary state is never to be acknowledged until independence has been virtually accomplished. There are conditions in which the acknowledgment may precede and ought to precede the degree of success that leads inevitably to the conclusion that independence can and will be secured by the unaided efforts of the insurrectionists. Reading from Manning's Law of Nations, page 97, I find the practice of international law in cases like this stated thus:

The continuance of a revolutionary state of affairs in the foreign State under circumstances in which it seems highly probable that, without such interference, either public order can never be restored at all or can only be restored after such sufferings to humanity and such injuries to surrounding States as obviously overbalance the general evil of all interference from without. No doubt the application in particular cases of these two principles is often a matter of the utmost difficulty, and must depend for its success on the honesty and political foresight of the State whose interference is solicited.

We have a state of case in Cuba which would justify the Government of the United States in considering a proposition for active interference in the revolutionary struggle for the reason that "it seems highly probable that, without such interference, either public order can never be restored at all or can only be restored after such sufferings to humanity and such injuries to surrounding States as obviously overbalance the general evil of all interference from without." But this resolution contemplates no such active interference. This resolution proposes only that the good offices of the United States shall be offered to Spain to bring about, not merely a cessation of hostilities in Cuba, not merely a termination of the revolutionary struggle now in progress, but an ultimate peace on the basis of Cuban independence, the only basis on which good governmont can ever be secured to the people of that country, if the experience of the last seventy years is to go for anything.

This question has been considered as though Cuba lay a thousand miles or 3,000 miles from the shores of the United States; it has been considered as though the people of the United States had no peculiar interest in and were under no peculiar duty to the people who are struggling for their independence; but such is not the case. After the successful revolutions in Mexico and in the Spanish American States of South America the question arose as to the attitude Cuba then bore to the United States and as to what position the United States was to assume toward Spain in regard to that nation's control of Cuba. Mr. Adams, in April, 1823, while Secretary of State (I take the following extracts from quotations to be found in the speech of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]), wrote to Mr. Nelson, as follows:

In the war between France and Spain, now commencing, other interests, peculiarly ours, will in all probability be deeply involved. Whatever may be the issue of this war as between those two European powers, it may be taken for granted that the dominion of Spain upon the American continents, North and South, is irrevocably gone. But the islands of Cuba and Puerto Rico still remain nominally, and so far, really, dependent upon her, that she yet possesses the power of transferring her own dominion over them, together with the possession of them, to others. These islands, from their local position, are natural appendages to the North American continent, and one of them (Cuba) almost in sight of our shores, from a multitude of considerations, has become an object of transcendent importance to the commercial and political interests of our Union. Its commanding position, with reference to the Gulf of Mexico and the West India seas; the character of its population; its situation midway between our southern coast and the Island of Santo Domingo; its safe and capacious harbor of the Habana, fronting a long line of our shores destitute of the same advantage; the nature of its productions and of its wants, furnishing the supplies and needing the returns of a commerce immensely profitable and mutually beneficial, give it an importance in the sum of our national interests with which that of no other foreign territory can be compared, and little inferior to that which binds the different members of this Union together.

Mr. GRAY. From whom is the Senator reading?

Mr. LINDSAY. I am reading from the letter of John Quincy Adams, Secretary of State, to Mr. Nelson, who, I believe, was at that time minister to France.

Mr. MILLS. What is the date?

Mr. LINDSAY. April, 1823. He continues:

Such, indeed, are, between the interests of that island and of this country, the geographical, commercial, moral, and political relations formed by nature, gathering, in the process of time, and even now verging to maturity, that, in looking forward to the probable course of events for the short period of half a century, it is scarcely possible to resist the conviction that the annexation of Cuba to our Federal Republic will be indispensable to the continuance and integrity of the Union itself.

This was from Mr. Adams, who can not be charged with looking south, as Mr. Jefferson has been charged, for the acquisition of slave territory in order to maintain the balance of power between our Northern and Southern States. This letter was written six months before President Monroe's message, laying down the Monroe doctrine to the world, was sent to Congress.

Again, writing to the same minister, Mr. Adams said:

The transfer of Cuba to Great Britain would be an event unpropitious to the interests of this Union. The opinion is so generally entertained, that even the groundless rumors that it was about to be accomplished, which have spread abroad and are still teeming, may be traced to the deep and almost universal feeling of aversion to it and to the alarm which the mere probability of its occurrence has stimulated. The question both of our right and of our power to prevent it, if necessary by force, already obtrudes itself upon our councils, and the Administration is called upon, in the performance of its duties to the nation, at least, to use all the means within its competency to guard against and forfend it.

Thus in April, 1823, it was announced that no matter what the result of the war between France and Spain might be, the possession of Cuba should not pass to France. Almost before the ink was dry upon that letter came the statement that the possession of Cuba should not be transferred to Great Britain, and that the public feeling upon the subject was so intense that the American Government would feel authorized to use all the means in its power, if necessary, to prevent that island passing into the hands of either one of those great powers.

Then, in October, 1825, Mr. Adams being President and Mr. Clay Secretary of State—

Instructions were sent, under direction of the President (Mr. J. Q. Adams), to the ministers to the leading European Governments to announce "that the United States, for themselves, desired no change in the political condition of Cuba; that they were satisfied that it should remain, open as it now is, to their commerce, and that they could not with indifference see it passing from Spain to any (other) European power."

And in October of the same year, writing to Mr. Brown, Mr. Clay said:

You will now add that we could not consent to the occupation of those islands (Cuba and Puerto Rico) by any other European power than Spain under any contingency whatever.

These declarations were made, not in view of the Monroe doctrine; not upon the idea that Cuba might possibly be considered open to colonization; not upon the idea that Spain did not have the inherent power by treaty to surrender its possession to any other power with which she might choose to treat; but upon the idea that the United States had such a peculiar interest in that island that we could not, and would not, see the possession pass from Spain to any other power.

What followed this? Mr. Webster, in 1843, writing to Mr. Campbell, said:

The Spanish Government has long been in possession of the policy and wishes of this Government in regard to Cuba, which have never changed, and has repeatedly been told that the United States never would permit the occupation of that island by British agents or forces upon any pretext whatever; and that in the event of any attempt to wrest it from her, she might securely rely upon the whole naval and military resources of this country to aid her in preserving or recovering it.

This has been the policy of every Administration from 1823 down to the present day. We claim the right to say that the possession of Cuba shall never pass from Spain except with our consent; and the right to say to Spain, as we have said repeatedly, "Your possession of that island shall be protected against all foreign countries, even if it be necessary to call upon the naval and military resources of this country to protect you."

We have never occupied toward any other foreign country relations like these. We have never asserted that any other territory which was otherwise the subject of purchase or cession, as Cuba was recognized to be in 1823 and 1825, could not be transferred by the Government owning that particular territory. We have never said in regard to any other country that we would guarantee its ownership and possession to the nation that claims it, even by going to war to make good that guaranty.

Having assumed that position seventy years ago, having maintained that position through all the years that have intervened since 1823, having declared that Cuba can not have good government at the hands of France or Great Britain or any other liberal and progressive country, have we not at the same time assumed a duty correlative in its extent to the claim that we assert? Can we say to the people of Cuba, can we say to the civilized world, that unless Cuba unaided can secure her independence she shall remain for all time to come, under all circumstances, in every contingency, subject to the rule of Spain, and at the same time shirk the responsibility of saying to Spain, "In consideration of this guaranty we have the right to demand that you shall give to the people of Cuba some sort of respectable government, some sort of protection to person and property, a system of administration that to some extent commends itself to the enlightened civilization of the age in which we live"? I insist that we, having asserted these great rights, having claimed this high authority, having become sponsor to the world that Spain shall continue to dominate this island, can not escape responsibility if we fail to see that Spain treats the people with some degree of justice. All during these seventy years that we have been guaranteeing Spain's possession, upholding Spain's authority over Cuba, affairs have been growing steadily worse.

I do not pretend to say that Spain would not give Cuba good government if she could, but that the financial condition of Spain has reached that point at which she can not live without virtually confiscating the fruits of the labor of all the people of Cuba, and if the impositions in the way of taxation annually taken from the people of Cuba under the Spanish Government have not been exaggerated by Senators on this floor who profess to speak by authority, then I say that in each year the profits which result from every Cuban's labor, the profits which result from every Cuban enterprise, and the profits which follow the cultivation of the richest soil upon the face of the earth, are taken from the people of Cuba and turned into the coffers of Spain to enable that country to maintain its standing as a European power. Cuba can not get good government at the hands of Spain because Spain's condition will not permit her to give it good government.

It was said yesterday by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] that there is not a native Cuban who sympathizes with the attempt of Spain to subdue the existing insurrection. If this be true, then we have the case of a power 3,000 miles away holding by force, and force alone, a million and a half of people in Cuba in a state of subjection as abject as that of admitted slavery. If this be true, and the Cubans did not revolt, they would be less than human; if they should fail to struggle on year after year, they would not deserve to exist; and it is a fact which no man can deny that Spain now contemplates the possible annihilation of all the able-bodied men in Cuba, if necessary, to put this revolution under foot.

Is this a case in which a government occupying toward the people of Cuba the relations we occupy should hesitate to take a decided step for their relief because the refinements of the international lawyer may be able to show that we may go beyond the precedents now to be found in the books? International law, like the common law, does not stand still, it grows with changed conditions and fits itself to each new exigency as it may arise. We have had no such condition facing us heretofore as we have to-day. Keeping in view the principles, but disregarding the mere verbal limitations upon international law, we may do all that is proposed by this resolution. We may, if we see proper, go further than this resolution proposes to go, in order to secure to these people the inalienable rights of all human beings who aspire to enjoy the liberty of a freeborn people.

I do not say that Spain ought to be held to the duty of giving to Cuba as good a government as we have here; I do not say that the institutions and traditions of Spain should all be disregarded in order that the government of the Cuban people might come up to our standard of government; but I do say that Spain owes to Cuba as much as Turkey owes to Armenia, and that if Spain will not perform the obligations that rest upon her as the governing power of Cuba, or if Spain's conditions are such that she can not perform those duties, then the time has come for the step to be taken—and it can not be so properly taken by any other government as by that of the United States—for the final severance of the relations between Spain and Cuba. If the Cuban people are in insurrection so unanimously that no considerable portion of them sympathize with the attempts of Spain to repress the revolution, then Spain's interest in Cuba has become a mere material interest. Pride of Spanish renown and the traditions of the Spanish Government, everything that builds up and elevates a government, everything which inspires devotion by a people to the government under which they live, has passed away, so far as Spain and Cuba are concerned; and it is to-day but a question of money, a cold, calculating inquiry as to what it will profit Spain to exercise over Cuba in the future the power she has exercised in the past.

This resolution provides for friendly intervention by the United States, not merely for temporary peace, not merely to alleviate the horrors of existing war, but to terminate that war, to bring about a peace which will be lasting, so far as Spain and Cuba are concerned, by securing to the Cuban people the best government they are capable of building up and administering. If it be true that it is but a question of money, then why should not an overture be made to Spain, not in an offensive way, not with any view to ultimate hostilities, but in the interest of common humanity, and why shall not Spain treat, upon the basis of affairs as they exist, for the surrender of her control over this island for a consideration which the Cuban people may be able to pay? In the past propositions like this have been made and have not been regarded as cause for offense. Why, then, shall not the United States not only propose to Spain that she shall, for a fair consideration, part with her right to dominate Cuba, but, if necessary, announce that the Government of the United States, having that deep and abiding interest in Cuba outlined by Mr. Adams and by all his successors, will guarantee that Cuba shall keep and perform the obligations she may thus incur? Something must be done. It will not do to say that we merely sympathize with the Cubans. It will not do to say that we merely hope for the close of a useless, unnecessary, and wicked war, which can terminate only in the abject subjection or annihilation of the Cuban people or in their independence. We can not longer answer at the bar of public opinion nor to our own consciences by claiming that we are not our brother's keeper. We have made ourselves the keeper of this brother, and if we shrink from the duties we have thus voluntarily assumed the blood of that brother will cry out from the ground against us.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I would not engage in this debate but that I, as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, wish to share in the responsibility of the members of that committee for the consequences that may come from the adoption of the resolution which I hope is about to pass. I do not disguise the dangers, the possibilities of hostile movements into which our Government may be drawn. I know that the people of Spain are a sensitive, a proud, a gallant people, and will not submit to what they consider to be an injustice without resentment and resistance. At the same time my convictions are strong, made stronger every day, that the condition of affairs in Cuba is such that the intervention of the United States must sooner or later be given to put an end to crimes that are almost beyond description.

After the elaborate statements made by my honorable friend the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], in which he has exhausted all the history of the question, I do not think it is necessary for me to go into many details. Nearly all the arguments and the facts upon which I base my opinion I draw from two documents. One is written by an American who does not give his name, but he is evidently interested in commercial matters in Cuba, and I judge from the tone of the paper that he is also interested in commercial matters in this country. But as he does not give his name, I do not know to whom to ascribe it. It is a very ably written article upon the side of Spain, and very strongly against the people of Cuba who are now engaged in war.

The other document to which I refer is one which I believe has not been generally read by members of the Senate. It is a document that was printed by order of the Committee on Foreign Relations, signed by T. Estrada Palma, who represents the belligerent Cubans and is the agent, so far as they can appoint an agent, for the revolutionary Government of Cuba. This document, addressed to Mr. Olney, the Secretary of State, and furnished by him to the committee, gives nearly all that is necessary to know about the growth of the revolution in Cuba, the organization of the civil Government there, the formation of armies, and all the principal incidents of the combat that is now waging. In all its parts it seems to be fairly and frankly written without exaggeration, and perhaps I may read two or three paragraphs from the beginning of it to show the tone of this communication.

In speaking of the causes of the revolution he says:

> These causes are substantially the same as those of the former revolution, lasting from 1868 to 1878 and terminating only on the representation of the Spanish Government that Cuba would be granted such reforms as would remove the grounds of complaint on the part of the Cuban people. Unfortunately the hopes thus held out have never been realized. The representation which was to be given the Cubans has proved to be absolutely without character; taxes have been levied anew on everything conceivable; the offices in the island have increased, but the officers are all Spaniards; the native Cubans have been left with no public duties whatsoever to perform except the payment of taxes to the Government and blackmail to the officials, without privilege even to move from place to place in the island except on the permission of governmental authority.
> Spain has framed laws so that the natives have substantially been deprived of the right of suffrage. The taxes levied have been almost entirely devoted to support the army and navy in Cuba, to pay interest on the debt that Spain has saddled on the island, and to pay the salaries of the vast number of Spanish officeholders, devoting only $746,000 for internal improvements out of the $26,000,000 collected by tax.

In another part of this document it is shown that no schools are organized there, and practically, with the exception of Habana and perhaps one or two other places, there are no school facilities in that region. The whole amount of money appropriated in aid of school buildings erected recently was about $20,000.

Mr. Palma says further:

> No public schools are within reach of the masses for their education. All the principal industries of the island are hampered by excessive imposts. Her commerce with every country but Spain has been crippled in every possible manner, as can readily be seen by the frequent protests of shipowners and merchants.
> The Cubans have no security of person or property. The judiciary are instruments of the military authorities. Trial by military tribunals can be ordered at any time at the will of the captain-general. There is, besides, no freedom of speech, press, or religion. In point of fact, the causes of the revolution of 1775 in this country were not nearly as grave as those that have driven the Cuban people to the various insurrections which culminated in the present revolution.

It can not be denied that this is a temperate statement of a most fearful condition of affairs in Cuba.

The objection has been made, not in debate here, but in the public press, that the Cubans have no organized government; that they have no local habitation and name; that they have no legislative powers; that there is nobody elected to make laws. That is absolutely untrue. Here in this little pamphlet are the proceedings of the Government of Cuba and of the people of Cuba in organizing the Government. Here is a statement of the growth of the revolution, of the battles and campaigns, and contemporaneous with these movements the preliminary organization of local self-government as constituted.

Sir, much to my surprise, because I took up the general idea that those people, in the first instance, were merely a band of discontents, having no organization, with whom we could not deal, it is shown by this official document, communicated to the Secretary of State, that they have gone through all the formulæ of self-government as fully and completely as the people of the United States did at the beginning of the Revolution.

This little document shows the organization of the legislature, the military organization, the election of a president, M. Cisneros, a man of high character, of conceded ability, a man of property and standing, who also, I believe, took a prominent, active part in the revolution of 1868 to 1878, besides being eminent in civil life.

Here are rules for the regulation of the army. Here are stipulations made as to the treatment of prisoners, how they shall be dealt with, and it is a remarkable fact that in all the battles fought by these wandering "robbers and bandits," as they have been called, whenever they captured a soldier of the Spanish army they released him and allowed him to return to his command. This humane and generous treatment is far different from the universal custom of the Spanish troops when one of the rebels is taken. He is sent to prison in Africa by the Spanish troops or is treated harshly and in some cases murdered. These are poor men; the army is composed of native Cubans and men some of whom have been freed from slavery, black people, but they have shown no signs of being guilty of the barbarous atrocity of which I shall have to speak hereafter, I am afraid injudiciously.

Now, here is a circular of the general in chief, General Gomez. The first article of that circular says:

> All prisoners captured in action or by the troops of the Republic will be immediately liberated and returned to their ranks, unless they volunteer to join the army of liberation. The abandoned wounded will be gathered and attended to with all care and the unburied dead interred.
> ART. 2. All persons who shall be arrested charged with committing the misdemeanors in the circular of July 1, by violating or disregarding the said order, will be summarily proceeded against.

There are many articles in this circular of commands, and all of them in accordance with the most humane system of warfare.

This circular, which defines what is to be done with prisoners of war, is signed by Maximo Gomez, general in chief, and yet in many newspapers in our country he has been denounced as a murderer, a cruel, barbarous one, like the one I shall speak of after a while—the commander of the Spanish forces.

There are more than 100,000 Spanish troops now in that little island. Even before General Weyler went there there, were that many, and yet those troops have not been able to put down the rebellion; they have not been able to check the movements of the Cuban army, though their number did not exceed thirty or forty thousand. It is a remarkable fact, too, that the Spanish troops and Spanish generals never trust with arms men of Cuban descent or Cuban birth. They are employed to take care of property; they are employed to look after plantations, to assist in driving off the rebels, as we may call them, from the plantations, but there is no case where the Spanish authorities have given to native Cubans arms and ammunition, because they know very well that they would be very unreliable troops in war against their countrymen.

The whole movement of the military force in Cuba is Spanish in its character. They have more troops now in Cuba than England ever had in the American colonies during our American Revolution. The force that has been brought to bear has been unable to check the movement of these wandering brigands, as they are called, in their triumphal march from one end of the island to the other.

Sometimes it is said that the local government has no habitation; that it has no place which it can hold to pass laws. In this respect they are like our Revolutionary fathers, who assembled at Philadelphia, adjourned to Baltimore, fled to Lancaster, and convened at Yorktown. The Cubans found a place in which they framed a constitution which is liberal and full, and it is here printed. It is true, it is not of the grandeur of, or in semblance to, the Constitution of the United States, but it is a sufficient constitution to govern 1,600,000 people.

Again, it is said that this is a government of negroes, and that that is an objection to their independence. It is true that about two-fifths of the people of Cuba are negroes or of negro descent. Of Spaniards there are only 9 per cent, and the native Cubans constitute the balance. Most of the negroes were emancipated at the close of the previous revolution in 1878. That was one of the terms and conditions of the settlement that was then made. Those negroes are now free. They are useful and necessary laborers, but it is said that they compose a part of the army. It is shown by the official records produced by Mr. Palma, a representative of that government, that of the entire force mustered by that government one-fourth are either negroes or descendants of black men, and no more.

Mr. CAMERON. They are mulattoes.

Mr. SHERMAN. They are mulattoes, most of them having formerly been slaves.

Mr. President, in every aspect in which I can look at this matter it seems to me that this comparatively ignorant, comparatively inoffensive population, composed of native Cubans, emancipated blacks, and of free mulattoes, have, by their victories over greater numbers, fairly acquired the position of belligerents. The 9 per cent of the population who are Spaniards in all probability are on the side of the parent government, although, I am told, as is shown here, that in some cases Spaniards by birth have joined in the movement for liberty and independence.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to read an extract from a letter which I received this morning?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. It is from a gentleman with whom I have no acquaintance, however. I will read it. It is dated the 26th of February, 1896:

I have traveled considerably over the Island of Cuba and have been interested in the history of the island, of Cuban affairs, and the study of those people.

Not having had the pleasure of your personal acquaintance, it might be well for me to say to you that I am a citizen of Washington, and that I am interested extensively in and was one of the organizers and founders of the National Capital Bank on Capitol Hill; that myself and the president of this bank have traveled in company over the territory which has been the scene of the recent bloody conflict, and that since our travels over this country I have become very greatly enthused with what seems to me to be the prospect of those people governing and maintaining themselves, if they should ever be so fortunate as to achieve their independence.

My observation of the Cuban prompts me to say that, unlike the Spaniard, he is true to his friends, law abiding, and honest in character. In this respect he differs from any of the Spanish continental citizens, and I don't believe there is a place on this hemisphere that I would rather be placed in, absolutely helpless and unable to take care of myself, depending wholly upon the honor, integrity, and good faith of the people with whom I was surrounded, than to be placed in a community of Cubans. They are brave and will meet death, disaster, and despair with the greatest amount of fortitude, I believe, on the face of the earth.

Your allusions in your speech to the fact that in the last insurrection there were 13,000 Cubans killed on the battlefield and 43,000 of them slaughtered as prisoners of war seemed to astonish and open the eyes of some of your colleagues. I was sorry that you did not dwell upon a single comparison. Allow me to suggest it.

According to the best historical authority, there were 57,000 Cubans who bit the dust during that insurrection.

I shall not read the remainder of the letter, as it is somewhat personal.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have always understood that the Cubans were a quiet, a peaceable, but not a very enterprising people. They had no system of education by which they could improve their condition. They had no aid from Spain. Every dollar of taxation that was levied there went to the Spanish Government. They had no political rights or privileges worthy of the name.

The struggle of 1868–1878 was brought to an end by the kind intervention of General Campos, a gentleman, no doubt, of the highest character, kind and generous, yet one of the best soldiers that Spain has furnished of late years. That fearful contest, which involved an expenditure by Spain of over $700,000,000, was continued for ten years by those wandering outlaws, as they are called, holding in check all the power of Spain during those long years, and only giving up resistance when peace was made upon terms granted by General Campos. They were liberal terms; they were honorable terms, such as the Cubans were willing to accept, and upon the adoption of which they were willing to lay down their arms.

What were those terms? The Cubans demanded local autonomy—some kind of home rule; they demanded that they should have control of their property, their surroundings, their schools, etc. That was promised to them. They demanded representation in the Cortes, and so they had three men sent to the Cortes, a body, I believe, of some three hundred men, and as a matter of course they were lost there and the Cortes paid no attention whatever to them. The Cubans had a so-called local government, composed, I believe, of about thirty persons, one-half nominated by Spain, the other half nominated by the people of Cuba, and then when the question of voting came up the body of the natives were practically disfranchised.

So Spain, although she entered into the plausible agreement to bring about peace with Cuba, yet practically violated her own engagements. She failed to carry out the stipulations which she made to her own people, and the result was that within a few years afterwards the feeble Cubans, alarmed at the condition of affairs, their property taken and devoured by taxation, rendered poor, reckless, without means of education except a few who were planters, again took up arms.

But it is said that the Cubans took a man from outside of the island to command their army. So they did. They took a man named Gomez, who, according to all the evidence that I have and all the statements made in this very one-sided document, is a man of character, a man of standing, probably an idealist. He was born in San Domingo, but he has always resisted any kind of tyranny. He exposes his life now in endeavoring to secure home rule for Cuba. He ought to be and will be considered a patriot in some future day.

Mr. President, I wish to say a word in respect to the treatment by Spain of her colonies. I have no desire to say anything unkind about Spain. Spain through Columbus discovered America. Four centuries ago Spain was a nation of great power, controlling not only the peninsula of Spain but a large portion of Europe through Charles V; but Spain has never developed any power to manage a colony. It has never in a single instance, in all her numerous colonies, embracing originally the larger part of South America and Mexico and the Island of Cuba, conceived or acted upon a policy of kindness or justice to her conquered subjects. It has never been fair to the natives. On the contrary, Spain's rule was iron, its demands were implacable, and refusal of obedience was death.

It is impossible to read, without being shocked, the history of any country conquered by Spain in the days of its power, with all the atrocities and crimes committed. The story of Pizarro and Cortez, as told by Prescott, is a record of Spanish courage and Spanish cruelty, of bloody massacres and harsh injustice to the races they conquered. Recall the scenes that happened in the Netherlands under the Duke of Alva, a name that will be remembered and hated as among the most cruel of mankind. The Dutch in the Netherlands struggled with the great power of the Spanish Government and saved their country in spite of cruelty and barbarous warfare.

Spain had possession of nearly all South America. What has she done with it? She has lost it all. Not by foreign power, but by the men she has attempted to rule, by Mexico, Chile and all the countries of South America; and now her last vestige of power on the American Continents hangs over sixteen hundred thousand people of Cuba.

If Cuba had not been in that insular position where her coasts could be dominated by any naval power, the people of Cuba would long ago have been free. But unfortunately a rebel within could not by any possibility have any control of the building of ships to defend his island from encroachment. The island was open to Spain, and it is a wonder to me how, under the circumstances in which they are placed, the people of Cuba have made such advances. I may say that Cuba has been in almost constant war during this generation. I need not go into the details of the various outbreaks, but in the one from 1868 to 1878 she not only maintained her power during all that period, but compelled Spain to a sacrifice that practically brought about her bankruptcy.

Now, it seems to me that under those circumstances Spain could easily, readily, have conciliated those people who, after all, were more friendly to Spain than any other portion of the Spanish colonies. Why not concede to them autonomy, local rights? There are but two countries in America of any great importance which are now dominated by kingly power. One is Canada. But what is the history of Canada? Canada is now as free as the Republics of America. Her people can pass laws as they please, and they are never vetoed. Canada is practically an independent country. England has extended to its people a policy which she ought to have extended to her United Colonies of America in 1776. If the same policy which has been pursued latterly in Canada had been pursued with our fathers in the Revolution, British power would probably have been exercised over the American colonies for many years after 1776. We can thank George III and his Tory ministry for their unjust measures in our Revolution, because it compelled our people to assert their power of self-government and to establish a great Republic among the nations of the world.

In Canada, Great Britain has been wise and liberal. It has done everything. The Canadians have a parliament. They have every function and attribute of a government. They have provinces and separate communities, with full autonomy and power to levy taxes. They not only levy taxes upon their own property, but they levy taxes upon goods imported from England, as well as from any other country in the world. It is folly to say that Canada is a possession in the sense considered by Spain. England was wise enough to foresee that a liberal policy was necessary to hold distant possessions; but Spain never could learn this lesson, never could find out that a colony had inherent rights, never could govern its distant subjects with Spanish rule, except by the policy of violence and injustice, of vengeance and barbarity.

This very question that we are now debating, strange as it may seem, came up and was before the Senate in 1870, two years after the rebellion that I have referred to occurred, and then it was that in the Senate of the United States I introduced a resolution, which I ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas the United States observe with deep interest the civil war now existing in Cuba and sympathize with the people of all American nations or colonies in their efforts to secure independence of European power: Therefore

Be it resolved, That the United States recognize the existence of a state of war between the Kingdom of Spain and the colony of Cuba, waged on the part of Cuba to establish its independence, and the United States will observe a strict neutrality between the belligerent parties, as is their duty under the law of nations.

Mr. SHERMAN. That resolution was introduced by me at the date stated. The conditions under which it was introduced were rather peculiar. At that time General Grant was understood to be very strongly in favor of taking determined measures to put an end to Spanish rule in Cuba. I speak in the presence of one of the members of his Cabinet, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. It was felt generally throughout the country, and especially in Washington, that the rebellion ought to end, and the general feeling was that General Grant would bring it to some head; that he would either persuade Spain to sell Cuba or in some way bring about the independence of the Cubans. But Mr. Hamilton Fish, his Secretary of State, was no doubt largely controlled by the commercial interests of the city of New York and the State of New York. I do not complain of that. He was very much opposed to this policy and resisted it to the utmost.

Finally General Grant yielded. General Grant did not often yield, and in many cases he did not yield where it was supposed he did, but he did yield his ideas upon that subject. The strongest possible statement of the objections to our interfering in Spain and to our recognition of their belligerency is stated in the message of General Grant in 1875, and I think everyone who is familiar with the writings of Mr. Fish will see that it was practically his work.

Therefore it was that we did then as we are doing now—we let the thing run along. I did not call up the resolution for final action or for consideration, because I knew that without the assent of the President it was perfectly idle for us to seek any measure for the relief of Cuba. So things passed along until finally in 1878, in the beginning of the Administration of Mr. Hayes, the matter was settled, and it was supposed that it had been settled upon liberal terms which would supply to the people of Cuba an autonomy and protect them at least in their local interests.

Senators may not be interested in the constitution of the Provisional Government, the action of the constituent assembly, but here it is. I will not read it. There is not a right enjoyed by the people of the United States that is not secured here. Their Government is a simple and plain Republic with but little form or ceremony. It is a substantial grant to all the people who live there, without distinction of race or color, of liberty and the right to manage their own affairs. Here is the law of marriage and many other laws that have been passed there, regulations which had not been provided by the Spanish Government. Here is the military organization. They divide their army into five corps and place General Gomez at the head of it all. Two of them are commanded by the two Maceos, who are, I believe, mixed blood. The whole organization is here given. The president, Cisneros, is a man of the highest character, as is shown, I believe, even by the statement of the pamphlet by an "American" that I have referred to.

Besides the mere ideal interest of the United States in protecting a feeble Republic struggling for liberty, we have more material interests with Cuba than with any other country of this hemisphere. Our purchases and our dealings with Cuba are nearly equal to all that are bought from or sold to all other American countries. The statistics upon that point are here given. Perhaps a mere reference to the value will show that we have not only ideal interests, but that we have real business interests in Cuba.

We take from Cuba and Puerto Rico imports to the value of $82,715,120. We send to Cuba $26,668,000 of exports. Our entire exports to all the West India Islands, other than Cuba, amount to only $19,000,000, as compared with $26,000,000 to Cuba. And so with Mexico. Although it is supposed that we are largely increasing our trade with Mexico, yet after all the entire imports from Mexico amount to $33,000,000, while the amount of imports from Cuba amount to $82,000,000. The exports to Mexico amount to $19,000,000, while the exports to Cuba amount to $26,000,000. Taking all the countries of South America combined, the exports and imports representing the dealings with the United States are larger in Cuba than in all South America.

This shows that by our proximity to these people, such as we have not with other portions of the American Continent, our trade with Cuba is greater than that with other American countries. If any nation outside of Spain is interested in Cuba it is the United States of America. We have already settled as a fixed fact, which none will dispute, that no other country in Europe can claim or acquire ownership in Cuba. That was guarded against by our ancestors forty and fifty years ago, so that now there is no country that could be appealed to so strongly for any assistance that may be given to those people fighting for their liberty as to the people of the United States of America.

Mark it, Mr. President, I am not in favor of the annexation of Cuba to the United States. I do not desire to conquer the Cubans in any sense. I do not desire to have any influence whatever upon their local autonomy. In my judgment they ought to be attached to Mexico as a part of that country, because the Mexicans speak the same language, they have the same origin and the same antecedents, and are under many of the same circumstances. Therefore I should be very glad if by any measure Cuba should be attached to Mexico, but as to Spain I do not believe that Cuba will ever be of any advantage to Spain hereafter. They already say that on account of the rebellion thus far proceeded with favorably all the interests of Spain are practically destroyed. Those people who are now fighting for their liberty, though I think it is perhaps against the laws of war, destroy sugar cane and all the products of the earth in order to prevent them from going to support the Spanish army; but we even did that in our civil war. We destroyed property when it was supposed it might be used for the good of the enemy. They have never violated in any case the rules or articles of war.

Now, Mr. President, we come to the saddest aspect of this question. Spain has evidently withdrawn Campos, who was a friendly, fair, and open ruler, and who sought in every way he could to bring about some agreement between the two countries, because they are now two separate countries. Campos was withdrawn and there was put in his place a Spanish general of renown, who has been long in the army, is well known, and of late has been christened "the butcher." Events have happened within the last thirty days that have changed the whole of my feeling in regard to this matter. This man Weyler, if we can judge by what he has done, and if he is to be judged by what he threatens to do, is one of the worst men who could be sent there to pacify a people or to compel them to surrender. His warfare is massacre. He openly avows it.

A book was published in Spanish which I am very sorry I could not get from the Library, written by a Spaniard by the name of Enrique Donderio, who had come over from Spain with the Spanish troops to see the war of 1870, and who was so horror-stricken with the awful crimes that he saw committed that he fled to the United States, and there compiled his manuscript. Telling is this evidence, and it shows General Weyler, stripped of all the honorable aims of military authority, as a brute, pure and simple, his hands forever stained with the blood of defenseless men and women. This book I can not read, in the Spanish language, but it was translated by one of the great journals of the country, the New York Journal, and as something more important to this country than anything that I could say, I ask the Secretary to read from it some extracts which I have marked, which disclose the character and action of this General Weyler.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

VILLAINOUS OUTRAGES.

It was not alone that he carried out the brutal orders of Valmeseda. Had he done only that the Cubans of to-day would fix the blame upon Valmaseda instead of upon him. But he went much further; he took it upon himself to cause the outrage and murder of scores of women in the small towns and villages that lay in the district he was commanding. The details of these outrages are too horrible almost to relate, but they need to be told to show what manner of man this is who is now attempting to throttle Cuba.

His favorite amusement was entering into a village with a regiment of soldiers and "rounding up" all the women to be found in the dwellings. If there happened to be any men left in the village at that time they would be shot down without delay. The women huddled together in a frightened group; he would form his troops in a hollow square, facing inward, and then, having three or four of the women—and even little girls of the tender ages of 10 or 11 years—stripped absolutely naked, he would drive them into the square at the point of the bayonet, and make them dance until exhausted, the double file of sensual Spaniards gazing on in delight.

When one set had fallen panting to the ground he would deliver them over to the soldiers for their gratification and bring out others, until every woman in the village, stripped, had been forced to submit to these terrible indignities. Finally the tortured creatures would be put out of their misery by being hacked literally to pieces with swift strokes of the sharp Cuban machetes.

This machete is a long, slightly curved Cuban knife, very sharp and heavy, used for cutting and not thrusting. In times of peace it is employed for cutting sugar cane, but in times of war it is one of the most deadly of implements. The Spanish troops invariably use the machete, adopting it soon after their arrival in Cuba.

Weyler's troops used to use this knife, by his orders, with great effectiveness. Another scheme of his which he carried out frequently with great satisfaction to himself was the holding of a ball in some large building in a town. He would send a great number of invitations around for this, including everybody that he had made up his mind to kill. Now an invitation from General Weyler was not to be treated lightly. Nobody dared to refuse it, in fact. No man's life would have been worth the thinking about if he decided not to go. Some of these balls used to pass off very smoothly and without any deviation from the programme of a regular Cuban dance.

But this was not often. At some time during the evening—at every other ball at least—after liquor had been flowing freely and the men and women guests who did not dare to do anything else than drink were pretty well stupefied, a sudden hush would fall over the room, the music would stop, and a gang of Weyler's soldiers, with murderous machetes in their hands, would rush in, slashing right and left, and keeping both doors and windows guarded, so that hardly a person could escape. The women, of course, would be saved for orgies later on. On one occasion of this sort, it is recalled, the carnage was so fierce that not even the hired musicians escaped with their lives.

WORSE THAN THE KURDS.

Here is another incident, taken down from the lips of a Cuban of position, who lives in New York City to-day:

"You can refer to the country place named Levado, belonging to Maguilara, who was Vice-President of the then Republic of Cuba. Weyler came to that country place and found, sick in bed and almost dying, Eugenio Odardoy Tomagno and his brother. They were almost dead of consumption and in a state of ulceration. Weyler had them dragged out of their beds, dragged through the hallways, and outdoors to a little wood. There they were cut to pieces with machetes—actually minced.

"The wife of the manager of the estate, who was there with her little daughter, 8 or 9 years old, was taken out of the house, deprived of her clothing, and made to dance, together with her little daughter. Both were afterwards outraged and hacked to pieces."

In Donderio's book, mentioned above, the writer (who, it must be remembered, was a Spaniard and not a Cuban, and who would certainly not have told falsehoods against his countrymen) gives these three thrilling little dramas of horror, taken from the reign of Weyler at this period:

"As we approached the ruined village of Boire, we saw coming toward us the guerrillas of a Spanish column, who, in a reconnoitering expedition in the woods thereabout, had found a small colony of Cuban families whose male individuals they had all assassinated, and whose ears they were bringing strung on their bayonets, so as to show the number they had killed and claim the reward, as if they had been wild beasts.

"In one of the camps one could contemplate the troops looking with almost the satisfaction of tigers upon four women that they had captured. Three of them were from 16 to 20 years of age, and the other was more advanced in years and was accompanied by two small girls from 7 to 9 years old, whose mother she was. When the shades of night began to fall the soldiers took an especial delight in telling these women what their fate would be just for the satisfaction of seeing them weep and hearing them pray for mercy."

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not ask that which follows to be read. It is not fit to be read in this presence. Let it be printed, and let the Secretary pass on to the next case.

The matter referred to is as follows:

"The lady to whom I have referred above belonged to the wealthy family of Los Penos. She thought to soften the hearts of the soldiers by presenting to them her two little daughters, who were besides rather sickly, and praying that they should not be condemned to an act which would without doubt cause their immediate death. But all her supplications were in vain. The soldiers were finally given authority to do with the women as they pleased. Next morning they were all dead.

"I once witnessed the arrival of a column at a small Cuban settlement with thirteen families. The women were separated from the men, and were then compelled to gather the wood with which their relatives were to be reduced to ashes after being butchered. The women were, of course, according to the usual custom, ravished a little later.

"We have witnessed ourselves, with our own eyes, what we have described."

These are excerpts picked out at random from Donderio's book, and the three stories are unconnected. They are translated literally from the original Spanish, and the peculiar idioms are kept.

The Secretary read as follows:

MORE OF HIS CRIMES.

Weyler, however, did not confine his barbarities to women. With men he was brutal almost beyond the power of words to describe. A Cuban gentleman of this city recalls the following instance:

"In one of the jails there were more than 20 political prisoners, almost all lawyers, physicians, and representative men of the district. He went in one day with an enormous club and beat them unmercifully, and then and there ordered that next morning they be shot; and they were shot."

An even more horrible story is told, as follows: "Weyler was coming out of a jail one day when he met a gentleman of wealth and position in the town who complained to him that the troops had taken all his cattle. Weyler at once ordered him to be tied by the neck to the iron bars of the jail in such a way that strangulation should not be immediate but gradual, and he was left there. The next morning he was dead, and his eyeballs had dropped out of their sockets."

Most incredible of all is this deed of "The Butcher." That it happened once is beyond question; how many more times it is impossible to say. This happened in a small village on the outskirts of his district. "The Butcher," with a goodly sized force of troops, was traveling over the country, continuing in his reign of terror, when he came by chance upon a little family he had somehow in a previous visit overlooked. There was a middle-aged father and mother, two daughters, and two sons. With a fiendish sort of delight, Weyler took them into captivity. He marched them along, closely guarded, until he came to the spot he wanted. Then, calling upon his men to halt, he made his plans with his usual wonderful rapidity of thought and scheme, for an outrage that could hardly be excelled.

He bound the father and mother firmly to trees near each other, trees that were facing a little bit of greensward. Then, having the daughters held tightly by the guards, he proceeded to order several of his soldiers to hack the young boys to pieces with machetes. The screams of the victims and the wails of their agonized relatives would have stopped any other man short in his dreadful course. But Weyler only smiled.

The boys now lying dead, "The Butcher" signaled to his soldiers to bring forward the girls. They were pretty, dainty senoritas, in the first flush and blush of womanhood, and Weyler's smile grew more sardonic as they were marched before him. Then and there, in full sight of the father and mother, he had his soldiers strip the young women of every article of their clothing, and for half an hour force them to dance upon the green turf with all the troops looking on. With the agony of seeing their sons slain before their eyes and their daughters in such a humiliating position, the parents were nearly insane.

Yet Weyler was not through yet.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not ask that to be read. It is not proper to be read in this Chamber. I shall, however, insert it in my remarks.

The matter referred to is as follows:

It sounds absolutely impossible to say that any man could be possessed of such cruelty, but facts are facts, and it is the sober truth, vouched for by several Cubans in this city, that immediately following the dancing, with the distracted father and mother still looking on, "The Butcher" gave instructions to have the girls violated there before their eyes.

It proved the death of both of them, and left the father and mother—whose lives Weyler spared—hopelessly insane.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is the character of man who is put in charge of this rebellion by Spain. I do not know how others feel about it, but the character of this man, his barbarous atrocity, his inhuman cruelty—I can use no stronger language—he is a demon, rather than a general. Spain has sent such a man as that, who did what it is said here that he did, in command of 100,000 troops, to ride roughshod over, to kill, to slaughter a feeble body of people. The other day my honorable friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] read (and I have no doubt every Senator had the same feeling that I did) where this man made a speech after he had been appointed general, saying what he was going to do when he came to the Island of Cuba and was placed in its chief command, with full power and absolute control over 1,600,000 people. This is what he said:

On arriving in Cuba I propose to exterminate the filibusters—

What does he mean by exterminating them? Is it the kind of conduct that is described in the paper already read and recited by one of his associates?

On arriving in Cuba I propose to exterminate the filibusters first in the Provinces of Habana, Pinar del Rio, Matanzas, and Las Villas. Of course it is to be understood that I refer to the large groups that invade them. Afterwards the small parties of bandits will remain, which I will slowly exterminate. At all events, great activity is needed in the present circumstances.

Mr. President, we have seen that this actual tragedy has already commenced. I read in a morning paper—it is open to all—the account of about the first battle which has been fought there since the arrival of this general, and the murder of unoffending prisoners. I wish to say upon my own responsibility that if this line of conduct is pursued by Spain in Cuba, and the people of the United States are informed of its conditions as they are narrated daily in the public papers, there is no earthly power that will prevent the people of the United States from going over to that island, running all over its length and breadth, and driving out from the little Island of Cuba these barbarous robbers and imitators of the worst men who ever lived in the world. [Applause in the galleries.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to remind the occupants of the galleries that demonstrations are against the rules of the Senate. The Sergeant-at-Arms will see that there is no repetition of this offense.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, now leaving the combatants to fight their battles, let me say a few words in regard to the general policy of the United States. Ever since the establishment of our own independence after a long struggle it was well understood and announced by General Washington, and by all the great men of the time, especially by Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Madison and Mr. Monroe, that the general policy of the United States was to secure to the people of all nations in America republican rule and self-government. One of the great disciples of this doctrine was Henry Clay; but, indeed, all the American statesmen of that time concurred in the opinion that every effort short of actual warfare, every aid, should be given to the South American and even the North American States in favor of their liberty and their separation from the parent government.

I have already said that so far as Canada is concerned, its condition has been so favorable that the Canadians do not desire even to form a kinship or to join our great country, nor would I with my present convictions vote to admit Canada into the Union of States. I think that the plan of government of many States and one people has its limits, and beyond a certain extent it is not wise to increase the number of States. Besides, I would be against admitting any State that was not in all its parts practically republican and free.

In the framing of the resolution that is now before us, when the committee undertook to draft a resolution expressing the desire of the United States it was found to be a much more difficult task than was suspected. However, finally the committee agreed upon the resolution presented by the honorable Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and it was agreed to subsequently that the main proposition contained in the resolutions offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] should be added as an addition to that resolution, so that, if it is offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania now, whatever sanction the committee can give to them will be given. I will read it, as it is very short:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That, in the opinion of Congress, a condition of public war exists between the Government of Spain and the Government proclaimed and for some time maintained by force of arms by the people of Cuba; and that the United States of America should maintain a strict neutrality between the contending powers, according to each all the rights of belligerents in the ports and territory of the United States.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania is as follows:

Resolved further, That the friendly offices of the United States should be offered by the President to the Spanish Government for the recognition of the independence of Cuba.

The resolutions in the House of Representatives, as they were introduced by the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the House, are also excellent statements of the position of the American Government. Personally I would be very willing to vote for those resolutions, or either of them or any of them. There were many questions that were discussed by Senators upon the other side of the Chamber as to what should be done by the President. Some thought that a joint resolution ought to be sent to the President of the United States. There were objections made to that course. It was conceded on all hands in the committee that the final decision of this question of peace or war or the condition of belligerency must rest with the President of the United States. That seemed to be the general opinion upon that point, but upon other questions there was a difference of opinion.

But I believe that the passage of the resolution now reported, together with the addition made by the Senator from Pennsylvania, will define the policy of the United States. I think I can say with entire confidence in my view as to the desire of the people of the United States, we do not want to hear any more about Cuba; we do not want Cuba; we do not desire it; we wish to trade with it; we are its best customer, but we do not intend that the laws of civilized society, that the usages among Christian nations, that the habits of a modern civilization shall be thwarted by Spain in her further government of Cuba. It is certain that the spirit of the age will demand that of Spain. Let me say that not only the United States of America, but every country of America will do it. Probably for the first time an opportunity will be presented to draw the line upon questions that are American and European. The line might be drawn on Cuba if the United States should believe in the end that it is wise to assist these rebels, as they are called, in seeking self-government; and if we do it we shall not do it alone. If Weyler carries out his projected plan there is not a portion of the country in this hemisphere, in North or South America, from the northern to the southern ocean, but will join to contribute in putting an end to that violence. It has lasted long enough. That people ought to be allowed, in their way, to form their own government, to be free as we are.

It may be that in time that country, containing but 1,600,000 inhabitants now, will contain more than 10,000,000 people; it may be one of the great island powers of the world, not equal to Great Britain, not equal to Ireland, but still greater and stronger—many times stronger—than it can ever be under the power of Spain. Every Christian man, every man who believes in the civilization of our age, every American in all our broad land who hates tyranny and oppression, whether it come from a government or a tyrant, is opposed to cruelty. We do not want an Armenia near our shores, and if one shall be established there it will be overthrown.

We will not shield ourselves behind the position taken by the British Government in the case of Armenia, that Armenia was so far away and beyond her power that Great Britain could not help those people when they were being murdered. That was no doubt a true position, and it was difficult under the circumstances for Great Britain to interfere. I do not say this as a matter of criticism. But Cuba lies right at our shore. A few hours will carry us across to Habana, the capital of that beautiful island, which is rich in production, which contains the best sugar lands in the world, a country capable of holding 5,000,000 people and giving them active and prosperous employment—people of a gentle and kindly race, not disposed to warfare, unless it be to resent intrusion and tyranny.

Sir, whatever may be the result of the adoption of this measure, I desire to take my share of responsibility in connection with it, and with a confidence in the judgment of the Almighty Ruler of the Universe, I believe it will be wise if we can assist, and all the other nations of America concur, in securing to the people of Cuba the same liberties we now enjoy. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, leaving the question of international law and the strict construction of the doctrine of belligerent rights to the distinguished legal gentlemen of this body, I propose to occupy the time of the Senate a few minutes in giving expression to some plain thoughts upon the burning question now under consideration.

Mr. President, when we take a retrospective view of the history of our nation and recall the struggle of the colonists for freedom and independence, which were finally achieved through suffering and heroism that challenged the admiration of enlightened Christendom, it is not to be wondered at that the American people today feel a deep interest in the conflict now being waged in yonder Isle of Cuba or that the sympathy of our people is on the side of those who are struggling for the blessings of liberty and the right of self-government.

Mr. President, when we were in dire distress, France, Belgium, and Holland came to our rescue and aided us to win the victory. They did not stop to split legal hairs as to their right to do so, but they did it, and with their help (as well as their sympathy) the colonies cast off the yoke of British power, and the foundation of this mighty Republic was laid in the hearts and the consciences of a free and progressive people.

Our independence was achieved more than a hundred years ago, during all which time the people of Cuba have been in bondage. To-day that people are engaged in a desperate struggle to free themselves from the most odious and oppressive despotism that can possibly be imagined or portrayed.

All through their history the people of that rich and beautiful island have been cruelly treated, taxed beyond endurance, and made to suffer every indignity that an arbitrary, despotic, and wicked government could inflict.

For a year the people of Cuba have bravely battled for their rights and their liberties.

Spain has already sent to the little island more troops than England sent to America in her effort to subdue the colonies, and yet there are no signs of an end to the conflict.

One great Spanish general—a true soldier—tried in vain to suppress the revolt and failed. He was recalled, and his place has been taken by a general of cruel methods and bloodthirsty reputation. While this debate has been going on in this Chamber that general has prepared and is about to issue the following barbarous and inhuman proclamation:

> The captain-general proclaims that he allows the rebels in the provinces of Pinar del Rio and Habana fifteen days from the date of the proclamation in which to surrender to the authorities.
> Those who do so will not be subjected to molestation. But small bands of insurgents in those provinces which do not surrender within the given period will, at the expiration of that period, be treated as bandits.

Think of it! The armies of the Cuban patriots are to be treated as bandits, to be cruelly imprisoned and brutally executed! And while that is going on we look across that narrow strip of water that separates us from the Island of Cuba, and while their cries reach us it is contended by some in this Chamber that we should soothe our consciences by passing a simple resolution of sympathy.

Mr. President, I was interested in what the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] caused to be read as to the cruelties of the present military governor of the Island of Cuba in the revolution that occurred there some years ago. I find in one of the great morning dailies a special dispatch from their staff correspondent, reciting atrocities of such a nature that it causes the blood to boil in the veins of every true American whose eye can possibly rest upon it:

> SHOT DEAD IN BED—HORRIBLE INCIDENTS OF THE SPANISH MASSACRE OF PEACEFUL CUBANS IN THE TOWN OF GUATAO—SICK MEN AND OLD MURDERED—WOMEN AND CHILDREN FLEEING ON FOOT, LEAVING THEIR HOMES DESERTED—WEYLER LIVING UP TO HIS RECORD.

I will read only one paragraph from this dispatch:

> The troops entered the houses and shot quiet men who were doing nothing. They raided bedrooms, and a man confined to his bed by erysipelas was killed as he lay there. In one case a woman came to the door of her house and pleaded with the soldiers for the life of her husband, who lay ill in bed. Their response was a crash of the butt of a musket in the woman's head. They then broke down a door and shot the husband in bed.

That is a sample of events that to-day are going on in the Island of Cuba, and it is this kind of barbarous warfare that we are called upon to consider in this Chamber.

Mr. President, Cuba to-day is fighting for precisely the same principles that we contended for at Bunker Hill, Bennington, Princeton, and Yorktown—the principles of local self-government and the doctrine that taxation without representation is tyranny.

Would to Heaven that we had a Washington, a Stark, or a Lafayette that we could give to Cuba to carry aloft the banner of the Republic in an honest effort to relieve this sorrowing, suffering people from their cruel environments.

What has this wicked tyrant who is now the military governor of Cuba done? Look at the record, ye lovers of liberty in this land of liberty and equality!

Let me turn the light of fact and truth upon a picture painted by an influential newspaper published in my State upon the character and deeds of the tyrant Weyler, who is now engaged in the effort to exterminate the people of Cuba:

> He has converted the island into a prison, which no one can leave except at the risk of his life; ordered all the people of the country districts into the towns, where they can be watched by his spies and controlled by his army; decreed the death penalty to all who are suspected of sympathizing with the insurgents; ordered the conscription of all able-bodied men, the confiscation of all property which can be used by his forces, and the destruction of all that his lieutenants judge may be of use to his opponents. He has ordered the trial by court-martial of all who circulate news favorable to the revolution, and recommended that prisoners taken in battle be shot at sight. His subalterns are already executing his barbarous purposes, and not only the rebels, but the women and children, the aged and infirm, are falling victims to Spanish fury. From one end to the other of the island there is a reign of terror, and the horrors of a war of extermination are everywhere present in the territory controlled by the Spanish army.
> All this happens at our very doors, within 150 miles of our coast, upon an island that is naturally a part of our country, among a people who are nearly all our friends and who would be among our best customers if they could escape from the heavy hand of the mistress who has plundered, outraged, and oppressed them until she has driven them to a life-and-death struggle for freedom. And it all happens, too, while we are exhausting ourselves in resolutions of sympathy for Armenia and orations upon the boundary question in Venezuela.
> It should be stopped, and stopped by us. It can be stopped by a word, and that word should be said by Congress.

Mr. President, that picture is not overdrawn, and our duty can not safely be measured by meaningless words of sympathy or empty resolutions of regret. It is not for me to say how far others should go in this matter, but for myself I am prepared to vote for any measure that promises relief to those whose hands are extended to us for neighborly help in the hour of their great trial.

General Weyler is a tyrant and a butcher. The rifle, the sword, the dagger, and the dungeon are the arguments that he proposes to use upon the unwilling subjects of the mother country.

How refreshing in contrast are the words and the conduct of General Gomez, the brave and humane leader of the Cuban forces. Hear him:

I admire and love the American Republic, but it is impossible for me to understand why we should not be recognized as belligerents. We suffer greater wrongs than did the early American colonists who threw off the yoke of Great Britain, and we have more troops in the field than were ever gathered together by the thirteen States; yet the American Government declines to share with the patriots now fighting the honor and glory of freeing Cuba. We have taken the words of Patrick Henry as our motto, and will have liberty or death.

[Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. President, I believe that the Cuban people will achieve their independence, that liberty will be theirs, and that Spanish intolerance and barbarism will be driven from the island on which the fierce and bloody conflict of war is now raging.

We can shorten that conflict by wise action here to-day. We can give Spain to understand that the same love of liberty that burned so brightly on the battlefields of the Revolution is still in the hearts of the people of this great Republic, and we can say to the people of Cuba that in their extremity they can confidently look to us not alone for sympathy, but for every form of encouragement and help that the Constitution of our country and the law of nations will permit us to extend.

Mr. President, I shall vote for the strongest resolution that is now before the Senate or that may be presented to this body, and that vote will be cast with a feeling of pride and in the hope that it may do something toward securing for the people of Cuba the God-given blessings of freedom, self-government, and national independence. It will be a mighty gain to education, to religion, and to civilization when the Republic of Cuba takes its place among the nations of the world.

Mr. President and fellow-Senators, God speed the day when Cuba shall be free. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have said already what little I desire to say in regard to the action which I esteem proper to be taken by the Senate of the United States in regard to Cuba. I do not propose now to trespass more than a moment on the time of the Senate, and that merely for the purpose of placing in the RECORD the last proclamation of General Weyler, because it contains certain statements which I think justify any action we may see fit to take:

The captain-general proclaims that he allows the rebels in the provinces of Pinar Del Rio and Habana fifteen days from the date of the proclamation in which to surrender to the authorities.

Those who do so will not be subjected to molestation. But small bands of insurgents in those provinces which do not surrender within the given period—

That is, within two weeks—will, at the expiration of that period, be treated as bandits.

Detachments of civil guards, reenforced by the civil guards of the Province of Santiago de Cuba and the Province of Puerto Principe, have orders to form lines, at their respective towns, of all persons who have joined the rebels and their property will be confiscated. The property of those who have openly aided the rebels in their raids will also be confiscated.

The towns in the western part of the island are authorized to organize corps of guerrillas, and all officeholders on leave of absence will be relieved if, after eight days from the date of the proclamation, they have not returned to their posts.

Petroleum and other inflammable articles, after the date of the proclamation, can no longer be sold in the small ungarrisoned towns.

The purport of that proclamation is plain, and we already see its result in a telegram which was in the morning papers, which has come to the representative of the insurgent cause in America from General Palma, the telegram saying:

I have received trustworthy news that in Guatao, near Habana, defenseless people have been assassinated by Spanish troops. The town is filled with horror.

The details of that slaughter have been hitherto published through other channels. The war which General Weyler personifies of shooting down and killing all, peaceable and belligerent alike, has begun.

It seems to me, Mr. President, as I have already stated—and before taking my seat I desire to repeat it—that this is a question which we wish to determine solely on the ground of what we believe to be the duty of the United States. There is an island which has been oppressed for generations; there is a people struggling for the liberty which we enjoy, struggling for it against oppression as to which that which led us to revolt against England was as nothing. They should command—they do command—the sympathy of the American people. The Committee on Foreign Relations submitted a resolution recognizing the belligerency of the insurgents, and they have earned that recognition by a year of desperate and successful fighting against heavy odds.

The committee, I understand, propose to accept the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] looking toward our taking the first step in the recognition of the independence of Cuba. That, I believe, is the true policy for the United States to pursue. That is the line for us to take in the interests of humanity, in the interests of putting down the bloody war that is raging there now. If further steps shall become necessary time and events will show what they may be, but these steps are necessary now and to-day, I believe. I believe they are reasonable; I believe they are only proper; I believe that our standing as a nation demands that we should take them; and I believe that the adoption of those resolutions by the Congress of the United States will be action that the American people will sustain without a dissenting voice and that the civilized world will applaud. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I fully intended to have participated in this discussion, but the exhaustive speeches which have been made, covering the entire ground it seems to me, leave no justification for me to prolong the debate.

In the Committee on Foreign Relations I voted for the pending resolution, but it is no fetich of mine. I am prepared to vote for that or for any other resolution, however drastic and however far-reaching, which can justly, and without violating international obligations, be passed by Congress. I have but one desire, and that is to see Cuba an independent republic, and whatever I can do justly and honorably to that end I am prepared now to do.

Mr. President, I am weary and heartsick to see this splendid Republic of ours, its foundation stones the equal rights of man, doing day after day and month after month police duty for the most wicked despotism there is to-day on this earth. When I read two or three days ago that a vessel carrying arms, ammunition, supplies, and a few men to aid the Cuban insurgents, had been successfully seized by the United States of America, I recognized the fact of the supremacy of law; but I was mortified and humiliated beyond expression, and I should have been delighted if I could have read in the very next item that Almighty God, without destroying innocent human life, had sent a commotion of nature, a grand tidal wave or a spout of water, and had sent skyward the seizing vessel, and had sent the succoring ship Cubaward; I should have rejoiced beyond measure.

Sir, I never can forget what I felt when I read in the press years and years ago that a poor black man escaping from slavery had been seized by a United States marshal, aided by a regiment of United States soldiers, in the streets of Boston, right in front of the Cradle of Liberty, and had been manacled and sent back into slavery. I recognized that the law had been vindicated; but there was not a humane or a Christian man or woman in the entire North who would not have thanked God, who would not have rejoiced without limit, if He, in His divine providence, had right at that time paralyzed the strong arm of the law and the poor slave had gone free.

Sir, I say I am tired and wearied with doing police duty for this despotism of Spain, and I look upon these resolutions and the action of Congress now as the first step in calling a halt.

Mr. President, my creed in these regards has no thirty-nine articles. It is a very brief one. These insurgents in this beautiful, but ill-fated and cruelly misgoverned, island have my profoundest sympathies. I can not forget, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] just said, that where we had one just cause to rebel against the mother country these men have scores as just for their rebellion; and I shall do or say or vote anything, consistent with the honor and the integrity of the Republic, which shall, in my opinion, promote the success of the Cuban patriots who are to-day so bravely struggling to wrest liberty from the iron grasp of a cruel and relentless despotism. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, in my view of this question we have to treat Spain as belonging to the family of civilized nations, and we have to treat the rebellion or the insurrection in Cuba by all of those rules of civilized international law which ought to prevail when foreign states deal with a question of insurrection. I have in vain listened for any argument to overthrow or to controvert in any way the argument delivered by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] in his extremely interesting and exhaustive debate on this question.

The first question which submits itself to our inquiry is whether or not the Congress of the United States can, by resolution or otherwise, recognize a status of belligerency. I regard the sentimental question as having no bearing, and as applicable to Armenia as to Cuba. I regard all appeals to the sympathies of our people by holding up dreadful pictures of the cruelties of Spain in the past as altogether out of place in the present discussion. Spain may have been cruel. History records acts of ferocity upon the part of Spanish soldiers which disgrace human nature; but Spain is not singular in the matter of ferocity. Other civilized nations have had their record stained and blotted and blurred by acts of cruelty. The autos-da-fé of Spain are very well offset by the massacre of St. Bartholomew. The treatment by Spain of the Indians of South America was somewhat more ferocious in degree, but not more cruel, in fact, than the treatment that the Indians of America have been subjected to by every civilized conquering country.

Mr. President, it is well enough to revert to what a very distinguished statesman and a President of the United States has said in regard to this question of belligerency and in regard to the question of recognizing an independent state. It was stated by the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] that President Grant was very much in favor of putting an end to the war in Cuba which started in 1868. President Grant must have very materially altered his views in 1875. What a statesman says in private intercourse, or what he says in an unguarded moment, is not to be quoted as against a deliberate and well-studied utterance of that statesman in a document of state. It is easy enough for men to give expression to sentiments favorable to the prevailing idea in a community, but, when charged with the responsibility of state, conservatism takes the place of sympathetic utterance, and I propose to read what President Grant said in 1875:

In a former message to Congress I had occasion to consider this question and reached the conclusion that the conflict in Cuba, dreadful and devastating as were its incidents, did not rise to the fearful dignity of war. Regarding it now after this lapse of time, I am unable to see that any notable success or any marked or real advance on the part of the insurgents has essentially changed the character of the contest. It has acquired greater age, but not greater or more formidable proportions. It is possible that the acts of foreign powers, and even acts of Spain herself, of this very nature, might be pointed to in defense of such recognition. But now, as in its past history, the United States should carefully avoid the false lights which might lead it into the mazes of doubtful law and of questionable propriety, and adhere rigidly and sternly to the rule which has been its guide, of doing only that which is right and honest and of good report. The question of according or of withholding rights of belligerency must be judged, in every case, in view of the patricular attending facts. Unless justified by necessity, it is always, and justly, regarded as an unfriendly act, and a gratuitous demonstration of moral support to the rebellion. It is necessary, and it is required, when the interests and rights of another government or of its people are so far affected by a pending civil conflict as to require a definition of its relations to the parties thereto. But this conflict must be one which will be recognized in the sense of international law as war. Belligerence, too, is a fact. The mere existence of contending armed bodies, and their occasional conflicts, do not constitute war in the sense referred to. Applying to the existing condition of affairs in Cuba the test recognized by publicists and writers on international law, and which have been observed by nations of dignity, honesty, and power, when free from sensitive or selfish and unworthy motives, I fail to find in the insurrection the existence of such a substantial political organization, real, palpable, and manifest to the world, having the forms and capable of the ordinary functions of government toward its own people and to other states, with courts for the administration of justice, with a local habitation possessing such organization of force, such material, such occupation of territory, as to take the contest out of the category of a mere rebellious insurrection or occasional skirmishes, and place it on the terrible footing of war, to which a recognition of belligerency would aim to elevate it. The contest, moreover, is solely on land; the insurrection has not possessed itself of a single seaport whence it may send its flag, nor has it any means of communication with foreign powers except through the military lines of its adversaries.

Mr. President, there is the embodiment in that message of President Grant of all the international law on the subject of belligerency. There must be a political organization, clear, palpable, manifest to the world with a local habitation, possessing a certain amount of territory, with at least one seaport from which to send forth its ships.

Now, I affirm that, although the insurrection is greater to-day than it was in 1875, the same essential features surround the present uprising of the people of Cuba that existed in the revolution or rebellion of 1868. Cuba is a long island, being about 750 miles long. It has about 2,000 miles of seacoast on either side, and the settlements are on the seaboard. From Pinar del Rio, in the east, to Cienfuegos, in the west, the Spaniards have every single city. Not a single seaport is in the hands of the insurgents. The interior of the country is mountainous, woody, filled with jungle, impenetrable to troops in regular line. Therefore, it is a successful hiding place or successful retreat for guerrilla warfare. The regular troops can not penetrate into those mountains and inaccessible jungles. Therefore, armed bands of insurgents can wage a successful guerrilla war, and it is very difficult, if not impossible, upon the part of the regular troops to entirely crush them out.

I am making what few remarks I intend to make upon this question with due regard to the rights of the United States primarily, with due regard to the obligation of the United States by that code of law which governs the conduct of civilized nations in regard to one another. I ask what is there here, even conceding the power of Congress to declare a state of belligerency, which I do not, to warrant a declaration on the part of the Congress of the United States of belligerency, much less of recognition. We have been pointed to nothing, not one single official datum, not one scintilla of evidence has been brought to show such a state of affairs as would warrant Congress, if it had the power, to recognize belligerency in the war between Cuba and Spain.

Sir, we know that our people are in sympathy with the Cuban patriots, and so am I. We know that the press is teeming with sympathetic statements. We must take those statements with grains of allowance. Enthusiastic, sympathetic men, writers from America, in giving accounts of the campaigns in Cuba, recite horrible details of the murders and massacres of Weyler. Whole platoons of Cubans are said to be butchered. I venture to say, Mr. President, knowing somewhat of the character of the insurgents, that the cruelty is not altogether one-sided. I venture to say that retaliatory acts upon the part of the insurgents of equal severity are committed as against the Spaniards. I know not, none of us know officially or certainly, the facts in such a way as to predicate on them formal or official action as respects the insurrection in Cuba. From the statements in the press more men have been killed than have been enrolled in the Cuban army. From the statements of Spanish authorities they have slain in battle a great many more men than exist in the Cuban army. Both accounts, no doubt, are exaggerated, and we here in the House and in the Senate, not having the means of communication, not being in correspondence with the American consul, having none of the data from which we could draw a correct conclusion, are called upon to recognize as a fact that which we do not know to exist as a fact. Belligerence, in the language of President Grant, is a fact; and can any of us here affirm the fact of belligerency? We must treat this matter between Spain and her colony as we would treat a matter between any other foreign power and her colony.

It is true, sir, that Cuba lies at our door. It is true that the American fiat, if you may so term it, has gone forth that no other foreign power than Spain can hold Cuba. That is on account of the imminent danger to us, in case of hostilities, of the occupation of that island by a foreign and powerful neighbor. But while that is our declaration, it is not founded on any other principle than the principle of self-interest and the principle of maintaining the integrity and perpetuity of our own institutions against the probable assaults of a powerful neighbor.

As to Cuba, we hold out to them the same hand that we hold out to every nation in the world struggling for freedom. Whenever the hand of a struggling patriot is held forth we are ready and willing to grasp it. But, sir, when we come to treat with such delicate matters as those involved in these resolutions, we must circumscribe our conduct on the lines of international law, with due observance of the good faith, the candor, the honesty that we ought to use in treating of these subjects.

I am not in sympathy with any declaration looking toward a possibility of taking up arms against Spain and in the interest of Cuba without sufficient warrant in our own interests or in international law. Chickens have an uncomfortable way of coming home to roost sometimes, and while the manifest destiny of this country points, in my opinion, to the merging and amalgamation of all the different parts of the American continent into one Government, let that come about in the process of time. Let Canada on the one hand and Mexico and Cuba upon the other fall into our lap like ripe plums and in the peaceful march of events. But we have no right, in my opinion, to violate any one of the principles of international law in order to anticipate what, in my opinion, are certain results. If we intervene in the affairs of Cuba we do so with an implied moral obligation of protecting Cuba. If we protect Cuba we must eventually admit her as a State of this Union. We can not hold her in vassalage. We can not hold a protectorate over Cuba. That is utterly foreign and abhorrent to our institutions. A protectorate opens the door to foreign conquest, and that opens the door to the annihilation of the Republic.

Sir, when we intervene and intervene successfully—for notwithstanding the chivalry and the bravery of the Spaniards they would not last a half campaign against the power of the United States—we intervene in a way that makes Cuba an appendage of the United States. Then we must govern her, and then we must admit her into the sisterhood of States; and are gentlemen prepared to go to that length? As weak as Spain is and as little as she is able to cope with us, I have no doubt in my own mind that she would resent an unwarrantable interference in her affairs, and we would add to the complications of the case perhaps a foreign war. It is simply because of the weakness of Spain as compared to the power and strength of the United States that we ought to move in this matter with more than ordinary caution lest we incur the imputation of bullying an inferior nation.

Mr. President, any resolution which looks, on the part of the Congress of the United States, toward recognizing belligerency, as does the resolution reported from the Foreign Relations Committee, I shall vote against for two reasons: First, Congress has no power to make such a recognition; and second, the facts do not justify the recognition even if we had the power. I do not care to extend this discussion further. I think it has been shown beyond question that the legal attitude of the United States in this matter is to be governed and controlled entirely by international law, for whatever disdain we may affect for international law, it is the only code known among civilized men to govern and control the conduct of states in their relations with one another. Abolish that code if you choose; set up a propaganda of republicanism; cut loose from law, and let us proceed upon our tour of conquest and war; but so long as we claim to be held in the family of nations by the tie of international law, let us look to that law to see whether our conduct will be justified by it.

The substitute offered by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], looking toward a request upon our part to the Executive to take such steps as in his judgment may seem proper either to recognize the belligerency of Cuba or to mitigate the horrors of war, or to take steps looking toward the independence of Cuba, I have no hesitation to vote for. I will vote for any resolution of that sort. I wish to put myself entirely straight in the vote I am to give upon this question. My people reside within a very short distance of the Island of Cuba, about 300 miles. The sons of my State have signalized with their blood their devotion to the cause of liberty in Cuba.

Sir, I remember right now an instance in my early boyhood. There was a man in my town by the name of Sanders, who joined the expedition of Lopez and was one of the bravest of the brave. He was captured in that expedition, and the Spanish general ordered him to be shot. It was ordered that the prisoners to be shot should have their eyes bandaged. When the turn of Sanders came he said, "No; the last glance of my eyes must rest upon the sun of liberty. Shoot me, if you please, but you can not bandage my eyes"; and he was shot facing the Spanish executioners.

Whenever the proper time comes, whenever that country shows a capacity to throw off its shackles, when that country wants aid and assistance to help throw off those shackles in the way of individual aid, not in the way of governmental aid, the sons of my State will respond as quickly as the sons of any other State of this Union. They are wedded to the cause of liberty everywhere. They are wedded to the cause of Cuban liberty, but when resolutions or other acts of Congress strike a fatal blow, in my opinion, to the international rules which ought to govern the relations of one nation to another, I for one say I can not and will not vote for them.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the Secretary to read Senate joint resolution No. 87, a proposed substitute for the pending resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read the joint resolution (S. R. 87) authorizing and requesting the President of the United States to recognize the political independence of the Republic of Cuba, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. ALLEN on the 26th instant, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and requested to issue a proclamation recognizing the Republic of Cuba as it exists under the constitution and form of government proclaimed at Jimaguaya, under President Cisneros, in the month of May, A. D. 1895, as a free and independent nation, and according the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of said Republic all the rights and privileges accorded to the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the Government of Spain.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] yesterday expressed his surprise at my refusal to yield ready assent to the conclusion that the exclusive power to recognize the independence of Cuba resides in the President of the United States, and he stated that the excellent speeches of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], in which they had reached that conclusion, had been lost upon me.

I do not by any means profess to be a master of international law or to be an expert in constitutional learning, although I have devoted some time to the study of both of those subjects, but I do believe that I have some general ideas drawn from the history of the country and the conduct and policy of nations that fully warrant me in arriving at the conclusion I have long since reached, that the power of recognizing the independence of Cuba, or the independence of any other people, is one which under our form of government resides in Congress, and not in the Chief Executive, notwithstanding others may differ with me.

By section 6 of the Articles of Confederation it was provided:

No State, without the consent of the United States in Congress assembled, shall send any embassy to, or receive any embassy from, or invite any conference, agreements, alliances, or treaty, with any King, Prince, or State. * * *

This language is clear and concise and is not capable of misinterpretation. It expressly vests in Congress the exclusive power to send and receive an embassy, thus recognizing Congress as the direct representative of the people, who are supreme in this as in all other respects. It was the policy of the founders of this Government to keep political power in the hands of the people so far as it could be done consistently with its efficient execution. No one, in reading this language, can be mistaken as to the fact that to Congress is reserved the power to send and receive embassies, and therefore, in so far as the independence of a nation is concerned, Congress possesses the incidental power of recognizing it.

What change has been wrought in the policy of our Government since then by the adoption of the Constitution? It is true that the Constitution recognizes a distinct executive branch of the Government, at the head of which stands the President of the United States, but I do not think there is anything in that instrument or in its history which will warrant in the slightest degree the conclusion that the sole power of recognizing the belligerent rights or independence of a nation resides in the President.

In enumerating the powers conferred on the President it is declared by section 3, Article II, of the Constitution, that he "shall receive ambassadors and other public ministers," but it certainly would be a great stretch of power on the part of the President to receive an ambassador or other public minister without first having the express or implied consent of Congress to do so. We can easily conceive of a case where this country would be in open hostility to another, and the President, notwithstanding that fact, would receive an ambassador or other public minister therefrom, thus, according to the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from California, recognizing the independent status of that country and usurping in a large measure the power of Congress to declare war and conclude peace.

Mr. President, we can not be bound by such interpretation of our fundamental law. The diplomatic relations of the nation must in the very nature of things be under the control of Congress as the supreme lawmaking power of the nation. Congress has power to declare war, with all the consequences that flow from it, among which would be the expulsion from our capital of a representative of the hostile nation. Congress has power to conclude peace, which carries with it as an incident the right of the President, with the assent of Congress, to receive the ambassador or other public minister of the country with which we have been at war. It is true that the President should have, and is vested with power, with the approval of Congress, as the agent of the people to receive ambassadors and other public ministers. This can not be doubted. But this power must be construed with the power of Congress to declare war and conclude peace, and as a power which in a certain sense grows out of the action of Congress in respect to our duty toward nations. It is not an exclusive power residing in the President to be exercised by him at his mere will or caprice. He does not possess this power in hostility to the action of Congress or without its consent in some form. In making this declaration in this public manner where my words go upon record for all time, I am not unmindful of the force of much that has been said on this subject, not only in this Chamber at the present time and in previous Congresses, but by statesmen, writers, and others whose judgment is entitled to respect. But the history of the world, of our country, and the precedents of modern times support me in this declaration.

Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] and the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] stated in their remarks yesterday that the fact of the independence of Cuba must first be established before it can be recognized by us. That is not the exact language employed by them, but substantially what they said. Now, I do not disagree with the conclusion that Cuba must be independent before her independence can be recognized. In the very nature of things, a government must exist before its existence can be recognized by the political world. The difficulty does not lie in stating the general proposition, it lies in its application. What constitutes independence within the definition of international law? It does not mean that independence de jure must be so far an accomplished fact that there is no likelihood of the belligerents being overcome in subsequent battles, nor does it mean that peace must have been concluded between the contending parties before independence in its true significance can be said to exist. The independence of a nation, or a people claiming to be a nation, in the sense of international law, exists whenever and wherever there is a de facto Government hostile to another Government, however feeble and impotent the former may be. If the Cubans have in fact set up a Republic and are maintaining it by the force of arms, it is a de facto Government in the eyes of the world and may be independent by being given recognition as such by other Governments. There is nothing in international law, or in history, to prevent us from recognizing the independence of Cuba. The Cubans have an established Republic. It may be feeble, it is true, but certainly those people are in possession of three-fourths of the island and its life is maintained by their valor.

When we declare that the Republic of Cuba is an independent and sovereign nation, it becomes such in the meaning of international law, so far as we are concerned, although its complete independence of Spain may not have been accomplished. If the conclusion reached by the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from California is to be accepted as final, there are no circumstances under which a struggling people can be recognized as independent until, unaided and alone, they are able to maintain a Government independent of those against whom they are in revolt. This is not the independent Government spoken of and recognized by international law.

Mr. President, let me call attention to two conspicuous facts in the history of the world, and history is replete with like cases. In 1792 the Government of France had passed from Louis XVI to the National Convention. This was at the time when the French Commune reigned supreme in Paris and France. No one will deny that the Government of the National Convention was a de facto as well as an independent Government. Louis XVI had been compelled to flee to Austria for safety, and yet all through the years of the French Revolution Austria and other Governments regarded Louis XVI as the head of the de jure Government of France and the officers appointed by him as the legitimate officers of that Government, notwithstanding they had been overthrown by the revolutionists and were not discharging the duties or functions of sovereignty.

The history of the world furnishes numerous examples of this kind of recognition, and we do ourselves grave injustice when we assert the broad and erroneous proposition that independence from the mother country must be an accomplished fact before another Government has a right to recognize the belligerents as constituting a separate and independent nation.

I have but little to say upon the subject of these resolutions. I am decidedly in favor of the adoption of a resolution that will not only recognize the belligerent rights of the Cubans, but which will recognize their complete independence and will invite the President of the United States, as the recognized head of the executive department of our Government, to issue a proclamation to this effect and to admit to our diplomatic circles a representative of the Republic of Cuba upon terms of exact equality with the representative of the Government of Spain. If I had it within my power I would go further than this. I would say to Spain: "Your treatment of the Cubans for the last fifty years has been brutal and inhuman; you have shocked the moral sense of the civilized world; you have put yourself in an attitude to invite the universal execration of all good people and all civilized nations; you have stifled the cries of the Cubans for liberty and have drenched every acre of their soil with the blood of innocent men, women, and children, and now, in the spirit of our free institutions, the people of the United States, being the chief guardians and advocates of popular liberty upon this hemisphere, will require you to relax your hold upon these people and give to them that freedom and right of self-government that is inalienable to all people."

Mr. President, I was surprised at the remarks of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]. He told the Senate and the country that a state of war does not exist in Cuba. I have always been led to believe by examining works of international law and historical works that a state of war exists wherever there is an armed conflict between nations or states, or between parts of states, and I always supposed that belligerents are those persons engaged in an armed conflict.

The honorable Senator from Louisiana tells us again that we have no evidence to prove that there is a state of war in Cuba. Is it necessary for the Senate of the United States to sit as a police court and listen to the testimony of witnesses? Are we not required under well-known and well-established rules of international law to take recognition of the condition of Cuba and those Governments that are in close proximity to the United States?

It is a well-known fact to-day that 30,000 armed Cubans struggling for liberty are practically in possession of three-fourths of the Island of Cuba, and that their march of conquest is blocked by about 140,000 armed Spaniards who are occupying the other fourth of that island for the purpose of subduing the spirit of liberty. Yet the Senator from Louisiana discovers, as other Senators have discovered, something in international law to prevent the Congress of the United States from taking prompt and efficient action on the line of recognizing the independence of those people.

I shall not detain the Senate any great length of time at this late hour to discuss this question, but I can not resist the temptation of calling attention to some prominent features of the controversy from 1868 to 1878 in the struggle between Cuba and the parent country. Between 1868 and 1878 there were executed in the Island of Cuba for political offenses, and for no other cause, 2,927 citizens of that island. There were captured during that time, and presumably executed in some form (for they have never been heard from since the days of their capture), 4,672 persons for political offenses. There were put to the garrote at that time for political offenses 191 other persons, besides thousands of others captured in battle who have never been heard of from that time to this, and who were presumably sent to the penal colonies of Spain to spend the remainder of their lives in penal servitude for no other offenses than aspiring for liberty, which we and all God's people by nature are entitled to.

I do not purpose now to recall the attention of the Senate to the barbarities that have been practiced by General Weyler, who has recently been sent to Cuba, and who has been sent there not because he is a dazzling military success, not because of his ability to control the people in Cuba, but because of his known love of blood and his predisposition to butcher the people of that island.

Yet, Mr. President, we are to be told that these barbarities can be practiced less than 100 miles from our shore; we are to be told that the arm of the Government of the United States falls impotent and powerless under the circumstances; that somewhere in some musty volume of international law, or in the utterance of some great statesman forty or fifty years ago, there is something that prohibits us from extending to these people our aid and our sympathy! It would seem from what has been read from the desk and from what we see in the public press of this country (and I make due allowance for exaggerations on both sides) that the butcher Weyler is not satisfied with slaying the men upon the Island of Cuba who aspire for liberty, but that the cries of innocent childhood and the modesty and virtue and defenselesness of womanhood do not affect him and do not stay his bloody march and his bloody hand.

The honorable Senator from Louisiana says we must recognize Spain as a part of the family of civilized nations upon the face of the globe. Mr. President, Spain is an outlaw nation. She is not entitled to the respect, the confidence, or the esteem of the liberty-loving American people. Hers has been the march of blood. With the torch in one hand she has burned down the habitations of the people of Cuba; with the sword of vengeance in the other she has stabbed to death or cut the throats of those who have refused to yield cheerful obedience to her iron rule.

Mr. President, I am not radical in anything, not even in my Populism. I believe that it is but policy to consult conservatism and to act conservatively. But there comes a time in the history of nations when the national heart as well as the national judgment is appealed to. By our situation upon this hemisphere, by our stand at the head of republics upon the face of the earth, we owe a duty to those who are in close proximity to us to see at least that they shall receive humane and just treatment at the hands of their rulers.

The Island of Cuba by her proximity to us and by the hopes and aspirations of her people belongs to the Government of the United States. The time must speedily come when the bloody hand of Spain will be wrested from that island and the throats of her people.

Mr. President, I would go further in the interests of humanity than these resolutions propose to go. I would not only recognize the belligerent rights of Cuba, but I would establish her as one of the Republics of this earth. If need be, I would muster every man in the United States and every war vessel necessary to the accomplishment of the task, and I would erect on the ashes and ruins of Spain's control of that island a Republic modeled after the institutions of our own. Sir, I would not only do that, but if I had it in my power, I would admit the minister of the Republic of Cuba, feeble as it may be, unimportant in the eyes of the world as it may be, to the diplomatic circles at this capital upon terms of equality with the minister from Spain.

Mr. President, one word more. It is said that the action proposed is liable to involve us in war. We can not shirk responsibility because war may follow as a consequence of the discharge of our duties. The rule of Spain over Cuba has not been actuated from motives of humanity to those people, but simply for lust and gain. When Spain becomes convinced that republican institutions upon this continent mean more than mere empty declarations; that it means the United States of America will unfold its flag broad enough to cover the aspirations of the people of Cuba and adjoining countries, then the question of the independence of that people will be settled and we shall have nothing to do but to adjust the financial results.

Mr. GRAY. Before the Senator from Nebraska sits down I wish to allude to one matter of which he spoke, and that is the duty incumbent upon this great Republic of ours by reason of its peculiar relations and proximity to the Island of Cuba. I cordially agree with him in that, and subscribe to the proposition that we do owe a peculiar duty to the Island of Cuba by reason of our environment. It was because the resolution offered as an amendment by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] recognized in express terms that peculiar duty that I said yesterday or the day before, and say now, that I prefer it to the resolution that was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations. But, if I may be indulged by the courtesy of the Senator from Nebraska, I wish to say that that——

Mr. ALLEN. I yield the floor to the Senator.

Mr. GRAY. I am much obliged to the Senator from Nebraska. I want to say that that committee, of which I have the honor to be a member, has duly considered, since this debate has been going on, all of the various propositions and every phase of this question, and has agreed with unanimity upon the resolution reported some weeks ago from the committee, with the assent of the committee—to be given by its chairman, as already announced—to the addition to that resolution of the resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON], and because assent has been given to add this resolution to that already reported by the committee, I believe that to be the better form in which the Senate should express itself. Therefore I have altered my opinion in regard to the propriety of substituting the amendment offered by the Senator from California.

Mr. PASCO. May I interrupt the Senator from Delaware for a moment? Is it still the proposition to pass a concurrent resolution, or has there been any consideration of the question as to whether the pending resolution should be changed to a joint resolution?

Mr. GRAY. The proposition of the committee is that the resolution should be as it was at first reported—a concurrent resolution—and being in the shape in which it now is, with the addition of the resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania, it does justice to the aspirations of the patriots in Cuba; it does justice to the sympathy of the people of the United States for the struggling patriots in that unhappy island, and I think it comports with the dignity and honor and traditions of the Government of the United States.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from California allow me a moment?

Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. I desire before the time arrives for proceeding to vote to offer a verbal amendment to the resolution proposed by the Senator from California.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from New York to the amendment of the Senator from California will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment offered by Mr. WHITE as follows:

On page 2, line 15, strike out the word "trust" and insert the words "are of the opinion"; in line 17, after the word "been," insert the word "largely," and in lines 17 and 18 strike out the words "will at as early a date as the facts will warrant," and in place thereof insert the word "should."

Mr. CALL. I desire to give notice that I shall offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from California as proposed to be amended.

Mr. WHITE. I will state that I accept the amendment to my amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from New York is accepted by the Senator from California.

Mr. WHITE. I shall offer the amendment proposed by me as amended on the suggestion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. VEST. Let the substitute be read as now modified.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the substitute as modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Senate contemplates with solicitude and profound regret the sufferings and destruction accompanying the civil conflict now in progress in Cuba. While the United States have not interfered and will not, unless their vital interests so demand, interfere with existing colonies and dependencies of any European Government on this hemisphere, nevertheless our people have never disguised and do not now conceal their sympathy for all those who struggle patriotically, as do the Cubans now in revolt, to exercise, maintain, and preserve the right of self-government. Nor can we ignore our exceptional and close relations to Cuba by reason of geographical proximity and our consequent grave interest in all questions affecting the control or well-being of that island. We are of the opinion that the executive department, to whose investigation and care our diplomatic relations have been largely committed, should recognize the belligerency of those who are maintaining themselves in Cuba in armed opposition to Spain, and that the influence and offices of the United States may be prudently, peacefully, and effectively exerted to the end that Cuba may be enabled to establish a permanent Government of her own choice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will now read the amendment submitted as a substitute by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

The Secretary read as follows:

Joint resolution authorizing and requesting the President of the United States to recognize the political independence of the Republic of Cuba, and for other purposes.

Resolved by the Senate, etc., That the United States recognize the independence of the Republic of Cuba, proclaimed at Jimaguaya, under the presidency of Cisneros, and under the provincial constitution and form of government proclaimed at Jimaguaya in May, 1895.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a moment. I have been rather careful to state those views of this situation which pertain to the legal side of the case with as much accuracy as I could, and I do not like to be misquoted even inadvertently, and therefore when such misquotation occurs I respectfully beg leave to correct it. My friend from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] in stating my views as to what is necessary with reference to a recognition of sovereignty inadvertently, no doubt, misquoted me, and I will briefly repeat the exact phraseology which I employed, quoting from the letter from Secretary of State Adams to Mr. Monroe August 24, 1816.

There is a stage in such (revolutionary) contests when the party struggling for independence has, as I conceive, a right to demand its acknowledgment by neutral parties, and when the acknowledgment may be granted without departure from the obligations of neutrality. It is the stage when the independence is established as a matter of fact, so as to leave the chance of the opposite party to recover its dominion utterly desperate.

And continuing—

But the justice of a cause, however it may enlist individual feelings in its favor, is not sufficient to justify third parties in siding with it. The fact and the right combined can alone authorize a neutral to acknowledge a new and disputed sovereignty.

This is not any old and musty announcement, but it is an emanation coming from one of our most distinguished publicists and upon whose patriotic declarations Senators here have been prone to rely.

I desire also to state that President Grant was not the author of any old, musty international doctrine, and that the expression read by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] and by other Senators from President Grant's message to this body is strong affirmation of the principle for which I have been contending. Although it has been said that President Grant really did not write that document, and we have the authority of the Senator from Ohio to the effect that it is in the handwriting of Mr. Fish, I have, I will not say a thorough knowledge, but some knowledge of General Grant's history, and I believe he had probably a little more than a vague and uncertain notion of that which he signed. I do not know whether the Senators who made the statement wish to intimate that General Grant was in the habit of signing documents which he did not understand. I have never heretofore heard such to have been his practice. I am disposed to think that he knew what he said and that every word he said he meant. Besides, he had the subject under consideration for six or seven years and had time to get ready.

Mr. President, I am in accord with every sentiment that has been uttered here in praise of the efforts of those who are seeking to obtain their liberty in Cuba. I am as fond of liberty as anybody else. I do not like to have my personal liberty curtailed in any way, and I am not selfish about it. But practically we are doing nothing more, no matter what resolution we adopt here, than to express our sympathy for the Cuban patriots, and to this point I wish to address myself but a moment.

I will insert as a part of my remarks sections 5283, 5284, 5285, and 5286 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, regarding neutrality, if there be no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

The sections of the Revised Statutes referred to are as follows:

SEC. 5283. Every person who, within the limits of the United States, fits out and arms, or attempts to fit out and arm, or procures to be fitted out and armed, or knowingly is concerned in the furnishing, fitting out, or arming, of any vessel, with intent that such vessel shall be employed in the service of any foreign prince or state, or of any colony, district, or people, to cruise or commit hostilities against the subjects, citizens, or property of any foreign prince or state, or of any colony, district, or people, with whom the United States are at peace, or who issues or delivers a commission within the territory or jurisdiction of the United States, for any vessel, to the intent that she may be so employed, shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, and shall be fined not more than $10,000, and imprisoned not more than three years. And every such vessel, with her tackle, apparel, and furniture, together with all materials, arms, ammunition, and stores, which may have been procured for the building and equipment thereof, shall be forfeited; one-half to the use of the informer, and the other half to the use of the United States.

SEC. 5284. Every citizen of the United States who, without the limits thereof, fits out and arms, or attempts to fit out and arm, or procures to be fitted out and armed, or knowingly aids or is concerned in furnishing, fitting out, or arming any private vessel of war, or privateer, with intent that such vessel shall be employed to cruise or commit hostilities upon the citizens of the United States or their property, or who takes the command of, or enters on board of any such vessel, for such intent, or who purchases any interest in any such vessel, with a view to share in the profits thereof, shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, and fined not more than $10,000, and imprisoned not more than ten years. And the trial for such offense, if committed without the limits of the United States, shall be in the district in which the offender shall be apprehended or first brought.

SEC. 5285. Every person who, within the territory or jurisdiction of the United States, increases or augments, or procures to be increased or augmented, or knowingly is concerned in increasing or augmenting, the force of any ship of war, cruiser, or other armed vessel, which, at the time of her arrival within the United States, was a ship of war, or cruiser, or armed vessel, in the service of any foreign prince or state, or of any colony, district, or people, or belonging to the subjects or citizens of any such prince or state, colony, district, or people, the same being at war with any foreign prince or state, or of any colony, district, or people, with whom the United States are at peace, by adding to the number of the guns of such vessel, or by changing those on board of her for guns of a larger caliber, or by adding thereto any equipment solely applicable to war, shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, and shall be fined not more than $1,000 and be imprisoned not more than one year.

SEC. 5286. Every person who, within the territory or jurisdiction of the United States, begins, or sets on foot, or provides or prepares the means for, any military expedition or enterprise, to be carried on from thence against the territory or dominions of any foreign prince or state, or of any colony, district, or people, with whom the United States are at peace, shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, and shall be fined not exceeding $3,000, and imprisoned not more than three years.

Mr. WHITE. If we had the power to declare Cuba independent, and if our action became efficacious so far as independence was concerned, that would not destroy the efficacy of the neutrality laws of the United States. They would be enforceable then as they are now, and they would be then, as they are now, a restriction to some extent on the action of our people with reference to Cuba and on the action of Cuba with reference to our people.

Mr. President, we are at peace with the Spanish Government; that is admitted; and we have no right, I submit, when we are at peace with a Government which we have recognized for years, to do anything more than a recognition of the laws and customs and usages pertaining to the neutral relation will justify.

If it be true that we should do as some Senators have intimated, let us boldly and frankly and aboveboard declare war, and so act; but if we are to proceed within the lines of neutrality, let us do it. I do not think it will tend to bring about the peaceful procurement of the independence of Cuba, which is desired in all the resolutions, to use as violent language with reference to a country with which we are at peace as I have heard upon this floor. If our object is to procure peaceably the independence of Cuba, we should act in accordance with our expressed wish. If we are seeking to persuade a nation into the release of her claims, we should do so by the use ot those arguments or those practices which are commended among enlightened and civilized men. If I had the power personally, with the information which has been developed here, I would say undoubtedly that belligerent rights should be accorded to Cuba; but I am unwilling to say anything or to do anything which will be beyond our power and without our duty. I believe the adoption of the resolution proposed by me goes as far as consistency allows; that it is an earnest and an emphatic expression of a desire to procure that condition of things which all here hope to see brought about.

I again call the attention of Senators to the fact that a resolution announcing the independence of Cuba will have no more effect toward the procurement of that independence, except by its moral weight, than a resolution in recognition of belligerency. It will suspend no neutrality law; it will relieve none of those who are seeking to aid the Cubans from the imposition of our neutrality statutes; and I repeat what I said before, that I see no obstacle to the Cuban leaders taking advantage of the privilege they now have, to obtain and send merchantmen to the ports of this country and load them with arms and ammunition. The result of any efforts to detain them will undoubtedly be the same as those unsuccessful efforts which were made by this Government in the case of Chile.

I might also call attention to a case decided by Judge Blatchford, in 4 Benedict, in the case of the Florida, and also with reference to Cuba herself, when she was in revolt upon another occasion, where he distinctly held that the right of the insurgents to procure arms in this country could not be disputed by the Government, unless they attempted to do so by means of fitting out an armed expedition.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I have already stated, I think, that I shall propose the resolution offered by me as it has been amended by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL].

I will now yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. I wanted to ask the Senator from California a question. I have no disposition to discuss the subject any further. The Senator has discussed the effect of a declaration of belligerent rights by this country as to Cuba.

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. VEST. Now, I should like to ask the Senator what would be the effect of such a recognition upon the securities of Spain; in other words, upon her military power and resources?

Mr. WHITE. Since I heard the discussion with reference to bimetallism between the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] the other day, I do not know that my financial abilities are sufficient to answer the question. [Laughter.]

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator this question: Does he not believe that the recognition by this country of the independence of Cuba would stop that terrible war inside of sixty days?

Mr. WHITE. I do not know, but my belief is that the war would last longer than sixty days. I stated, however, that there would be undoubtedly some moral force attached to any resolution which we might pass here recognizing our wish and desire and expressing our opinion on this subject.

Mr. HALE. Before the Senator sits down——

Mr. WHITE. One moment. I desire to correct a motion I made when I was interrupted, in relation to my resolution. To retain the parliamentary status to which I think it entitled, I move the adoption of the resolution as amended by the Senator from New York as a substitute for the last amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. HALE. It was that to which I wished to call the attention of the Senator; otherwise we should have no opportunity to vote on his proposition.

Mr. WHITE. I am obliged to the Senator for calling my attention to the parliamentary situation.

Mr. HALE. The Senator's proposition is now in such a position parliamentarily that the Senate can vote upon it, as modified by the Senator from New York, before coming to the last proposition of the committee.

Mr. HILL. I rise merely to a parliamentary inquiry and for the purpose of soliciting information before the hour of 4 o'clock, when debate ceases. Is there now pending anywhere any joint resolution?

Mr. CULLOM and others. No.

Mr. CALL. I have offered one.

Mr. HILL. What I want to know is where we stand now?

Mr. STEWART. I want to inquire what is the parliamentary status of the question?

Mr. GRAY. The committee resolution is a concurrent resolution.

Mr. VEST. But the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] has offered a joint resolution.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, it was my desire before this debate closed to state in brief language my views with reference to the great contest now going on in Cuba and my earnest sympathy with the people in that island who are making such a brave struggle to establish a republican form of government, independent of all control of the Government of Spain; but as the hour of 4 o'clock is near at hand, and there are others who desire to speak, I shall confine myself to a single point, and that is with reference to the form of the resolution.

I have listened with a great deal of interest and attention to the debate which has been going on during the last few days. I was disposed to yield to the views of the committee in bringing forward a mere concurrent resolution for carrying out the purposes which I think a large majority of the Senate have in view. Before this debate commenced I regarded the recognition of a state of belligerency as one of the prerogatives of Congress, and was of the opinion that the President shared in the responsibility of such recognition bcause of his connection with the legislative department of the Government by virtue of his power to approve or to veto all acts passed by Congress.

I have listened with a great deal of attention to the debate, particularly to the views expressed on this point by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I have a great deal of confidence in his legal judgment, but I have not been able to agree with his views on this point or to reach the conclusion that Congress is able to divorce itself from its responsibility as a part of the lawmaking power with reference to the recognition of belligerent rights in cases like that now before us. I believe that this question of the recognition of a state of belligerency between Spain and the Cubans in arms can properly be first considered and acted upon by Congress. The President in his message has called our attention to the condition of affairs in Cuba, as it was his prerogative and his right to do, and the question is properly before Congress to decide whether the contest has assumed the proportions of an actual war and, if so, to accord to the Cubans such rights as are usually accorded to belligerents.

A concurrent resolution is merely an expression of opinion. In my judgment we want more positive action than that. We want something in the shape of a law, and for that purpose I think that whatever we do to-day should be in the form of a joint resolution. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to go as far as we properly may go to assist the Cuban patriots in their struggle, and the incidents and history of the contest fully justify us in recognizing them as a belligerent power, though I do not think the time has arrived when our Government can go beyond such recognition.

Mr. SHERMAN. But a few minutes remain before the debate is to close, and I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator. The reason why a joint resolution ought not to be adopted is that if adopted the President will be compelled to act on this important question within ten days, to say yes or no; while if we send to him a concurrent resolution we send him our opinion, and he can act upon that opinion and exercise the executive power at any time whenever occasion arises.

Mr. PASCO. In my judgment that is one of the strongest reasons why a joint resolution should be passed, because then there must be some positive action within a reasonable time; and if any reasons exist why the Cubans who are contending against Spain should not be recognized as belligerents, it will be the prerogative of the President, under the veto power, to give the reasons to Congress and the country why such action should not now be taken. To my mind that is one of the strongest reasons why we should act to-day by a joint resolution, which will give force and effect to whatever action is taken by Congress.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask the Senator to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. PASCO. Certainly.

Mr. CAMERON. I desire to offer what I send to the desk as an amendment to the resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations it is proposed to add:

Resolved further, That the friendly offices of the United States should be offered by the President to the Spanish Government for the recognition of the independence of Cuba.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from Florida will allow me, I am authorized by the Committee on Foreign Relations to accept the amendment just offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania as an amendment to the proposition reported by the committee.

Mr. ALLEN. How will it read then?

Mr. PASCO. Let it be read hereafter. I decline to yield now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Florida as entitled to the floor.

Mr. PASCO. The explanation can be made hereafter.

I shall close what I have attempted to say by offering the joint resolution which I have sent to the desk; which I ask may be read, so that it may be considered at the proper time when this matter comes up for action.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution submitted by the Senator from Florida will be read for information.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, in the opinion of Congress, a condition of public war exists between the Government of Spain and the Government proclaimed and for some time maintained by force of arms by the people of Cuba; and the President of the United States is hereby authorized to issue a proclamation recognizing this condition of belligerency between the two contending forces.

Mr. PASCO. I wish to offer this as a substitute for the resolution offered by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] or to the main proposition whenever it may be in order to do so.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I desire to present in this connection the petition of C. B. Scott and 115 other citizens of West Virginia, praying for the recognition of the Cubans as belligerents.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The subject to which the petition pertains being under consideration, the petition will lie on the table.

Mr. CALL. I appeal to the Senator from Ohio to ask unanimous consent that the time for discussion may be extended half an hour. ["No!" "No!"]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. VEST. I object.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we ought never to depart from a unanimous-consent agreement in regard to acting upon a subject, and I therefore object.

Mr. GORMAN. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to suggest the point of order that a joint resolution can not be offered as a substitute for a concurrent resolution. A concurrent resolution requires simply one vote and a joint resolution requires three votes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands the rule. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] has been accepted by unanimous consent, and becomes a part of the resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GORMAN. Let it be read.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the reading of that original resolution as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution as amended will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That, in the opinion of Congress, a condition of public war exists between the Government of Spain and the Government proclaimed and for some time maintained by force of arms by the people of Cuba; and that the United States of America should maintain a strict neutrality between the contending powers, according to each all the rights of belligerents in the ports and territory of the United States.

Resolved further, That the friendly offices of the United States should be offered by the President to the Spanish Government for the recognition of the independence of Cuba.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] submits an amendment as a substitute for the resolutions reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations. The proposed substitute will be read:

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate contemplates with solicitude and profound regret the sufferings and destruction accompanying the civil conflict now in progress in Cuba. While the United States have not interfered and will not, unless their vital interests so demand, interfere with existing colonies and dependencies of any European Government on this hemisphere, nevertheless our people have never disguised and do not now conceal their sympathy for all those who struggle patriotically, as do the Cubans now in revolt, to exercise, maintain, and preserve the right of self-government. Nor can we ignore our exceptional and close relations to Cuba by reason of geographical proximity and our consequent grave interest in all questions affecting the control or well-being of that island. We are of the opinion that the executive department, to whose investigation and care our diplomatic relations have been largely committed, should recognize the belligerency of those who are maintaining themselves in Cuba in armed opposition to Spain, and that the influence and offices of the United States may be prudently, peacefully, and effectively exerted to the end that Cuba may be enabled to establish a permanent Government of her own choice.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the amendment be laid upon the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to lay upon the table the substitute offered by the Senator from California.

Mr. SHERMAN. The suggestion is made that this might carry the whole subject, but I do not so understand the rule. ["Oh, no!"] The rule expressly provides, I think, that a motion to lay on the table may be made without affecting the main subject. I ask a decision of the Chair upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has no doubt of that. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. CAFFERY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAFFERY (when Mr. BLANCHARD'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. BLANCHARD] is unavoidably absent from the Senate to-day. I am authorized to announce his general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. I do not know how my colleague would vote upon this question, if present.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. BACON. I am authorized to say that my colleague [Mr. GORDON] would favor the resolutions reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and therefore, if present, would vote in the affirmative to lay the proposed substitute upon the table.

Mr. GEAR. Then I vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. HANSBROUGH'S name was called). I have been requested by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] to say that he is unavoidably absent from the city. If he were present, he would vote for the resolutions reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations as amended.

Mr. LODGE (when Mr. HOAR'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HOAR] is absent owing to serious illness in his family. He has a standing pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH]. He instructed me to say that if he were present he would vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. MORGAN. My colleague [Mr. PUGH] is detained at home by sickness. If he were present, he would vote for the resolutions reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], but understanding that if present he would vote on this question as I do, I vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. If he were present I should vote "nay." I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. CHANDLER (when Mr. MURPHY'S name was called). I am paired on political questions only with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY], and this not being a political question I have voted "yea." I desire to state that he has been for some time absent from the Senate Chamber on account of illness.

Mr. HAWLEY (when Mr. PLATT'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. PLATT] sent me a hasty note as he was leaving the city requesting me, if necessary, to pair him on the votes relating to the Cuban question. That, however, owing to the almost unanimous opinion prevailing in the Senate, I find to be practically impossible. The amendments have been various, and I do not know how my colleague would have voted on each of them if present. I think, however, he would vote with the rest of us.

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. THURSTON. I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. TURPIE (when the name of Mr. VOORHEES was called). My colleague [Mr. VOORHEES] is detained from the Senate by illness. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BATE. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. HARRIS] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] are necessarily absent. I understand that they have agreed to pair with each other until their return.

Mr. CULLOM. I was about to announce that my colleague [Mr. PALMER] had a general pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], but an announcement has just been made that the Senator from North Dakota is paired with the Senator from Tennessee. I fear that my colleague stands without a pair.

Mr. PASCO. I will state that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] has a general pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH].

Mr. CULLOM. I think my colleague went away with the understanding that that pair should remain until his return.

Mr. PASCO. The Senator from Tennessee is usually paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. GALLINGER. On this matter I will state that the Senator from North Dakota called upon me asking me to take charge of his pair during his absence. He said he was going to Tennessee with the Senator from Tennessee, and desired to be paired with that Senator during their joint absence.

Mr. BATE. Do I understand that the pair stands, then?

Mr. GALLINGER. Undoubtedly that pair stands.

Mr. BATE. So that my colleague is paired with the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BATE. Very well.

Mr. TELLER. My colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. He is paired with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE].

Mr. CULLOM. I announce that if there is no other pair for the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] I will pair my colleague [Mr. PALMER] with him.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so noted.

The result was announced—yeas 57, nays 12; as follows:

So the amendment was laid on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer as a substitute for the resolution the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled——

Mr. ALLISON. That is a joint resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. And it is not in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair inquires of the Senator from Nebraska whether his amendment is offered as a joint resolution?

Mr. ALLEN. As a joint resolution and as a substitute for the resolution reported by the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair can not entertain it.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well; then I shall change it to a concurrent resolution, and offer it as a substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed substitute will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and requested to issue a proclamation recognizing the Republic of Cuba as it exists under the constitution and form of government proclaimed at Jimaguaya, under President Cisneros, in the month of May, A. D. 1895, as a free and independent nation, and according the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of said Republic all the rights and privileges accorded to the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the Government of Spain.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio, to lay on the table the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL], who is absent on important business. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], and vote "yea."

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 52, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—52.

Allison,	Cullom,	Hill,	Pritchard,
Bacon,	Daniel,	Irby,	Proctor,
Bate,	Davis,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Berry,	Elkins,	Lodge,	Sherman,
Brown,	Faulkner,	McBride,	Shoup,
Burrows,	Frye,	McMillan,	Smith,
Caffery,	Gear,	Martin,	Turpie,
Cameron,	George,	Mills,	Vilas,
Carter,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Walthall,
Chandler,	Gorman,	Morrill,	Warren,
Chilton,	Gray,	Nelson,	Wetmore,
Clark,	Hale,	Pasco,	White,
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Wilson.

NAYS—17.

Allen,	Dubois,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Teller,
Baker,	Gallinger,	Peffer,	Vest.
Butler,	Jones, Nev.	Quay,
Call,	Kyle,	Squire,
Cannon,	Mantle,	Stewart,

NOT VOTING—20.

Aldrich,	Hansbrough,	Murphy,	Sewell,
Blackburn,	Harris,	Palmer,	Thurston,
Blanchard,	Hoar,	Pettigrew,	Tillman,
Brice,	Jones, Ark.	Platt,	Voorhees,
Gordon,	Mitchell, Wis.	Pugh,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. PASCO. With reference to the amendment I offered, I will state that I am aware that it can only be entertained by unanimous consent, and as I understand there is objection to it I shall not bring it up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution reported by the committee as amended.

Mr. SHERMAN. On that question I desire to have the yeas and nays.

Mr. GRAY and Mr. PEFFER. Let the concurrent resolution be read.

Mr. HAWLEY. Read the concurrent resolution as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution as amended will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That, in the opinion of Congress, a condition of public war exists between the Government of Spain and the Government proclaimed and for some time maintained by force of arms by the people of Cuba; and that the United States of America should maintain a strict neutrality between the contending powers, according to each all the rights of belligerents in the ports and territory of the United States.

Resolved further, That the friendly offices of the United States should be offered by the President to the Spanish Government for the recognition of the independence of Cuba.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for a division of the proposition pending, so that we may vote upon the concurrent resolution first reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is not in order, because the amendment has already been adopted by unanimous consent.

Mr. MORRILL. Oh, no.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, the amendment was adopted——

Mr. CULLOM. No debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution as amended.

Mr. SHERMAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BATE (when the name of Mr. HARRIS was called). I desire to announce on this, the final vote, that my colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is necessarily absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH].

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CHANDLER (when Mr. MURPHY's name was called). I desire to state in connection with this vote that the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. CULLOM (when Mr. PALMER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. PALMER] stands paired with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. From my knowledge of my colleague's views upon this subject, I feel sure that if he were present he would vote for the concurrent resolution.

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], but believing, if present, that he would vote for the concurrent resolution, I elect to exercise the discretion vested in me under our arrangement and vote "yea."

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I have agreed to pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], who is detained from the Chamber by illness. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] announced the pair of his colleague [Mr. PALMER] with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. The senior Senator from Rhode Island went away unpaired, and the pair for him was arranged on the floor while the vote was being taken. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] has stated that his colleague [Mr. PALMER] would vote "yea" on the passage of the concurrent resolution, and no inference is to be drawn from that announcement as to how the absent Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], under the circumstances, would vote if present.

Mr. CULLOM. He would vote for the concurrent resolution, I suppose.

Mr. BACON. In the absence of my colleague [Mr. GORDON], I was requested by him to state on the passage of the concurrent resolution that if he were present he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 64, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—64.

Allen,	Cullom,	Jones, Nev.	Proctor,
Allison,	Daniel,	Kyle,	Quay,
Bacon,	Davis,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Baker,	Dubois,	Lodge,	Sherman,
Bate,	Elkins,	McBride,	Shoup,
Berry,	Faulkner,	McMillan,	Smith,
Brown,	Frye,	Mantle,	Squire,
Burrows,	Gallinger,	Martin,	Stewart,
Butler,	Gear,	Mills,	Teller,
Call,	Gibson,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Thurston,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Cannon,	Gray,	Nelson,	Vest,
Carter,	Hawley,	Pasco,	Walthall,
Chandler,	Hill,	Peffer,	Warren,
Clark,	Irby,	Perkins,	White,
Cockrell,	Jones, Ark.	Pritchard,	Wilson.

NAYS—6.

Caffery,	George,	Morrill,	Wetmore.
Chilton,	Hale,

NOT VOTING—19.

Aldrich,	Hansbrough,	Palmer,	Tillman,
Blackburn,	Harris,	Pettigrew,	Vilas,
Blanchard,	Hoar,	Platt,	Voorhees,
Brice,	Mitchell, Wis.	Pugh,	Wolcott.
Gordon,	Murphy,	Sewell,

So the concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BERRY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 502) to approve a compromise and settlement between the United States and the State of Arkansas. I do not expect to try to pass it this evening, but I wish to have it taken up.

Mr. GEAR. Does the Senator from Arkansas wish to have the bill taken up to debate it or to pass it to-day?

Mr. BERRY. For consideration hereafter. There will be ample time to debate it.

Mr. GEAR. I object.

Mr. BERRY. If I can have leave for one moment, I will state that I simply desire to have the bill taken up. I do not expect to try to pass it this evening. I have no doubt there will be ample time for debate. But I desire to have it made the unfinished business, so that we may consider it hereafter.

Mr. GEAR. I object, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BERRY. I have moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill. I hope the Senator from Iowa will not object to taking it up, because it is not the desire to try to pass it this evening. I simply wish to have it taken up, so that it can be fully considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated.

Mr. GEAR. Of course, I can not object against a vote of the Senate, but I wish to state in regard to this bill that it is a measure of vast importance, involving millions of dollars. It is a bill which, in my judgment, is of a very questionable character, and I doubt whether the Senate will adopt it. Therefore I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that he do not press his motion at present.

Mr. BERRY. I am not seeking to have the bill passed now.

Mr. GEAR. I suggest that the Senator do not press his motion at this late hour.

Mr. BERRY. I simply desire to have the bill taken up with a view to having it considered hereafter. It ought to be considered at some time. We sought to have a similar measure considered at the last session. This bill has been here for weeks and months, and if, when it comes up for consideration, the Senator from Iowa can show that it is not a proper bill or that it ought not to be passed, he will have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. QUAY. I thought I had a motion to adjourn pending?

Mr. BERRY. I deny the right of the Senator from Massachusetts to take me off the floor. I have made a motion to proceed to the consideration of this bill and I insist upon the motion, unless some motion is made which takes precedence of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Pending the motion of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], a motion is made to proceed to the consideration of executive business. The Chair holds that the Senator can not yield the floor upon that motion. The motion is privileged, but it does not give the Senator the right to yield the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I hope the Senator from Arkansas will withdraw the motion for a moment to allow me to give a notice.

Mr. BERRY. I will withdraw it for that purpose.

Mr. LODGE. My motion was that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts withdraw the motion?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Then I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to withdraw the motion for a moment in order to allow me to give a notice.

Mr. LODGE. The Chair said that I can not withdraw the motion.

Mr. BERRY. Then let us have a vote on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair does not hold that the Senator from Massachusetts can not withdraw his motion. That is not the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. BERRY. I hope the Senator from Oregon will allow me. I will yield to him in a moment if I can get the bill taken up. Let us have a vote on the pending question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were 22.

Mr. BERRY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McMILLAN (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

The roll call having been concluded the result was announced—yeas 13, nays 39; as follows:

YEAS—13.

Allison,	Carter,	Gear,	Wetmore.
Baker,	Chandler,	Lodge,
Burrows,	Clark,	Nelson,
Cameron,	Gallinger,	Peffer,

NAYS—39.

Bacon,	Dubois,	Mantle,	Teller,
Bate,	Faulkner,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Thurston,
Berry,	Frye,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Brown,	George,	Pasco,	Vest,
Caffery,	Gibson,	Perkins,	Vilas,
Call,	Hawley,	Pritchard,	Walthall,
Cannon,	Hill,	Quay,	Warren,
Chilton,	Jones, Ark.	Roach,	White,
Cockrell,	Lindsay,	Squire,	Wilson.
Daniel,	McBride,	Stewart,

NOT VOTING—37.

Aldrich,	Gorman,	Martin,	Sewell,
Allen,	Gray,	Mills,	Sherman,
Blackburn,	Hale,	Mitchell, Wis.	Shoup,
Blanchard,	Hansbrough,	Morrill,	Smith,
Brice,	Harris,	Murphy,	Tillman,
Butler,	Hoar,	Palmer,	Voorhees,
Cullom,	Irby,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott.
Davis,	Jones, Nev.	Platt,
Elkins,	Kyle,	Proctor,
Gordon,	McMillan,	Pugh,

So the Senate refused to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. GEAR. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator from Iowa withdraw the motion that I may give a notice?

Mr. GEAR. Certainly.

SENATOR FROM DELAWARE.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I desire to give notice that on Wednesday next, immediately after conclusion of the morning business, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolution now on the table relative to the claim of Mr. Henry A. Du Pont to a seat in the Senate from the State of Delaware.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. GEAR. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PEFFER. I ask to be excused from attendance on the sessions of the Senate during all of next week and for two days during the following week.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas? The Chair hears none, and he is excused.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent to make an appeal to the Senator from Iowa. I want to state that this Senate bill 502 was here during the last Congress. An effort was made to consider it then. It was unanimously reported from the Committee on Public Lands, but failed to get consideration at that time because it was reported only a few days before final adjournment. The bill was reported early in the present session. All that I desire this evening is to get the bill made the unfinished business, and thereafter ample time, if it takes a week, any time that is necessary to discuss the bill, will be given. The bill was unanimously reported, as I said, from the Committee on Public Lands, and I sincerely hope that the Senator from Iowa will not undertake to defeat the consideration of the bill by motions to adjourn and motions for an executive session. All that I desire is to get it before the Senate, and then I will yield for a motion to adjourn, but I appeal to him to withdraw his motion.

Mr. GEAR. I am perfectly willing at the proper time that this bill shall be placed on the Calendar for consideration. I do not want to give it precedence over other bills which I think are more meritorious. In addition, some other gentlemen on this floor who are opposed to the bill have not had time to make proper examination in certain directions in regard to the bill. I know the whole history of the bill. I am, possibly, as familiar with the attempt to pass it as the distinguished Senator from Arkansas. The bill has passed the other House. It stood reported there and has been attempted to be passed in the small hours of the morning at one or two sessions. It did pass the House once. Yet I am satisfied, as a matter of judgment, while I have no personal feeling whatever in regard to the measure, that there are provisions in the bill which ought not to be adopted by the Senate. I am willing at the proper time to act upon it, and I will assist the Senator in procuring its consideration, but I object now.

Mr. GALLINGER. It has not passed the other House at the present session?

Mr. GEAR. No.

Mr. BERRY. All I ask the Senator is to give an opportunity for a vote, so as to determine whether the Senate wants to consider the bill now. I do not propose to proceed with it this evening, but I appeal to the Senator not to filibuster against the bill——

Mr. GEAR. I am not filibustering.

Mr. BERRY. Because that is not the proper thing to do——

Mr. GEAR. I have stated to the Senator——

Mr. BERRY. And it is not likely to help a bill in which the Senator is interested to try to filibuster against the consideration of this bill. All we ask is a consideration of the measure; if a majority of the Senate think it is a bad bill they ought to vote it down and they will vote it down, but I do protest that we ought to have an opportunity to determine whether a majority of the Senate think it ought to be considered. I think that the Senator from Iowa ought to yield to the wish of that majority and let the bill have consideration if the majority so decide.

Mr. GEAR. The Senator has alluded to a bill in which I am interested. It is true I am interested for the State and people I represent in a bill pending in both Houses of Congress. Many Senators for their States are interested also in that bill. But that bill may stand or fall on its merits when the time comes for its merits or demerits to be argued. At this late hour of the night I do not wish to give precedence to this bill, which I do not think to be such legislation as should pass this body. I do not wish to give it precedence at this late hour, when the Senate is partially empty. As I said before, at the proper time I will join with the Senator from Arkansas in giving consideration to the bill. I insist upon my motion

Mr. BERRY. The majority of the Senate is the proper judge of the proper time to consider the bill, not the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. DUBOIS. I beg the indulgence of the Senate to state that this is quite an important bill, adjusting accounts between the State of Arkansas and the United States. I am perfectly well aware that there will be a good deal of opposition to it on the floor of the Senate, but it is a matter which has engaged the attention of the Public Lands Committee and of Congress for some years. The committee of this Congress in the Senate has reported the bill unanimously, and it is only fair, it seems to me, that the bill should be considered in the Senate and passed on its merits. The Senator from Arkansas does not ask the Senate to proceed with it to-night; he simply asks that it shall not be crowded out, and it is a bill of sufficient importance, it appears to me, to be considered by the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. GEAR. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. ELKINS]. I should vote "nay," if he were present.

Mr. McMILLAN (when his name was called). I will announce my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CARTER (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON]. Being assured that he would vote "nay," if present, I will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. PASCO. I suggest that the present occupant of the chair [Mr. FAULKNER] transfer his pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], who is absent and unpaired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The present occupant of the chair transfers his pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and votes "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 6, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—6.

Allison,	Brown,	Gear,	Peffer.
Baker,	Clark,

NAYS—32.

Bacon,	Daniel,	Mantle,	Smith,

Call,	Hill,	Pasco,	Vilas,
Cannon,	Jones, Ark.	Perkins,	Walthall,
Carter,	Lindsay,	Pritchard,	White.
Cockrell,	McBride,	Roach,	Wilson.

NOT VOTING—51.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Kyle,	Quay,
Allen,	Gallinger,	Lodge,	Sewell,

Chilton,	Harris,	Pettigrew,	Warren,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Platt,	Wetmore,
Davis,	Irby,	Proctor,	Wolcott.
Elkins,	Jones, Nev.	Pugh,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No quorum has voted.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the roll be called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll; and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon,	Daniel,	Mantle,	Roach,
Bate,	Dubois,	Martin,	Smith,
Berry,	Faulkner,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Teller,
Caffery,	Frye,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Call,	Gear,	Nelson,	Vest,
Cannon,	Hill,	Pasco,	Vilas,
Carter,	Jones, Ark.	Peffer,	Walthall,
Clark,	Lindsay,	Perkins,	White,
Cockrell,	McBride,	Pritchard,	Wilson.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. BERRY. I move that the Senate adjourn; but I want to give notice that on Monday, at 2 o'clock, I shall move to take up Senate bill 502.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, March 2, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 28, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY M. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and give notice that if the motion is adopted I will ask the committee to take up and consider the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. If the gentleman will yield to me a moment, I desire to give notice to the House that I will bring in, during the day or in the morning, a rule from the Committee on Rules to make it in order on this bill to consider a bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary to change to the salary system the present fee system in respect to the payment of United States marshals and district attorneys, so that it may be considered as a part of this bill or with it. I give notice now, and will state further to the members of the House that the bill to which I have referred has been printed and has come in this morning, so that those desiring to examine a copy of it in advance of its consideration will be able to secure it in the document room.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

Mr. CANNON. I ask to take up for consideration the legislative appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6248) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT].

Mr. GROUT Mr. Chairman, a sound, stable currency is one of the prime requisites of business prosperity and national strength and independence. No nation with a disordered, fluctuating, or permanently depreciated currency, though all other conditions may be favorable, can ever take high rank as a commercial power. The reason is obvious. The currency of a country always determines values; and stocks, bonds, land, and all personal property of every kind are rated in a given country according to the commercial value of the money standard in that country. If the standard be gold, which is to-day the standard of all the great commercial nations, then the property of such country may be readily exchanged on equal terms with the property or money of all nations having the same standard of value. In other words, such nations can trade on a uniform basis of values, which not only facilitates the exchange, but is at the same time free from all disappointment to either party when the account is stated.

But not so with a country like Mexico, for instance, which has free silver coinage, and where the standard is measured by silver and is of just about one-half the value of the standard of the commercial nations of the earth.

When she sends merchandise to a foreign country of the value of a dollar in her currency she really gets but 50 cents in gold for it.

So it would be in the United States if, like Mexico, we were to go on a silver basis, to which free coinage would inevitably carry us; but of this I will speak in a moment. But I think all will agree that if we were on a silver basis every bushel of wheat, every pound of butter or pork or beef, and every manufactured article which we might export would bring just about one-half in gold its imputed value here.

Not only this, but all American securities—railway, municipal and State bonds as well as United States bonds—millions of which are now held abroad, would be worth in London, Berlin, and Paris only 50 cents on the dollar in gold. They would in fact be worth only 50 cents on the dollar in gold in our own markets.

Confessedly this would be the inevitable situation if we were on a silver basis, and where is the American who will say that this would be satisfactory to him? Where is the farmer or manufacturer who would be satisfied with his lot under a government whose measure of values is so delusive that when he takes his surplus products into the markets of the world, where their value would be measured by the world's standard, he gets only half price for them? What American could view with equanimity his American citizenship if American currency were worth but half price? In short, what American would be satisfied if the currency of his country were not equal in value to the best currency on earth? I think everyone will agree that if we were on a silver basis the above is a fair statement of the disadvantages we would labor under at the present time in our commercial intercourse with the rest of the world. But the situation would be far more humiliating and unsatisfactory right here at home.

Instead of 4 per cent United States bonds selling at 10 and 12 per cent premium for gold, an 8 per cent bond could not be sold at an equal or greater discount, and at that be paid for in a currency worth but 50 cents on the dollar in the commercial marts of the world.

TESTIMONY OF BOND SALE.

The bond sale now in progress, though discreditable enough to the economic and administrative policies which have made it necessary, yet bears eloquent testimony to the faith of the American people in the honesty of the future American dollar; testimony also to the faith of all the commercial nations of the earth whose gold is to-day finding its way to the United States Treasury in exchange for these bonds payable in coin. Think you, Mr. Chairman, the American people or the capitalists of Europe would take these bonds at this low rate of interest and high premium if they believed this country was to go on a silver basis and pay them when due in a currency of one-half the value of gold? Nay, nay. Then think of another thing. What sort of people would we be to do that thing? How, after it, could one American ever look another in the face when the subject of national honor or of public faith was mentioned?

But, saying nothing of the virtue of keeping faith with all classes of our security holders, let us for a moment see what the effect of a debased currency would be upon the working millions who, "in the sweat of the face," eat their bread. With the present disparity in the commercial value of the two metals, every dollar of the $579,400,907 of gold would be withdrawn from circulation and would become a commodity. It would be at a premium of 2 to 1. And who will describe the disastrous effect on the business of the country by the withdrawal of just about one-fourth of our entire circulating medium? And who will complete the picture and tell us of the business and financial collapse sure to follow such contraction; of the mills and factories closed, and of the workingmen hungry and cold in the street? And, worst of all, who will describe the disconsolate, the pitiable condition of the American people from whom business confidence and honor, the very first jewel in the crown of confidence, have alike fled? And think of an intelligent, spirited people trying to do business with a 50-cent dollar! Pitiable spectacle indeed, but sure to follow such a large and certain contraction of our circulating medium, and from it, except a return to an honest dollar, there would be but one escape, and that to the bottomless morass of paper issues, the evils of which would be worse even than those of contraction.

But, Mr. Chairman, this condition of things will never come to the American people.

They understand too well the advantages of a sound, stable currency; in fact, its necessity to individual and national prosperity, and especially its necessity in all foreign transactions.

But some of the free-silver advocates deny that free coinage would carry the country to a silver basis; while others, at least in private conversation, admit that it would, and say: "It is just what is wanted. As a debtor nation we would then be able to discharge all of our public obligations with half the value now called for; and at the same time the debtor class would be enabled to discharge their debts with cheap money; and though this were done, the capitalist and bondholder would have all they ought to have, and the struggling masses would be relieved of disproportionate burdens." But I deny, sir, that the sturdy yeomanry of this country or the debtor class ask for or would accept any such scheme of repudiation as this. They believe in keeping faith with all men. [Applause.]

They know that a depreciated, debased currency would surely bring evils far outbalancing any slight advantage they might gain in paying their debts in a dishonest dollar of half the value of the one they promised the creditor when the debt was contracted. I say the honest, sturdy manhood of this country would indignantly spurn any such proposition, and will have nothing of it.

EFFECT OF FREE COINAGE OF SILVER.

But for just a moment to the question: Will the free coinage of silver at the present ratio of 16 to 1 carry the currency of this country to a silver basis?

First of all, let me ask you to keep in mind the fact that the value of the silver in our standard silver dollar of 371¼ grains is only 50 cents, and that the silver dollar in circulation and the certificates and Treasury notes representing the silver in the Treasury, amounting in all to a little over $600,000,000, are now kept equal with gold only by the arbitrary fiat of the Government, whose settled policy as solemnly declared by the act of 1890 is to keep the two metals on a parity. Think of it! Six hundred millions of 50-cent dollars are to-day being kept equal with gold by the strong right arm of public faith; and the fact is it is just about all the strain the public credit will bear, especially when coupled with the trouble the evergreen greenback is giving us. The truth is the Government is now only barely keeping itself from a silver basis by frequent sales of bonds for gold.

In the face of all this who doubts if this free-coinage amendment were adopted it would take us at once to a silver standard and we should at once be a 50-cent people?

This would be inevitable, as will be seen by following for a moment the practical workings of free coinage. What a field it would open to the speculator and the money changer. All one would have to do would be to possess himself with 50 cents' worth of silver and take it to the United States mint and have it rounded off and stamped a dollar. Five hundred dollars' worth of silver taken to the mint would come out in the form of 1,000 silver dollars. Now, on the supposition that the Government could keep the silver dollar and gold dollar on a parity, what a chance for profit this would offer. All the man with the 1,000 silver dollars, which cost him but $500, would have to do would be to exchange them for a thousand gold dollars (which he could readily do, if they were kept on a parity) and go into the open market and with these 1,000 gold dollars buy enough silver bullion, when backed up to the United States mint, to turn out 2,000 silver dollars, and on every one would be found the legend "In God we trust." And so this man could go on doubling his money in every transaction in regular geometrical progression; the key of success all the time being, of course, that the two dollars could be kept by the Government on a parity, and not only as against this single man, but as against all the world. The very statement of the case demonstrates the impossibility of the Government to do any such thing, however determined it might be in the undertaking.

EFFECT ON THE POOR MAN'S MONEY.

Authorize free coinage at the ratio of 16 to 1 and silver would at once become the standard of value. Gold would instantly go into hiding. Every dollar would disappear from circulation and would become an article of merchandise, worth twice its former value, not in the markets of the world, but here in the United States, when measured by the silver standard. And this is how free coinage would affect the poor man's money, which is confessedly silver, as his transactions are all small, and how also it would affect the rich man's money, which is said to be gold; and much has been said on this point, as though the poor man's money would be benefited by free coinage.

But it will at once be seen that while the international value of of gold would remain right where it is now, its local value would be somewhat enhanced by its attitude as a commodity, always desirable, and also because it is at the same time money which those engaged in foreign transactions must surely have, while silver, no longer kept equal with gold, would go straight to its commercial value, one-half what it is now; and who fails to see that it would be not the rich man and his money, but the poor man and his money that would be placed most at a disadvantage?

But in the grand collapse that would surely follow the contraction by withdrawing $579,400,907 of gold from our circulation and in adjusting values to the new standard the poor and rich would suffer alike, but the poor would suffer most. The workingman, paid in money of half value, whose purchasing power has been reduced by one-half, could make himself whole only by having his wages doubled; but how long would he have to work and wait before his employer could be got up to the point of paying him $2 per day instead of $1 as now? In the little State of Vermont the deposits in the savings banks, which represent the small savings of the working man and woman and the small yearly balances of the farmer and mechanic, amount to $29,430,697, and in the whole United States to $1,810,597,223.

Now, if this country were to go to a silver standard, every dollar of this vast sum, which when deposited was as good as gold, would be worth but 50 cents to the depositor. Then there is the untold amount due from life insurance companies, aggregating thousands of millions, every dollar of which thus far paid to the companies in premiums was of full value, but if on a silver basis when paid out to the widows and orphans at such time as death should claim the husband and father it would be a 50-cent dollar. The pensioner's dollar would be worth but 50 cents; and so illustrations might be multiplied to show that the evils of a depreciated currency would fall heaviest, not on the wealthy, but on those of slender means.

It is true, however, that the creditor class whose obligations are not written in gold would, under a silver standard, be enabled to settle their debts in silver. But this would be a kind of repudiation which no honorable man asks or would accept.

A SIGNIFICANT FACT.

And here let me state a significant fact. It is this: In all the Rocky Mountain States, the so-called silver States, a contract payable in gold is a very common thing. And it is even said that those who are the most able and eloquent in the advocacy of free silver have carefully taken their contracts in gold, so that when the disasters of a debased currency shall come and all be whelmed in general shipwreck, these gentlemen may then clutch this anchor of gold, thus with selfish prudence cast to windward.

I do not say that any one of the gentlemen who are factiously standing in the way of wholesome legislation in another place holds contracts payable in gold, but it would be quite remarkable if every one of them was not interested, directly or indirectly, in such contracts—they are so common in their section; and whether they hold them or not, their constituents, the men behind them, do, and their very prevalence shows two things: First, an admission that the free coinage of silver will carry the country to a silver basis; and second, it shows that these gentlemen are not willing to stand by the consequences of their own doctrines—are not willing, in common phrase, to take their own medicine.

Why, in the State from which I come such a thing as a contract payable in gold would be a rarity indeed, and so it is through all the Eastern and Middle States. The people there are satisfied with silver and the paper representing silver, because they know the Government is pledged to keep all its money, silver and gold and paper, on a parity, and they have faith that the Government will do this. And I tell you, Mr. Chairman, the Government will do it. The people of this country will see that it is done. The American people have not yet become so demoralized by their own false philosophy on the subject of silver coinage as to want their contracts payable in gold. This particular phase of insane selfishness is peculiar to the people of the Rocky Mountain States, and they are welcome to a monopoly of it. And here is another notable thing about these Rocky Mountain States. You may pick out eight of them which have sixteen Senators in the United States Senate—I will not name the eight; but they have a total population less than that of the city of New York, and a total assessed valuation also less than the valuation of that city; in fact considerably less than one-half as large.

And first and last into every one of those eight States, and several others might be added to the number, have gone hundreds of thousands of dollars from the city of New York, and hundreds of thousands of dollars also from every one of the States east of the Mississippi River and north of the Ohio, which have never returned and never will return; which, in fact, have never been heard from except in the crop of statesmen who have come up here to dictate lessons in finance to their unpaid creditors, and not in finance alone, but upon the subject of tariff and revenue as well.

But, Mr. Chairman, this fact should not be taken as derogating from the right of these States to be heard, and respectfully heard too, on every public question. And I only allude to it as one of the devious and unaccountable things brought in by the "whirligig of time."

ROCKY MOUNTAIN WISDOM.

And it does seem remarkable that this family of young Commonwealths should possess a wisdom on the subjects of currency and finance and public revenue so far above and so completely at variance with the opinions and judgment of the older States from whose loins they sprung, and who have really nursed them from small beginnings into Statehood—I say it does seem remarkable, in fact anomalous, that this Rocky Mountain wisdom, which spurns all counsel from the experience of the world and closes its ears to the entreaties and expostulations of the older States, should be imperative in its demand for the free coinage of silver at 16 to 1 as the price of much-needed legislation to provide revenue and preserve the credit of the Government. [Applause.]

Verily there must be something in the atmosphere, or perhaps in the meat which our friends do eat, in that wild Rocky Mountain region, which gives them an inspiration wholly beyond the comprehension of ordinary mortals who live on a lower diet and amid milder scenes. But there is one thing the East will very likely have learned from this experience, and that is that its loanable funds will be safer nearer home, and safer, too, with a people not subject to fits of inspirational philosophy on the subject of finance. [Laughter.]

AMERICAN BIMETALLISM.

But, Mr. Chairman, enough as to the incomprehensible wisdom of our free-silver friends; and in closing, just a word as to American bimetallism.

Bimetallism, from the very nature of the case, encounters some difficulty not found in the single gold standard, such as the varying value of the two metals. But this difficulty is surmountable, and the system in the hands of the intelligent and honorable American people is not only practicable, but, in my opinion, best. I am, in short, a bimetallist.

There can, of course, be but one measure of value, one yardstick, and the term "bimetallic standard" is a misuse of language, as it will only apply at such times, not often happening, as the commercial value of the two metals is in exact accordance with the established ratio. Hence the fathers in disposing of this question avoided the term "bimetallic standard," but did decide that the unit of value should rest on both gold and silver. This is clearly shown by Jefferson's words in approving Hamilton's report on the mint in 1792. He said: "I concur with you in thinking that the unit of value must stand on both metals." It was so placed, and after careful inquiry in all the markets of the world as to the value of each metal the ratio was fixed at 15 to 1. And thus did these great minds of that day, in fact, these great minds in all American history, help establish American bimetallism. They had put the two metals as yokefellows into the Constitution as the only lawful legal tender, and when the question of minting money was reached, they were still kept together as the basis of the unit of value. And to this day they are yokefellows in the system of American bimetallism.

It is true just now the whole load is drawn by the gold ox, and it would perhaps hardly be worth while keeping the silver fellow along, only that there is a prospect that a little later he will do his share of the work. Now, it would seem to most people that the particular friends of this silver ox ought to be thankful that Uncle Sam keeps him in the team at all; that he does not, in short, knock him in the head and go on and leave him. But what has been, may be again. Prior to 1834 gold was at a premium and did not circulate, and the silver ox pulled the whole load. Gold was then behind, the same as silver is now. But in that year the ratio was changed to 16 to 1, and from that time to 1873, of which I will speak in a moment, silver was at a premium and gold alone was coined. The recollection of this ought to beget within us a little patience for the worthlessness of the silver yokefellow now.

SILVER NOT DEMONETIZED.

But the silverites claim that Uncle Sam has not given him a fair chance. They say silver was demonetized in 1873. I deny it. Not a dollar of silver was deprived of value or withdrawn from use as money, and nothing short of this constitutes demonetization. It is true, in 1873 the further coinage of the metal was suspended, and that act has been denounced as a crime clandestinely committed.

Let us see about this. The proposition was before Congress for three sessions, was reported upon and debated like any other measure, and finally became a law, because, though in that very year of 1873 while the silver product of the United States was $35,750,000, no silver dollars were then being coined or had been for several years for the reason that 16 ounces of silver were worth in the market more than an ounce of gold. It was more profitable to dispose of it as bullion. Now, how could silver have been hurt by stopping its coinage when none was being coined? It was not hurt. Very soon, however, from various causes, principal among which was the demonetization of silver by the great powers of Europe, silver went down in value, and there at once arose a cry that the United States mints be opened.

WHAT UNCLE SAM HAS DONE FOR SILVER.

Uncle Sam heard the lowing of his silver ox, and in 1878 the mints were opened to the coinage of not less than $2,000,000 per month, and in the twelve ensuing years 363,646,517 silver dollars were coined and certificates issued thereon to relieve the American people of the burden of over 13,000 tons dead weight in making their exchanges. But meantime the production of silver increased, especially in the United States, and the price still went down; and in 1890 silver was still further provided for by authorizing the purchase of something more than the entire American product at the rate of $4,500,000 per month, and out of that purchase enough was coined to redeem $155,931,002 in Treasury notes, still further carefully relieving the people from carrying around between four and five thousand tons more of silver money in their pockets, thus making a grand total of $606,332,053 of silver and its paper representatives now in circulation in the United States, including subsidiary silver; over $26,000,000 more of silver than of gold, and every dollar kept as good as gold, though its actual value is only 50 cents.

Now, this is what the American people have done and are doing to-day for silver. And yet our Rocky Mountain friends tell us it is demonetized. What effrontery, and how given to romance these gentlemen are! Mr. Chairman, the plain people are getting tired of this silver agitation. They are beginning to understand how utterly groundless is the pretense that silver is stripped of its function as money. They are beginning to see how idle and empty is all this rant and buncombe about gold bugs and plutocrats. They are beginning to understand that, more than the rich, they themselves are interested in a sound, stable currency.

In short, they are beginning to see that Uncle Sam has done all he could safely do for silver; and that he is to-day carrying a burden that almost breaks his back. I say, the people are beginning to understand this everywhere, North and South, East and West, and even out among the Rocky Mountains. And let me say in all kindness to my friends from that section that before they know it they will find the people in that region repudiating the free-coinage craze as likely to multiply their troubles rather than bring relief, and as disreputable and disadvantageous to them in their relations to the rest of the country and to the world.

GOLD MONOMETALLISM NOT WANTED.

Some one may ask, why not cast out, neck and heels, this worthless silver yokefellow and go to the gold standard? Now, this man would be a gold monometallist and a rich man, or the associate of rich men, or a crank off the same piece with the silver crank. [Laughter.]

And, Mr. Chairman, gold monometallism would be attended with many of the same evils as silver monometallism. It would work a like contraction of our circulating medium to the extent of our entire silver coinage and deprive the poor man of the very money best adapted to his use. And this must not be thought of for a moment.

We must keep the silver ox in the team if we can keep the breath of life in him. I know a double team as the basis of the unit of value is, in many respects, a troublesome one, and can be made successful only by skillful, careful, honest handling; but this the American people are equal to. Besides, the fathers started with this double team, and the American people have prospered with it as no other people on earth. The Republican party is committed to it; in fact, has always stood for bimetallism, and has always been in favor, and is now, of the largest possible use of silver consistent with keeping the two metals together. But a point has been reached when not another dollar of silver can be safely coined under existing conditions. And this our silver friends must understand once for all.

INCREASED PRODUCTION OF GOLD PROMISES RELIEF FROM TOO MUCH SILVER.

But what is the prospect that the silver ox, truly in a most dilapidated condition just now, will ever again be able to take a healthy part in the work of the team?

Mr. Chairman, it is most promising, indeed. It is found mostly in this single fact, viz, that the world's production of gold is rapidly increasing, while that of silver is remaining just about stationary.

The world's product of gold in 1894 was $180,626,100, while in 1895 it was $200,000,000, a gain of almost $20,000,000 in a single year, while the commercial value of the world's product of silver in 1895 was just about the same as in 1894, viz, $106,522,900.

In our own country, however, the change is far greater. There has been a steady decline in our silver output since 1892 from 63,500,000 ounces, worth $55,563,000, in that year, to 49,500,000 ounces in 1894, worth $31,422,000. For 1895 the product was but 46,000,000 ounces, worth $29,500,000, a decrease in three years of 16,500,000 ounces, a loss of more than one-fourth the output in 1892, and a loss in commercial value of almost one-half.

Whereas in the same three years the output of gold in the United States has increased from $33,000,000 in 1892 to $39,000,000 in 1894. In 1895 the product was $46,500,000, a net increase in these three years of $13,500,000, considerably more than one-third of the entire output in 1892.

At the same rate of increase of gold and loss of silver for the next three years, and there is every prospect of it, the United States will be producing $60,000,000 worth of gold and only 29,500,000 ounces of silver, worth at present price only $19,765,000—less than one-third the value of the gold product.

Mr. Chairman, think of this country producing, as it will within the next three years, gold of more than three times the value of its silver product, and that, too, from the bowels of the Rocky Mountains; and then think how the people out there, and their representatives in the two Houses here, will wonder and blush, and blush and wonder how they could ever have had the gall to so vociferously demand the free and unlimited coinage of a 50-cent dollar.

The figures already given show an increase in the world's gold product of 1895 of $20,000,000, and that the total value of that product was just about twice the value of the silver product, which is practically stationary. Now, at the same rate of increase for the next five years the value of the world's gold product will be three times that of silver; and in ten years four times that of silver. And who fails to see that this increased production of gold must tend to bring the two metals together throughout the world. And in my mind there is no doubt this increased production will continue, for the heart of the world is to-day set on gold mining as never before, and through improved machinery and new chemical agents and processes ores heretofore worthless are now profitably handled. It also has the further advantage, that the product, being itself the measure of all other values, is never at a discount. Gold mining to-day is the most alluring and the most profit-promising field open to adventurous and enterprising manhood. The gold prospector with his pack and pick is camped on every mountain slope from the Yukon to the Rio Grande, while the story of the South African gold fields reads like a tale from the Arabian Nights. Surely this all promises largely increased production of gold.

And who does not know that supply and demand regulate the price of these money metals the same as of every other commodity? And when gold shall become so plenty and silver so scarce that 16 ounces of silver are worth more than 1 ounce of gold then silver will become the measure of value, so far as our coinage is concerned, the same as it was prior to 1834. Then, Mr. Chairman, the silver steer will be the likelier one of the two. He will move up to first place in the team and the gold bug will go behind.

THE GOLD CURE.

Mr. Chairman, it is said by naturalists that for every human ill there is some antidote; like varioloid and vaccine for the smallpox, sulphur for the itch, and the gold cure for the liquor craze. And here we will have for the silver craze the gold cure also. All hail the gold cure! It is sure to come. It will cure those in this country who want more silver, and at the same time those in other countries who want less silver. And meantime all we have to do is to hold down our frantic silver friends till the cure shall take effect. [Laughter.]

It will inevitably bring the nations together at no distant day upon a fixed ratio for the coinage of the two metals, which the world really wants and which the world will have.

The rich man and the monopolist may want gold monometallism, but the masses do not, and they will never consent that one-half of the money of the world be turned into merchandise. There is really none too much for the needs of man when both metals are fully utilized.

INTERNATIONAL BIMETALLISM.

I do not say that increased production of gold alone will force the nations to bimetallism, for left to herself I expect England would still cling to the gold standard.

But there is a greater than England in the earth. The young giant of the Western Hemisphere, whose money is silver and gold, the money of all history, both sacred and profane, will have a word to say before either metal shall go to the melting pot as a mere commodity. There are many ways in which we can make our influence felt. The whole world wants to trade with us and will naturally respect our views. And if we are only true to bimetallism now, and demonstrate the practicability of the system by preventing our silver friends from carrying the country to the silver standard—and we are surely going to do it—and thus keep our public credit in this time of great trial free from spot or stain of any kind we shall have some influence in the next international conference. And with the metals near each other in commercial value, international bimetallism on a fixed ratio is something I hope, nay something I expect, to live to see. And when the time shall come that American coins of both metals shall pass side by side as yokefellows through the capitals of Europe, will it not indeed be a great day for American bimetallism and American statesmanship? [Applause.]

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I wish to state briefly that the Committee on Appropriations has endeavored to keep well within the law as it now exists in preparing the bill before the committee. The bill appropriates $21,444,195.51, being $925,855.49 less than the estimates submitted for the fiscal year 1897 and $625,482.57 less than the appropriations for the fiscal year 1896. The whole number of salaries provided for in the bill is 10,017, being 235 less than the number estimated for and 335 less than the number provided for in the law for the current year.

The report accompanying the bill sets out all the proposed changes in the number and grade of officers and employees in the several Departments and their rates of compensation as compared with the current law. The tabulated statement, which is also a part of the report, shows by offices, bureaus, and other titles of appropriation the amounts appropriated, together with the number of salaries for the current year, and the estimates for 1897, and the amounts recommended by the pending bill. In addition I append to my remarks a tabulated statement showing the exact reductions under appropriations for 1896 and the number of offices reduced, together with the number of salaries increased, and the sum total thereof, and the number of employees or offices created.

If any member of the committee desires to add anything to the statement I have made in the general discussion of the bill I would like to make an arrangement now as to time.

Mr. HOPKINS. Let me ask the gentleman from Tennessee if there are any changes in this bill from the existing law; and, if there are such changes, will he be kind enough to point them out?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I shall state for the information of the gentleman from Illinois that by consulting the report of the committee there will be found set forth in full any changes in existing law which are made by the bill. They are very limited in number; and without consuming the time of the House by going into detail I will state that they are all fully set forth as stated.

Mr. HOPKINS. Then there are changes in the existing law?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Some very minor changes.

Mr. DOCKERY. I wish to state, Mr. Chairman, that so far as salaries are concerned the bill carries the salaries authorized by existing law that is in the current appropriation bill. There are no increases of salaries further than those carried in the appropriation bill for the current year.

I want to commend the bill in that respect to the House. I desire also, with the permission of the gentleman in charge of the bill, to say that in my judgment in the main it is a good bill and an economical bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. It is impossible to hear what is being said.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I was about to supplement the statement of the gentleman in charge of the bill, and perhaps it may be well to repeat it, as gentlemen on both sides claim they did not hear. I may say, in answer to the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], that this bill is substantially the current law. So far as salaries are concerned, it is exactly the current law. There are no increases of salaries in this bill over the current appropriation bill, and no increases of force that are not fully warranted by testimony taken by the Committee on Appropriations. I am glad, Mr. Chairman, to be able to commend this bill in the main without any sort of equivocation or mental reservation whatever.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman states that the bill is in accordance with the current law in this, that there are no increases in salaries. I want to ask the gentleman if the bill has given the salaries allowed by law in each case?

Mr. DOCKERY. As was stated, Mr. Chairman, in the debate on the Indian appropriation bill, this bill carries perhaps——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Could not the gentleman say yes or no to my question?

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, if the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I just want to know the fact.

Mr. DOCKERY. I trust I can presume upon the courtesy of the gentleman from Tennessee——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Undoubtedly; but I thought yes or no would answer the question.

Mr. DOCKERY. I trust I may be allowed to make the reply in my own way.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I rise again to a point of order. We can not hear what gentlemen are saying.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee must be in order. It is useless for the Chair to get order if gentlemen still go around and visit the moment a member begins to speak. All gentlemen will be seated and please to cease conversation. The Chair requests the committee to remain in order until the gentleman can submit an answer to the question.

Mr. DOCKERY. I want to say further in answer again to the gentleman from Tennessee that, as was stated in the debate on the Indian appropriation bill, there are some salaries in this bill that are below the statutory limit. They have been carried below that limit since the Forty-fourth Congress, and I trust they will continue to be carried at the limit fixed in this bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. My inquiry related not so much to the salaries reduced in the Forty-fourth Congress, but to those carried in the appropriation bills of the Fifty-first, Fifty-second, and Fifty-third Congresses. Has there been any reduction in this bill in cases of that kind?

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not at this moment recall a single increase or decrease of salary over or below the current law. Possibly there may be an item of decrease or increase in the bill, but it does not come to my memory at this moment. I am sure that there is no increase over the current law. I do not now recall any decreases. I want to say, in justice to the Committee on Appropriations of the last Congress, that while there is an actual decrease of $625,482.57 in this bill, under the current law, the explanation is found in two items: First, there is a decrease of $158,263.07 on account of this appropriation being made for the short session of Congress rather than the long session. There is also a decrease of $475,190 on account of the decision of the Supreme Court holding the income tax to be unconstitutional. That operates, of course, to eliminate the salaries heretofore carried in this bill in connection with the collection of the income tax, amounting to $475,190.

Mr. HOPKINS. Before the gentleman takes his seat I should like to propound one or two questions to him.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I understand that the gentleman was the chairman of a revision commission that had charge of the reorganization of the Treasury Department, by which a large number of clerks were dropped from the service and the Department put upon a very economical basis. I see on page 2 of the report that in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury provision is made for two additional elevator conductors at $720 each.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is correct. That arises from the fact that there are two new elevators which must be operated.

Mr. HOPKINS. And in the office of the Auditor for the State and other Departments there is an additional clerk of class 2 at $1,400?

Mr. DOCKERY. That is true.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is that one of the Departments that was revised by this commission?

Mr. DOCKERY. It is.

Mr. HOPKINS. How does it happen that you are compelled to employ additional clerks?

Mr. DOCKERY. Simply because of an increase in the work.

Mr. HOPKINS. Was that taken into consideration when this commission was considering that Department?

Mr. DOCKERY. It was not, or we would have given the clerk at that time.

Mr. HOPKINS. Can the gentleman now say how many additional offices are created by this bill in the various Departments that are covered by it?

Mr. DOCKERY. Covered by what?

Mr. HOPKINS. Can the gentleman say how many additional clerks are employed in the various Departments under this bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. In this city—in the Executive Departments?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir; in the various Departments.

Mr. DOCKERY. I can not give the exact number. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that there are, or were last year, 17,599 clerks in the Government service in the city of Washington.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is the gentleman able to say how many additional clerks are provided for in this bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. There is a decrease in the clerical force.

Mr. HOPKINS. There are additional clerks; how many do they number?

Mr. DOCKERY. There are increases in the clerical force of 35 and decreases of 370, making a net decrease of 335.

Mr. HOPKINS. This decrease relates to places that were provided for under the income-tax law, that was regarded as unconstitutional by the Supreme Court?

Mr. DOCKERY. Largely so.

Mr. HOPKINS. So that there is an addition of 35 clerks over the present force. Is that correct?

Mr. DOCKERY. There is an increase in the total force of 35 and a decrease of 370. If the gentleman wants to know where——

Mr. HOPKINS. One moment. But the decrease relates to a department which never had an existence in fact?

Mr. DOCKERY. Which?

Mr. HOPKINS. The income tax.

Mr. DOCKERY. It had an existence in fact; an entire force of its own.

Mr. HOPKINS. But you never collected any money or did any business in that department?

Mr. DOCKERY. There was some money collected and returned.

Mr. HOPKINS. What I want to understand is, that outside of the income-tax department you have an increase of the clerical force of 35?

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes, sir; and I will answer the gentleman by items. There is an increase of one clerk in the office of the Auditor for the State Department.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will not put the gentleman to that trouble.

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, I desire, as I assume the gentleman is candid in asking the question, to answer it frankly.

Mr. HOPKINS. But I asked the gentleman as to the number. Now, if the House desires to know how that number is distributed I have no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, if the gentleman is content, I am.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask my colleague from Tennessee a question or two. I understood the gentleman in his opening statement to say that there were 300 salaries less provided for in this bill than in the law of the current year of 1896.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Three hundred and seventy.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now will the gentleman be kind enough to tell us how those clerks are divided—to what classes they belong?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Yes, sir; I can do so if the committee desires it in detail.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think there ought to be some statement as to where they are.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. The House of Representatives, 1; Secretary's Office, Treasury Department, 1; Office of the Treasurer. 2; Office of the Auditor for the Interior Department, 12; Office of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department, 1; Register's Office, 2; clerks in Office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 24; deputy collectors of internal revenue, 303; internal-revenue agents, 10; Territorial governments, 11; Indian Territory, judicial department, 3; making 370.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, will the gentleman state what salaries have been increased in this bill over and above the statutory law? I understood the gentleman from Missouri to say that there was no increase above the current appropriation bill of last year. I would like to know if there are not twenty salaries over and above the Revised Statutes or statute laws.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I will say, for the information of the gentleman from Tennessee, that there is no salary in this bill that is an increase over what has been appropriated and paid for the past several years.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understand that; but I was speaking of the statute law, which is not an appropriation bill. There is no current law, as I understand it, that applies to the fiscal year for which this bill provides—the year ending June 30, 1897—but the Revised Statutes apply. Now, I want to know how many changes there are, if the gentleman can tell us; how many increases above that law—the law.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Tennessee seems inclined to be of an investigating turn of mind, and I shall give him the information in detail. There are salaries appropriated in this bill to the number of 20 over the statutory provisions. They are the same as have been paid for years, and we have made no change as to that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Are there any who are paid more than the law prescribes?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I mean the statute law.

Mr. DINGLEY. But not more than has been authorized for several years in appropriation bills?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. But, as I have said, not more than has been provided for several years in the appropriation bill. Now, as to the number under the statutory amount, there are 107, and they are exactly as they have been now for several years, as provided in former appropriation bills.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, there has been no saving made, then. Is there a provision in this bill which will prevent these officers from collecting the amount of the reduction?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. There is, in the first section of the bill. And, in addition, I wish to say that the sum received for salaries in excess of the amount provided by law amounts to $13,850; the sum of those who are receiving below the amount provided by law is $36,250, making a saving of $22,400.

Mr. HOPKINS. If it will not disturb the gentleman, I would like to have him state briefly the reasons why the committee have increased the salaries of some officers above the amounts provided by law. It seems that in some instances they have raised the salary above the amount provided by law, while in other instances they have reduced it below the specified amount, and I wish the gentleman would state the reasons for that action on the part of the committee.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. The first reason that I would assign for the benefit of my friend from Illinois is the fact that it has been the practice of Congress for many years to pay these sums. For instance, take the salary of the Commissioner of Pensions. His salary, under the law, is $3,000. That amount was fixed in 1837, when the working of the Pension Bureau was comparatively simple and insignificant. The statute regulating the salary of the Commissioner has not been changed since that time, almost sixty years ago, but under the present pension system the work, as we all know, has become very voluminous and the increase has been going on for years. The duties of the Commissioner are much greater and more multifarious than they were in former years, and it has been deemed proper and necessary that his salary should be increased in accordance with the increased labors devolving upon him. Therefore for many years the Commissioner has been receiving $5,000 a year under the appropriation bills. That has been the case, I believe, for the past twenty years.

Mr. HOPKINS. Can the gentleman state what Congress changed the salary of the Commissioner of Pensions to the amount that is appropriated for by this bill?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I am informed by the clerk of the committee that the change was made in 1881.

Mr. HOPKINS. So that in this bill you are following a precedent that was set by the Appropriations Committee in 1881?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. And which has been followed ever since.

Mr. HOPKINS. What other offices in this bill are provided for above the rates fixed by law?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. The private secretary to the President is one. His salary is fixed by statute at $3,500, but he is to receive under this bill, as he has received under several past appropriation bills, $5,000 a year. The change in that case was made for the same reason as in the case of the Commissioner of Pensions. I do not remember the date when the change was made in the compensation of the private secretary to the President.

Mr. DOCKERY. It began with the Administration of President Harrison.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I am informed that the change was made in 1889. As I have said, the same reasons which account for the increase of the compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions apply to the increase of the compensation of the private secretary to the President. The country has grown enormously. The business with which this official has to deal has greatly increased in volume since the time when his salary was fixed by statute. The same reasons will apply to all these increases. The salary of the private secretary to the President is fixed by statute at $3,500, but under the appropriation bill he receives $5,000. Again, the salary of the secretary of the Civil Service Commission is fixed at $1,600 by statute, but under the appropriation bill he receives $2,000.

I have here a tabulated statement showing the officers who are allowed under this bill larger salaries and also those who are allowed smaller salaries than the salaries fixed by statute, which I shall ask leave to print.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, if it will not take too much of the gentleman's time, I will ask him to state how many clerks there are whose salaries, as appropriated in this bill, are below the amounts to which they would be entitled under the general law, and I would be glad if he would state the average reduction.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I have a statement here covering all these changes that I can read for the information of the gentleman and of the committee, but I prefer to ask that it be printed in the RECORD, so that members may have the information.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

Total number of salaries in the bill at less than statute limit, 107.
Amount necessary to bring them up to statute limit, $36,250.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I observe on page 47 of this bill that there is an appropriation made of $4,000 for the assistant treasurer at the city of New Orleans. The law, I believe, fixes the salary of that officer at $4,500. I observe also that with reference to the assistant treasurers at all the other points in this country the law is followed; for none of them is the appropriation less than $4,500. Now, I wish to know from the gentleman in charge of this bill why an exception is made with reference to this particular officer, and why his salary is fixed at a point below that which the law authorizes.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. For the information of my friend from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER] I will state that that question was not raised at all before the committee. I am informed, however, that there are five other assistant treasurers in whose salaries the same reduction is made as at New Orleans. The officer at that place is not discriminated against, but is placed in the same position with reference to salary as the assistant treasurers at Baltimore, Chicago, Cincinnati, St. Louis, and San Francisco. In thus providing for these salaries, the committee followed the precedents furnished by the action of past Congresses for many years.

Mr. MEYER. I do not understand by what authority the salary has been reduced from that fixed by law.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I presume that the Congresses which have reduced these salaries heretofore did it on the same authority as the Congress that passed the statutes originally fixing the salaries.

Mr. MEYER. Well, Mr. Chairman, I give notice now that at the proper time I shall offer an amendment to restore the salary of this official to the amount that the law authorizes.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, if no further general discussion is desired——

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I observe in lines 5, 6, and 7, on page 1 of this bill, the following language:

In full compensation for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, for the objects hereinafter expressed.

Now, I understand from the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McCALL] that in a number of instances the appropriations carried by this bill as the salaries of specific officers are less than the salaries prescribed by the statutes. I wish to ask the gentleman whether it is supposed by the committee that the language which I have just read from the bill will preclude an officer for whom less than the statutory compensation is appropriated from demanding the full compensation fixed by the statute? Will it destroy his status in the Court of Claims when he urges his demand for the full payment of the sum named in the statute?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. The gentleman from Iowa asks for the opinion of the committee. It is the opinion of the committee that this clause will preclude an officer, under the circumstances stated, from setting up in the Court of Claims a claim for the difference between the amount of salary appropriated in this bill and the salary fixed by statute, and that opinion of the committee is fortified by decisions of the courts of the country.

Mr. HEPBURN. But suppose the officer refuses to accept the salary named in this bill; can he then be precluded in the courts from demanding the sum which the statute authorizes him to receive?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. The courts have so held. And if the officer does not wish to work for the salary proposed in the bill, I take it, if he should resign, the Government would not wait long before having offered to it the services of a hundred men ready to do the same work at the salary provided in the bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to say a few words on this bill.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. HOPKINS. Five minutes.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Very well; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to make any set speech on this bill. I rise for the purpose merely of calling the attention of members of the Committee of the Whole to the peculiar practice that has grown up with this Committee on Appropriations. I do not mean to refer to the particular subcommittee that has prepared this bill, but to the practice of the committee in general in changing the provisions of the statute law.

I observe from the statement made by the gentleman in charge of the bill that in some 20 instances the salaries of officers have been increased by this bill above the amount prescribed by law. I observe also that in 115 instances this bill reduces the salaries of officers in Government employ below the amounts stipulated in the law.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this Committee on Appropriations is appointed under the rules of the House, not for legislative purposes, not for passing upon the wisdom of existing law and changing it if in their judgment it is wise so to do, but they are charged under the rules of the House to report appropriations for these various officers in accordance with the provisions of law. We find, however, that in this bill there are 150 cases with reference to which the provisions of the statute book have been violated, there being in some instances, as I have said, an increase of salary and in others a reduction.

With reference to one or two instances cited by my friend from Tennessee there may be special reasons for an increase. In the case, for example, of the Commissioner of Pensions, I can see why a man charged with the vast responsibilities of that office should be paid more than $3,000, as provided by the statute. But I can see no reason for reducing the salary of a clerk $100 or $200. I can see no reason why this Committee on Appropriations in their wisdom should undertake to repeal the law as provided by their predecessors and fix the salaries anew.

In many instances where the salaries have been increased I find the increase amounts to only two or three hundred dollars. Take, for instance, some clerkships in the Land Office and in the Pension Bureau. Where, for instance, there is an increase from $2,000, the salary provided by law, to $2,250, that, in my judgment, smacks more of a spirit of favoritism toward particular clerks than it does of an effort to provide a general system in this matter. The true policy to be pursued, in my judgment, is this: If these inequalities exist, these gentlemen whose attention is called to them in making appropriations from year to year should come in here with a general law changing the salary allowed to these officers, so that the general public may know the amount of compensation given to these Government employees. A man who is not familiar with the general appropriation bill will go to the general statutes touching the subjects, but a person familiar with the workings of the House would go to the appropriation bill.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether his salary as a member of Congress is not fixed by law at $7,500, while, in point of fact, he receives only $5,000 as his compensation?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, that simply emphasizes the position I am taking. A Congressman does not stand in any different position in respect to this matter from these other officers mentioned in the bill. The case which the gentleman puts is simply another evidence of the fact that a vicious system has grown up under the practice of the Appropriations Committee and that they have assumed to determine the amount of compensation that should be given to the public officers of this country, regardless of existing law.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

On February 19, 1896:

An act (H. R. 4145) to amend section 1309 Revised Statutes, providing a chaplain for the Military Academy;

On February 20, 1896:

An act (H. R. 3553) to incorporate the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution;

An act (H. R. 4991) to open forest reservations in the State of Colorado for the location of mining claims;

An act (H. R. 3728) to amend section 21 of an act entitled, "An act to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations, and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1889;

NOTE.—The following bills were presented to the President on February 12, 1896, and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which they originated within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, they have become laws without his approval:

An act (H. R. 3812) to authorize the Arkansas and Choctaw Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Choctaw Nation, in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;

The following bills were approved February 26, 1896:

An act (H. R. 1676) to change and fix the time for holding the district and circuit courts of the United States for the northern division of the eastern district of Tennessee; and

An act (H. R. 1785) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate one condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to W. H. Wallace Post, No. 66, Grand Army of the Republic, of Eldorado, Kans., and for other purposes.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee again resumed its session, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, a word in reply to the remarks of my colleague who has just taken his seat.

This bill as reported, as has been already stated, except where clerks have been absolutely dropped out because their services were no longer necessary in the Department, carries recommendations for the full amount that the officials are now receiving. My colleague from Illinois criticises the committee for its work in connection with the preparation of the bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. Not this committee. What I refer to is the general practice of preparing appropriation bills not strictly in accordance with the letter of the law.

Mr. CANNON. In all of these reductions, the 107 cases, I will state to my colleague that they are substantially in accordance with the law for twenty years past, beginning in the Forty-fourth Congress. The increases have gradually crept in from year to year, but they are substantially also of many years' standing and they were made in the twenty-odd cases referred to by my colleague on the committee from Tennessee, because the salaries, fixed a generation ago, were not found to be adequate under existing circumstances. The reductions below what the law provides are found to be adequate, and therefore your Committee on Appropriations recommend according to the current law, because they believe it adequately provides for the public service.

Now, my colleague, or any other member of the committee can, if he desires to do so, make the point of order on the first clause of the bill to which he has referred, which provides that these salaries shall be in full compensation for all services rendered during the fiscal year. I say that he can make the point of order, if he regards the plan proposed as an improper one, or contrary to the law, or that it involves new legislation. If he thinks so, that right is open to him. I suppose—I do not know—it may go out of the bill on the point of order. I think, possibly, that it is subject to the point of order. It was made two or three Congresses ago, and the Senate performed its function, in my judgment, and put it back, not increasing, however, the salaries in the appropriation.

It is perfectly competent for the House of Representatives to appropriate less than the salary fixed by law; and when we get to these various items my colleague or anybody else who wants to increase the salaries recommended by the Committee on Appropriations because they are below the statutory requirements, from point to point as we reach them in the consideration of the bill, can offer amendments and take the sense of the committee upon them.

Mr. DINGLEY. And let me suggest to the gentleman from Illinois, also, that in the cases of the twenty-odd salaries which are fixed above the statutory provision the point of order will be good.

Mr. DOCKERY. Undoubtedly; and they could all be reduced.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly the point of order could be made against each and every one of them. In other words, the Committee on Appropriations, as the organ of the House, has performed its function according to the best of its judgment. It reports the bill for the consideration of the House. And it is in the power of any member of the Committee of the Whole to make points of order and to make motions for amendment in the shape of an increase or decrease, within the rules. We do not deprecate the making of points of order and motions to amend; and it will be for the Committee of the Whole House to refuse, if it sees proper, the recommendations of its smaller Committee on Appropriations. All we desire is the intelligent judgment of the majority of the Committee of the Whole House upon the work which we have presented.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think my colleague does not fully understand my position. The remarks I made are not for the purpose of increasing the salaries of any of the parties whose salaries have been reduced in the pending bill, because, as I understand my colleague, these reductions have been in existence for a number of years under the appropriation bills. The point I make is not against the personnel of the present committee, but against what has been assumed by previous Appropriation Committees, charged with the duty of making up these bills, that is, changing existing law in such bills and recommending new appropriations or different appropriations from those fixed in the statute law, instead of proposing or introducing a separate bill, if you please, changing the existing law to meet their views.

Now, it is far from me to make the point of order on the first section of the bill to which my colleague has referred, because I do not know, from the information I have regarding these officials and their duties, whether the salaries fixed in the bill are too high or too low, and I am not in a position to intelligently make that objection, either on the increase or decrease of the salaries. But I do protest against the committee charged simply with the duty of making up the appropriation bill constantly recommending changes of existing law and coming in here with statements of that kind, when we, as members of the committee who are required to pass upon their recommendations, do not have sufficient information to properly judge of the merits of such recommendations.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Does not the fact that these salaries—the 107 that have been reduced for twenty years—provide a sufficient and satisfactory service demonstrate the fact that the salary is sufficient? The service has been as well performed at the reduced salary as it was before, and does not that fact demonstrate the good judgment of the Committee on Appropriations in reducing these salaries?

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman's question is predicated on an assumption of fact that he and I know nothing of. I do not know whether the duties of these various officers have been as well performed since as before the reduction of their salaries; and if it is so, if it is as he suggests, it is an additional reason why there should be some general legislation fixing the salaries, instead of allowing a committee to change the law at their will and increase or decrease a salary in the individual cases which may come before them for consideration, without any other justification than that it was carried in some previous appropriation bill, contrary to the statute.

Now, I might say to the gentleman that the Commissioner of Pensions would discharge the duties of his office as efficiently at $3,000 as he would at $6,000, but the fact that he would do that would not, in my judgment, be a reason why we should take from him the amount of the salary that is allowed him in this bill. But I say, as I said before, that this Committee on Appropriations, before the days of the present personnel of the committee, have dropped into a vicious habit that has been followed out from year to year, and I think the time has arrived when the attention of this committee and of the House and the country should be called to it, and that these gentlemen, instead of pursuing this erroneous practice, should come in with a general law fixing the salaries of these officers and giving the reasons for the changes, so that they can be fixed in accordance with justice to the Government itself and the employees of the Government.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend sees proper to introduce a bill revising the salaries of officials in the public service, in the event that under the rules it would go to the Committee on Appropriations——

Mr. DOCKERY. It would not, however.

Mr. CANNON. I believe it would not, but if it should be sent there by the House, we will take great pleasure in giving either a favorable or an unfavorable report upon it.

Mr. HOPKINS. It is not for a single individual, certainly not one who is a member of another committee and unfamiliar with the details of the appropriation, to make a recommendation of that kind. If I served upon that committee and was as familiar with the subject-matter as my learned colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], I certainly long before this would have brought in a bill revising the salaries of the Government officials and recommended its passage in the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, a single suggestion, if the gentleman will pardon me. In justice to the Appropriations Committee, it should be said that originally, in reporting these reductions, the committee acted strictly within their authority under the then existing rules of the House. The then existing rules of the House authorized the Committee on Appropriations to report any change of appropriation or salary where there was a reduction. That was the law of the House, and hence the committee then were entirely within the law of the House in doing it.

Mr. HOPKINS. That was the rule of the House, but it was not the law of the country.

Mr. DINGLEY. But it made the law for the time being.

Mr. HOPKINS. It made the law for that particular Congress, provided the Government employee was willing to take the salary. But the danger of that is this: Of these 107 employees whose salaries are reduced here, if any one of them refuses to accept the salary provided in this bill, there is no lawyer in this body but what will acknowledge that that employee can go before the Court of Claims and sue and recover the amount of the salary provided for in the general law. Now, I say for one that such a condition of affairs ought not to exist.

Mr. DINGLEY. It will not if the provision in the first section is adopted.

Mr. HOPKINS. This does not bar the employee from suing unless he accepts the salary?

Mr. DINGLEY. If he accepts the salary and draws it, that is conclusive.

Mr. HOPKINS. If he accepts; but supposing he does not accept?

Mr. DINGLEY. Supposing he does not. Under that provision the bill fixes the salary for the fiscal year 1897.

Mr. HOPKINS. Not at all.

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly it does.

Mr. HOPKINS. Not at all. The bill fixes it provided the person whose salary is affected by this appropriation accepts the amount; but there is no lawyer but will say that if he refuses to accept it and goes into the Court of Claims he can recover the amount, not of the appropriation fixed in the bill, but the amount provided by the general law.

Mr. CANNON. My colleague and I are both of age and both have had some little experience. Does my colleague have any idea that that question will ever arise? In other words, does my friend think anybody will refuse to accept the salary?

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, I am not prepared to answer that question. I trust they will all accept the amount provided in this bill. I only make the point to show the vicious character of these bills that are brought in here year after year, and to emphasize the fact that there should be a general revision of the law fixing the salaries of these persons, so as to provide against any such contingency as the one that I have here suggested.

Mr. DINGLEY. Few die and none resign.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to cut off general debate at all, but I think it would be better to limit the debate in some way. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the general debate upon this appropriation bill be limited to forty-five minutes. I understand there is to be an amendment offered by the Judiciary Committee, embracing what is known as the salary bill, and I should like to ask the chairman of that committee what time he would like in which to discuss that.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on the Judiciary would like two hours, to be consumed to-morrow in general debate on the fee bill or salary bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is, as I understand the gentleman from Iowa, when we reach the point where that amendment is moved.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes; when the amendment is moved to-morrow. It will be offered to-morrow. Then we should like unanimous consent that two hours be given to the Committee on the Judiciary to control in the discussion of the fee bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, before any time is fixed upon, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary the character of this bill that he proposes to make an amendment to the present bill. Is it a general revision of all the officers of the Government in the judicial department of the Government?

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, it does not touch the clerks of courts at all as to their compensation, but it puts upon salaries United States district attorneys and United States marshals, and cuts down, in some respects, the fees of United States commissioners. That is the general scope of the bill. The details of it we will go into when general debate is had.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HENDERSON. If we can have order, I will be pleased to answer.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will please cease conversation. All members will be seated.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not understand that the request of the gentleman from Iowa has been disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. It has not been submitted.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am coupling it with the request of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I just want to ask the gentleman if this proposed measure fixes the salaries of all marshals in the United States?

Mr. HENDERSON. All of them except the southern district of New York, which is exempt from the operation of the bill, as that is working under a special act of Congress; and, on the recommendation of the Attorney-General, that and Alaska were excepted from the provisions of the bill. All these details will be explained fully in general debate. I wish to say to the committee that of course this bill will be considered in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule, and every opportunity will be given for offering amendments that may be desired.

Mr. HOPKINS. As fully as if it were considered as a separate measure?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman will pardon me, has the measure which he desires to offer been unanimously reported from the committee of which he is chairman?

Mr. HENDERSON. It is unanimously reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, and we are agreed as to the time asked for general debate. We may not need more than an hour, and yet we ask for two hours, so there may be plenty of time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Has the bill and report been printed?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. If that is satisfactory, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. McRAE. It is not satisfactory.

Mr. HENDERSON. The request made in behalf of the fee bill is for two hours, and the Committee on Appropriations is asking for forty-five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Then the debate under the five-minute rule will be how long?

Mr. HENDERSON. The Committee of the Whole will determine that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman state whether that report and bill has been printed?

Mr. HENDERSON. The bill has been printed. The report was made this morning and has gone to the Government Printing Office now.

Mr. McMILLIN. What was the suggestion as to the time to which debate was to be limited?

Mr. HENDERSON. Two hours' debate on the fee bill tomorrow.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does not the gentleman think it would be better to leave that open until members shall have had an opportunity to look at the bill and determine what amount of debate they desire.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am quite willing to leave it open and let the request for the limitation of debate be made on the appropriation bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. A reasonable debate is all that is desired, I presume?

Mr. HENDERSON. When the bill is offered in the morning the request will be made for two hours of general debate.

Mr. McRAE. That is entirely too short.

Mr. CANNON. Now we can go on.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. If that is satisfactory, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be limited to forty-five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that general debate upon this bill be limited to forty-five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. McMILLIN. Am I to understand that the question of the length of debate on the fee bill is to be left open?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. With the understanding that when the fee bill is introduced as an amendment the committee shall then fix the time for general debate on the fee bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

For 38 annual clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, at $1,200 each, $45,600.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill, or the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, under what statute or resolution or by what authority the item just read appears in this appropriation bill.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. In reply to the gentleman I will state that there is no authority for this appropriation except the fact of its appearance in the appropriation bills from year to year. It is not provided for by statute or by joint resolution. The appropriation was first made, I understand, three years ago.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The fact is, then, that we simply put into this appropriation bill this much money to pay clerks for Senators, without any authority of law?

Mr. CANNON. I will state to the gentleman from California that the force of clerks for individual Senators was provided for, in the first instance, by the Senate passing a resolution to pay their clerks from the contingent fund, and in connection with that the Senate put on an amendment increasing the contingent fund. That action led to a contest between the two Houses—in fact, to several bitter contests—but the Senate, being a coordinate branch of Congress, insisted on its point, and this force being for the service of the Senate, the Senators had their way. Later on the Senate amended the bill so as to provide clerks for Senators at an annual salary. That proposition was fought bitterly in the House, but the Senate stood, if the gentleman will allow me the expression, "pat," and said: "This is for our own convenience," and they had their way, because no bill can pass without an agreement between the two bodies. The fight on the part of the House had been made so often and with such ill success that in the last Congress this appropriation providing for the payment of clerks for Senators was put on the bill in the House. In other words, the contest had been fought so often and so bitterly and with so little success that it was deemed better to put the item in the bill. I will say to the gentleman, however, that I think it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that I understand the explanation made by the gentleman from Illinois, with the single exception of some technical, abstruse term which he used, but which I suppose is well understood in Illinois, though unfamiliar in California. [Laughter.] I will ask the gentleman, however, why should not the House "stand pat," as the Senate did?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no. It was invented in California and put into the dictionary there. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Perhaps the gentleman from California will repeat the language, so that the members of the committee may have it before them. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of California. It is not necessary that I should repeat it for the gentleman's benefit, because I understand the term is very familiar in Tennessee as well as in Illinois. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman, I understand from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that there is no legal warrant for this item; that it is not authorized by any statute or any resolution of the two bodies, but that this is simply a naked, bald appropriation put into this bill to pay these annual clerks of Senators. Am I correct in that?

Mr. CANNON. There is no joint resolution and no statute which authorizes this appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I frankly confess that I am not as familiar with the rules of this body as I wish I were, or as I probably should be with the technical term used by the gentleman from Illinois awhile ago if I had studied the dictionary with proper attention. [Laughter.] I would like to inquire, however, if it is in order to offer an amendment to this particular paragraph providing for paying annual clerks for members of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CANNON. My understanding is that such an amendment would not be germane; because we are now providing for a Senate force. Later we shall come to the paragraphs providing for the House of Representatives and then such an amendment might be in order.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. But why can we not amend the bill in any part, at any place? There is no law prohibiting that to be done, or requiring it to be done in a certain way, is there?

Mr. CANNON. I would say to the gentleman that the rules of the House provide that an amendment must be germane.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Chairman, whenever anybody wants to do anything in this House for the purpose of expediting its business, or doing justice as between its members and the public business, somebody always gets up and says that the rules of the House provide differently. [Laughter.] Now, sir, I think it would be a good plan for us to tackle those rules at some time, and not, in the expressive language of the gentleman from Illinois, to "stand pat" upon them all the time. [Laughter. Cries of "Read!"]

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is nothing pending before the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We have a right to debate this paragraph.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. But no amendment has been offered to it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That does not matter. The paragraph is pending and has not been adopted. I understand the gentleman from Illinois to concede that this provision in the bill is subject to the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, why does not my friend from California insist on his point of order? His objective point, as I understand it, is to get annual clerks for members of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, then, insist on the point of order and let this go out, and then when the Senate puts it in they will put in a provision to give members as well as themselves annual clerks. When the Senate amendment comes to the House giving members annual clerks, the House can keep it in if it wishes to do so.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Pardon me. Can you vouch for the fact that the Senate will put it in for both of us? [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I guarantee that they will put it in for themselves, and I think they will put it in for the House, because, as the gentleman from Illinois has suggested, they have done so heretofore. The Senate did, as the gentleman from Illinois has stated, insert in a former bill a provision to give clerks to members of the House; but the House in its magnanimity declined to accept that amendment of the Senate. It may be possible now that, inasmuch as the business of members has increased so greatly, the House would not at this time decline to accept such an amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. It is barely possible that the chairman of our committee would not permit it to be done. I understand that he is not favorable to such a provision; so that, although the provision might be entirely agreeable to the Senate conferees, we shall probably have to convert the chairman of our own committee to a conviction that that is a proper measure.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I observe that on page 16 of the bill there is a provision of clerk hire for members——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. We have not come to that yet; let that wait for a while.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the objection urged by my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] is not tenable, because as I understand the rules, on any amendment put upon the bill by the Senate no point of order can be raised in this House. Am I correct in that position? I understand from gentlemen around me that I am. Then, if the Senate should put on this bill an amendment allowing annual clerks to Members and Senators, I do not think any point of order here would carry much weight.

I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] that so far as I am concerned, speaking only as one member, I am prepared to vote an annual clerk to every member of this body. I think we need such assistance much more than Senators do; and I thank the gentleman for calling my attention to the fact that he ruled such a proposition in order at the last session and voted for it.

Mr. CANNON. Allow me a word. This debate is necessarily proceeding by unanimous consent. The best way of meeting this question is to be entirely frank. I have no doubt that the clause in this paragraph providing for clerks to Senators is subject to a point of order. Later on in the bill there is a clause appropriating for session clerks to members of the House. That is in pursuance of law. I have no doubt that if there should be an effort later on to amend that provision so as to cover annual clerks to members of the House, somebody would make a point of order on it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. You will not? [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. I do not say that I will or that I will not.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Suppose we make a bargain? [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. I say I have no doubt somebody would make a point of order upon it; and right here I want to state to the gentleman from California in complete fairness that as this debate is proceeding now by unanimous consent, no amendment having been offered, a point of order would still be in time; but if we should entertain and discuss an amendment it would be too late afterwards to make a point of order on the text of the bill. I shall not make the point of order because the committee has reported this provision; but it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to make a point of order. I believe in having annual clerks for Senators and Members. I have made my suggestion in good faith. Suppose we agree that we will not make a point of order upon either of these provisions?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I suggest to the gentleman that, in my judgment, unless he makes a point of order upon this provision he will never get annual clerks for members. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] would not make the "bargain" which my friend from California so politely invited him to make; the gentleman from Illinois would not agree not to make a point of order upon an amendment providing for annual clerks to members; and even if the gentleman from Illinois should not make the point, some other gentleman would. The clause giving to members of the House clerks for the session can not be amended so as to meet the wishes of the gentleman from California, because such an amendment would be obnoxious to the point of order. Now, I suggest that, if the gentleman wants an annual clerk, the only way in which he can get one is to make the point of order now. If he does not insist upon the point now, he may as well give up the idea of annual clerks for members of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. In matters of this kind I am a babe in swaddling clothes. [Laughter.] If my friend from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] gets me into trouble in this matter he will have to carry me out of the trouble. I am reasonably able to look out for myself if I am permitted a fair show. But he will have to give me that fair show and help me out.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can only promise to stand up to the suggestion I make.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. That is all I want. You stood up last year most admirably. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that this paragraph is not in order—I do not know exactly the technical language to use—[laughter]—but I make the point that the provision is not authorized by any statute or resolution, or as a gentleman suggests, is a change of existing law.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I submit that the point of order comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee suggests that the point of order comes too late. The gentleman from California will remember that this paragraph has been under debate for some minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I rose immediately when the section or paragraph had been read.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman rose for the purpose of inquiry or debate——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I beg the pardon of the Chair. I rose for the purpose of learning whether the provision was authorized by law; and the chairman of the committee [Mr. CANNON] told me that I could make a point of order.

Mr. CANNON. If the Chair will allow me a moment on the question of order.

It seems to me that the discussion has been proceeding under unanimous consent presumed, for otherwise it would have been out of order. There has been no amendment to the proposition; no motion to strike out or anything of that kind, and there has been no parliamentary step which would warrant the committee in indulging in the debate except by unanimous consent. I merely submit to the Chair whether or not talk, out of order, without any parliamentary step taken or sought to be taken, would of itself waive the question of order?

Mr. RICHARDSON. If I may be permitted, Mr. Chairman, I distinctly understood the gentleman from Illinois in the course of his remarks to state to the gentleman from California that the point of order could be made upon this provision, and it would be misleading to our youthful and guileless friend from California [laughter], who confesses to the condition in which he finds himself on account of his youth—I say it would be misleading to suggest that the point may be made and then refuse to allow him that privilege. I do not think we ought to take advantage of the fact, when he states that he was on his feet for that purpose; and he was certainly misled, of course without any such intention, by the gentleman from Illinois, who said that the point of order would be good against the paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. That is exactly what the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations said to me, that the point of order would lie against that provision of the bill. I was inquiring about the matter with a view to determining the facts. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] said also, sotto voce, the same thing, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], and other gentlemen around me. I was simply inquiring as to the status of this particular paragraph, to know whether the point of order could be made against it or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from California to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois whether an amendment to the paragraph would be in order, including clerks to members of the House. The Chair understood it to be only an inquiry, and there was no suggestion as to a point of order against the paragraph when the gentleman first rose.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I asked the gentleman whether there was any law or any resolution authorizing this matter. Then when he said there was not he admitted that the point of order would be good against it. I asked other questions for information, and the discussion went on in that manner for a few moments until I made the point of order.

It seems to me, therefore, that the ruling of the Chair is even a little more than technical when he says that I have waived any right that I had in the matter, when in my ignorance of the rules of the House I thought I was saving all my rights. I was afraid I would get into trouble. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order evidently comes too late.

If gentlemen will reflect a moment they will remember that the gentleman from California said that he did not desire to make the point of order, but was willing to vote a salary, in connection with this provision, to clerks of House members. My colleague [Mr. RICHARDSON], soon after I had made the point that there was nothing pending, said that we had a right to discuss the provision.

Mr. BAILEY. If the gentleman from Tennessee will permit me, I understood the gentleman from California to say distinctly that he did not desire to make the point of order upon the provision.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. That was my understanding, as I stated a moment ago.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that on a question of this kind, where the point of order is said to come too late and there is a dispute as to what a member said, the criterion ought to be not as to what the member actually said, but as to what he intended at the time he rose.

Now, the gentleman from California has stated openly and frankly, and it should not be disputed, because he makes the statement himself, that he rose for the purpose of getting information in reference to this paragraph; that when he discovered that the point of order could be raised upon it he at once made the point of order, or as soon as the opportunity was offered to him, and it seems to me to be taking snap judgment on a young member, who pleads his own ignorance, to take advantage of the fact that he did not make the point of order in the first instance, although that was his evident intention. It ought not to be done. He ought to be entitled to all of the rights the rules give in the matter. The criterion ought to be what he intended to do, and no technical advantage ought to be taken of the fact.

I hope, therefore, that the Chair will not decide this question without giving weight to the statement of the gentleman from California, that it was his purpose to make the point of order if he found it possible to do so. In these matters, of course we should all be treated fairly and alike. The mere fact of his saying something that might be construed as going into the debate on the general question, and thereby waiving the point of order, ought not to take him from the floor or permit advantage to be taken of that technicality.

Mr. HILL. I would like to submit a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair. Will the Chair kindly inform an ignorant member of the House what rule or order of the House prevents a point of order to be raised upon a provision at any time before the final decision of the question under consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not know whether there is such a provision in the rule or whether it has grown out of the uniform practice of the House. But it has been uniformly held, and the members during this Congress have been reminded of it time and time again, that after the debate has begun on a paragraph or an amendment it is then too late to raise the point of order.

Of course there is no rule that applies differently to the younger or the older members. The rules apply to all alike, and the Chairman can only enforce the rules as they are. The practice of the House has always been that when a clause has been entered upon, and debate has been had upon it, or when debate has been had upon an amendment offered to any clause of the bill, the point of order would be too late and could not be entertained. Sometimes when a member rises and states that he rose in the first instance and tried to get the attention of the Chair to make a point of order and was not heard, the Chair recognizes that fact. But this is an entirely different case. The gentleman from California rose for the purpose of making inquiry in the first instance, to ascertain whether his amendment would be entertained as germane.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. No; I rose in the first instance to inquire whether this paragraph was authorized by any statute or resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. If the gentleman asked that in the first place, he subsequently asked the question whether an amendment to it would be in order. Then he stated once or twice during the course of his debate that he did not wish to raise the point of order upon this paragraph. Now, it seems to the Chair that, after all that, the point of order comes too late.

Mr. HILL. The point I wish to make is this, that we are supposed to be governed by the rules of the House as adopted by the House, and not by ancient custom. I ask that some rule of the House may be shown under which this point of order is not proper to be made at this time.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed for the present.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, under the rule of the House, where the rules are silent there is a general rule that adopts the parliamentary law, and the common parliamentary law, as settled by the House of Representatives, and the practice from the foundation of the Government is in harmony with the general statement of the Chair.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from California will yield to me——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understand the Chair to have held that this point of order comes too late?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the opinion of the Chair. The Chair, however, before finally announcing the decision, will hear the gentleman from Tennessee or the gentleman from California, if they desire to be heard.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield to the gentleman from California, if he wishes to debate it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I only ask unanimous consent that this paragraph and the ruling of the Chairman, and all matters connected with it, be laid aside temporarily, to be taken up later, or when we reach page 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed over for the present, to be taken up at a later time, and that the point of order be considered as pending against the paragraph. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. BRUMM. Now, if the Chair will permit me to make one suggestion with reference to this matter——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield to the gentleman, yes.

Mr. BRUMM. The gentleman from California states distinctly that what he did when he first got up was to make an inquiry in the nature of a parliamentary inquiry, and it was for the purpose of getting information as to whether a point of order was necessary to get at the true status; and if it was in the nature of a parliamentary inquiry, I trust the Chair will certainly not construe that into being debate, and then take, as I said before, snap judgment on him under these conditions.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McCALL] is willing to withdraw his objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Tennessee withdraws his objection.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I withdraw my point that the point of order comes too late.

Mr. BAILEY. I renew it as to the point of order coming too late. I am perfectly content that it shall be passed over until we reach page 16.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. That is what I meant, unanimous consent——

Mr. CANNON. Then I will ask unanimous consent that the clause go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the clause be stricken out of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes; I object to that.

Mr. CANNON. Then, in the absence of any motion, I ask that the Clerk read.

Mr. MOODY. I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] desires to offer an amendment to the paragraph.

Mr. MOODY. I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I understand the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations wants unanimous consent that this go out.

Several MEMBERS. He did not get it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I withdraw my objection, at the suggestion of my friend from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asks unanimous consent that the clause be stricken out of the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. I think it had better be voted out.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. BAILEY. I object.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I suggest that the gentleman from California move to strike it out.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, that is my motion.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I want to inquire whether or not the request that I made for unanimous consent that all action on this paragraph, including the point of order, be postponed until we reach and finish page 16 has been objected to? The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McCALL] withdrew his objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McCALL] withdraw his objection?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I withdraw the objection that I made that the point of order came too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McCALL], as the Chair understands, does not withdraw the objection to the request that the paragraph be passed over.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I do not withdraw the objection to the request that the paragraph be passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee objects.

Mr. HEPBURN. A parliamentary inquiry. Would it be competent now to ask that the further consideration of this clause be postponed until we reach the same section as it applies to the House, on page 16?

The CHAIRMAN. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. That is what I asked.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask unanimous consent that the further consideration of this clause be postponed until we reach, on page 16, the corresponding item applying to the House of Representatives.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the further consideration of this clause be postponed until the committee reaches page 16, where there is a similar provision for the House of Representatives. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. I suggest—that is equivalent to an objection when I make the suggestion—I would suggest to the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Tennessee, in charge of the bill, if it meets their approval and that of the committee, that we pass this clause with the privilege of returning to it on or before the completion of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is right.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Is not that the same thing?

Mr. CANNON. No. I will ask for that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed with the privilege of returning to it on or before the completion of the consideration of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. And that the decision of the Chair on the point of order is still open?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not asked that.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I ask that.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the proposition which is excepted to. The Chair will, however, put it to the committee.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is unnecessary, because the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McCALL] has withdrawn his objection that the point of order was too late.

Mr. BAILEY. In order that there may be no mistake about that, I renewed the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas renewed the point of order, and the Chair has substantially sustained it. The request is for unanimous consent that this clause be passed over with the privilege of returning to it on or before the completion of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Under Architect of the Capitol: For chief engineer, $1,700; two assistant engineers, at $1,200 each: four conductors of the elevators, at $1,100 each, who shall be under the supervision and direction of the Architect of the Capitol; laborer, $820; five firemen, at $900 each; electrician, $1,200; laborer, $800; laborer to clean Statuary Hall and watch statuary therein, $660; in all, $16,480.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 21, page 11, strike out the word "eight" and insert in lieu thereof the word "one," and in line 22, page 11, strike out the word "hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thousand."

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I make the point of order that we had passed that in the reading.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I offered it immediately after the reading of the clause.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. This is under the head of "Architect of the Capitol," and I offered the amendment just as soon as I could offer it. Of course, I was compelled to wait until the reading of the paragraph had been concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair apprehends that that is not the point of order.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would be glad if the amendment should be stated again.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. The amendment is simply this: That that laborer should receive $1,000 instead of $800. That is all there is to that amendment. My reason for offering it is this: That laborer has more work to perform than many other parties employed in this Capitol who receive $1,100 or $1,200 a year. The duty of that laborer consists of taking charge of an engine and the lighting of this end of the Capitol. Also, he is required, from morning until this House adjourns at night, to be on duty all the time. I presume there are but few members of this House who have ever walked to the top of the Dome of this Capitol, and yet that laborer has to do so twice every night that the House is in session to light up the Goddess of Liberty, I believe it is, that stands on the top of the Dome, and to extinguish the light afterwards. In addition to those duties, there has been placed upon him what was never asked of a man filling that place before, that is, to take charge of a corridor in the basement that is longer, I presume, than from here to the Peace Monument, the worst corridor in the basement of this building; and I am also told that until the gentleman who now performs these duties came in there was a separate laborer who was paid $500 a year for taking charge of that corridor; and there is to-day another laborer who has a shorter corridor to attend to who receives $50 a month for doing that. So this gentleman is performing the duties of two men, of two laborers, and has no one to "spell" him, as we would say, when "tired nature" may want to seek respose. [Laughter.] We have four elevator men to-day, and they receive $1,100 each; and yet they are not on duty any longer than is this one laborer. Now, all he asks is this, and it is perfectly reasonable that he should have it: That his salary be increased from $800 to $1,000 per annum. Certainly that will appeal to the good sense and judgment of the members of this House. His duties are just as I have stated them, and he performs them faithfully and well; and instead of paying $1,400 in having two men to do that work, he is willing to do it for $1,000 a year. I hope the amendment may be concurred in.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the proposed amendment that it changes existing law. I find that the last appropriation bill fixed this salary at $800 a year, and I understand that by a ruling of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole the preceding appropriation bills in the last Congress have been held to be the existing law where there is no statute to the contrary. That being so, this amendment is subject to the point of order that it changes existing law.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, has it not been held by the Chair that an appropriation bill is the existing law?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I was going to ask that question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Because, if that be so, then an amendment which I desire to offer at the proper time in regard to the use of the fees of the clerks of courts of appeal will be in order, for the reason that on the last appropriation bill that disposition was made of them. I have argued in times gone quite the reverse of my present contention, but I desire to say now that on all former occasions I was entirely wrong. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I hope the gentleman in charge of this bill will not seek refuge behind a point of order when, if I have stated the facts, and I have, this case certainly appeals to the good sense and the good judgment of the members of this House. I trust the gentleman will withdraw his point of order and let the amendment be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee if the appropriation carried in the last bill purported to fix the salary, except for that year, like the provision in the pending bill?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. It did not.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote upon my amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask my colleague what assurance he has that if this appropriation is increased from $800 to $1,000 the man he has in his mind will get it.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Simply that I suppose that if we provide a certain salary for the man who is now performing the duty there will be sufficient honesty on the part of the disbursing officer to pay the salary which is provided for by Congress.

Mr. CANNON. How long has this man been at work?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. He has been at work in the position he is now holding for a year.

Mr. CANNON. I find in this same paragraph a provision for a laborer at $820.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. That is a different one entirely. This is the one that takes charge of the engine.

Mr. CANNON. There is nothing to prevent the changing of the positions of the two men by appointment.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Oh, I am not concerning myself at all about changes by appointment. I am willing, and so is the gentleman willing, to take his chances of getting the amount if it is allowed in this bill.

Mr. CANNON. I only wanted to know what assurance my colleague had that the man he had in his mind would get the money. Now I will ask him another question, whether this is a real laborer or somebody who holds a sinecure and does no work, but hires a man to do it for him for a less sum than he is paid?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. The gentleman here concerned attends to his duties from early morning until long after this House adjourns and no one assists him. He has no assistant provided and he is not able, out of the salary he receives, to employ some one to do the work and let him sit around warming his toes at the radiator.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest to the gentleman that this proposed increase of salary is not submitted in the estimates of the Architect of the Capitol, under whom this gentleman performs his daily duties. I want to say, further, that although quite a number of increases of salaries were submitted by the heads of Executive Departments and officers of the Government, the Committee on Appropriations thought this was not an opportune time to recommend such increases to the House; so that if this increase be made the action will be taken in the absence of any estimate submitted by the proper officer, and also in disregard of the action of the Committee on Appropriations in refusing to report other proposed increases of salary.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. In reply to that, Mr. Chairman, I will say that it is not customary, and has not been during the years I have been in Congress, for the Architect of the Capitol in furnishing his estimates of expenses to be continually changing the salaries. That is usually done by the House itself, or by the Committee on Appropriations in framing its bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will my friend allow me to suggest that the law expressly requires the Architect of the Capitol to submit his estimates through the Secretary of the Treasury, who sends them to the Speaker of the House, by whom they are referred to the committee?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I understand that; but it is entirely probable that the Architect of the Capitol, in view of his other duties, does not always bear in mind all the different employees under him, or the question whether they are being sufficiently compensated for the work they perform. I ask for a vote.

The question was taken on the amendment; and the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 43, noes 36.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read in full the paragraph providing for employees in the Doorkeeper's department.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 15, after line 6, insert "for the employment of Joel Grayson in the document room, $1,500."

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the point of order on that amendment until I hear an explanation of it.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman can reserve his point of order and I can state in a minute all that I desire to say about this amendment. Provision for this officer for the balance of the fiscal year was put on the urgent deficiency bill. The officer referred to is Joel Grayson; everyone knows who he is. He is engaged in the document room, and has been there for many years. He does his work well. He was carried by a resolution adopted in the last Congress. I presume this is all that is necessary to be said, unless the gentleman from Tennessee wants to ask some further question.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I did not understand the effect of the amendment, and therefore reserved the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. The amendment is simply to continue this officer for the coming year.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I did not know but that the amendment might involve the creation of a new office.

Mr. CANNON. No, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ODELL. I move to amend by striking out after the word "laborer," in line 9, the words "four hundred" and inserting "seven hundred and twenty," making the salary of this laborer $720. This is to carry out the resolution adopted by the House one day last week fixing the salary of this laborer at $720 instead of $400. The resolution was adopted upon the report of the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. As I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. ODELL], this amendment is designed to carry out a resolution adopted by the House a few days ago increasing this salary from $400 to $720. I make no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to, there being—ayes 50; noes none.

The Clerk read as follows:

For clerk hire, Members and Delegates, House of Representatives: To pay Members and Delegates the amount which they certify they have paid or agreed to pay for clerk hire necessarily employed by them in the discharge of their official and representative duties, as provided in the joint resolution approved March 3, 1893, $93,792.16, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. TAWNEY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of the pending paragraph after the word "duties," in line 10, to the end of the paragraph, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"An amount not exceeding to each Member or Delegate, not a chairman of a committee having an annual clerk, the sum of $100 per month, the amount to be certified by them on the first day of each calendar month in the manner provided in the joint resolution approved March 3, 1893."

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. TAWNEY. I should like to hear the grounds on which the gentleman bases his point of order.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. The ground for the point of order is that the amendment changes the existing law; that it is an appropriation not authorized by law. I find that on the 3d of March, 1893, there was enacted the following joint resolution:

Resolved, etc., That on and after April 1, 1893, each Member and Delegate of the House of Representatives of the United States may, on the 1st day of every month during sessions of Congress, certify to the Clerk of the House of Representatives the amount which he has paid or agreed to pay for clerk hire necessarily employed by him in the discharge of his official and representative duties during the previous month, and the amount so certified shall be paid by the Clerk out of the contingent fund of the House on the 4th day of each month to the person or persons named in each of said certificates so filed: Provided, That the amount so certified and paid for clerical services rendered to each Member and Delegate shall not exceed $100 for any month during the session: And provided further, That the provisions of this resolution shall not apply to members who are chairmen of committees entitled under the rules to a clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understood the law as read by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCCALL], it applied only to the last Congress.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. I do not think so. It is a joint resolution passed by the two Houses and approved March 3, 1893—a general provision of law, as I understand.

Mr. CANNON. There can be no doubt that the provision as read by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCCALL] is the permanent law.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the gentleman from Tennessee is merely reserving the point of order; he has not yet raised a point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. I distinctly stated, Mr. Chairman, when the amendment had been read that I reserved a point of order upon it. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] then desired that I should state the reasons on which I based my point of order; so I proceeded to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved, as the Chair understands.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. That is all, sir. Now let the discussion go on, and let us see what there is in the amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary for me to discuss the merits of this amendment. The bill as reported authorizes the repayment to members of the amount paid by them for clerk hire during the session. The amendment simply extends that authority so that members will have refunded to them the amount they certify they have paid for clerk hire in the discharge of their official duties during vacation. It does not authorize the payment of a hundred dollars a month unless the member certifies that he was obliged to pay that amount in the discharge of his official duties. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HEPBURN. Allow me to suggest that this same question was raised on the 8th of February last upon an amendment almost precisely similar to this; and the then occupant of the chair overruled the point of order. You will find it on page 1962 of volume 27, part 3, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Iowa be kind enough to send the decision in question to the Chair?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota is clearly out of order in the form in which he has drawn it.

Mr. TAWNEY. In what respect?

Mr. MCMILLIN. For the reason that the present law—and I admit for the purpose of the argument that the provision of the last appropriation bill is the existing law—the present law provides only for clerks to members who are not chairmen of committees having a clerk. The gentleman's amendment extends that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no; it does not.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I think the gentleman will agree with me when he hears me out.

The resolution provides only clerks for those who are not chairmen of committees that have clerks.

But chairmen of committees who have only session clerks are entitled under your amendment to the privilege it confers. This, therefore, is merely extending the law in that particular.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that the joint resolution passed in the Fifty-second Congress merely authorized the payment of the amounts certified by the members to have been paid out for clerk hire during the session; and such payment was authorized to be made out of the contingent fund of the House. It therefore expired with the Fifty-third Congress. It had no reference to any other Congress than the Fifty-third, for the expense was to be paid from the contingent fund of the House, and the appropriation was made and payment was made from that fund.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If the gentleman will permit me, he seems to mistake my point of order. I will restate it.

The original resolution did not allow those who had session clerks, as chairmen of committees, to designate a clerk. But this resolution that you now offer as an amendment would give a clerk not only to the member who has no clerk now, as chairman of a committee, but would allow also a member, as chairman of a committee who has a session clerk, to appoint another one. You exclude the annual clerk, I admit, but the chairman of the committee which has a session clerk would, under the terms of this resolution, be given permission to appoint another clerk, which has never been the case so far as I remember in the House up to this time, and which the law does not now authorize.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the act of March 3, 1893, with reference to this matter, contains the following proviso:

Provided further, That the provisions of this resolution shall not apply to members who are chairmen of committees and entitled under the rules to a clerk.

Now, these are merely annual clerks, and that is the reason I put the same limitation in the amendment. It conforms precisely to the proviso of the joint resolution of March 3, 1893.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. Under the amendment the gentleman proposes, would the clerks of the individual members be permitted to draw their salary when Congress is not in session?

Mr. TAWNEY. No, sir; the amendment does not authorize the payment of any sum to the clerk. The amount must be paid to the member on his certificate as to the amount paid by him for clerk hire.

Mr. BAILEY. Then it is absolutely certain that they can not draw it as the law now stands, and if they could draw it under this resolution I submit that the resolution does change existing law.

Mr. TAWNEY. The amount is now paid not under this resolution, but under the appropriations made by the Fifty-third Congress.

Mr. BAILEY. I make no question on the manner of its payment——

Mr. TAWNEY (continuing). And the authority for the payment is not based upon the joint resolution of 1893, but the authority for the appointment of the clerks and their payment is found in the appropriation bill passed by the Fifty-third Congress.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee was recognized.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Before the gentleman from Tennessee begins, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question. In your amendment, would you not be satisfied to strike out the word "annual," so that this would give to each member a clerk who has not a clerk as chairman of a committee, and also members who have session clerks, but whose services terminate at the expiration of the session? They ought to be entitled to the disbursements made by them on account of clerical service. This could be done by striking out the word "annual."

I suggest that you do that, and with your permission would like to have that modification in the amendment made.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not think there is any objection to that.

Mr. HOPKINS. Let me make a suggestion right there. The gentleman making that suggestion is the chairman of a committee, is he not?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I am not the chairman of any committee. Why does the gentleman ask that?

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask that for this reason: I was going to illustrate the point. Chairmen of committees have annual clerks, many of them, at $2,000. Now, when Congress is not in session that salary goes on. That clerk has nothing else to do and can do the member's service; but in the instance of the members of the committee who are not chairmen their clerks cease at the end of the session.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, why are they not entitled to clerks in the interim, from one session to another, the same as the chairmen?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. They will be entitled to clerks if you strike out the word "annual." As you have drawn it now you give to every member of Congress the right to a clerk, or to $100 for disbursement for clerk hire, except those who are chairmen of committees having annual clerks. That would include chairmen of committees having session clerks, and they would draw during the session $100 a month, and their session clerks would also be paid.

Mr. MAHON. Whose session clerks? No chairman of a committee has a private clerk. They are the clerks of committees. This does not apply to the chairman of a committee. The clerks of my committee have offered to do my private work, but I have refused. As the chairman of the committee I absolutely will not allow a committee clerk to do my private work.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. You are the chairman of the Committee on War Claims?

Mr. MAHON. Yes. The clerks of that committee have all that they can attend to to perform their committee duties.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Your committee has an annual clerk?

Mr. MAHON. There are two.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. This does not affect that question one way or the other.

Mr. MAHON. Why should I pay my private clerk and two-thirds of the members of this House be reimbursed for their clerk hire?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. This does not affect that question. The amendment as drawn by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] excludes chairman of committees having annual clerks. Now, that would go to the chairman of a committee having a session clerk. He would have his session clerk and his hundred dollars a month besides. It would not affect the question of annual clerks. My suggestion is to strike out the word "annual."

Mr. LACEY. In other words, why should the chairman of a committee having an annual clerk be in any worse situation, so far as his other work was concerned, than the chairman of a committee having a session clerk?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will modify my amendment by striking out the word "annual."

Mr. CHICKERING. Let it be read.

The CHAIRMAIN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The Clerk read as follows:

An amount not exceeding, to each Member or Delegate not a chairman of a committee having a clerk, the sum of $100 per month, the amount to be certified by them on the first day of each calendar month in the manner provided in the joint resolution approved March 3, 1893.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MAHON. I move to amend that by putting in the word "annual."

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if I should yield to the promptings of my personal desire to accommodate members and the importunities of members of the House, I should not insist on this point of order, but it occurs to me that in the condition of affairs now existing to propose an amendment to this bill that will cost the people of this country an increase of $432,000 biennially is something which, as a member of this Committee on Appropriations, I can not consistently do.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. In a moment. Not only so, but there are certain rules adopted here for the government of the House, and, as I understand, this proposition is subject to a point of order. Now, the question is presented, shall we let an item of this magnitude come into this bill, in the face of the fact that it is subject to a point of order, and thereby throw down the bars for every kind of an amendment, or shall we invoke the rules of the House and let this go out upon the point of order? That is the question. I want members to reflect that in the midst of these hard times, in the midst of these days when we are borrowing money to pay our own salaries and to pay the expenses of this Government, it is proposed by this amendment to increase the expenses of this Government $432,000 biennially, and I say we should stop and consider the consequences of the proposed action.

Mr. STEELE. How do you make that out?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. By a simple calculation.

Mr. STEELE. There are three hundred and sixty days; and if you employ one clerk each for twelve months for 360 members at $100 a month, it would amount to $360,000, which would be a difference of $72,000 from what the gentleman states.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. A member of Congress is elected for two years, which is twenty-four months. The Congress is in session about twelve months out of the twenty-four months, being about nine months in one session and three months in the other. Now, under the present law we can have a clerk for twelve months, and as there are 360 Members and Delegates, at $1,200 a year it would be $432,000 for the twelve months that we are not here, and we are paying out of the Treasury of the Government $432,000 for clerks when Congress is not in session.

Several MEMBERS. It is not for two years.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. For two years it would be $2,400 each.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman's assumption is based on the supposition that members will certify that they have paid out $100 a month for twenty-four months for clerical hire, while we all know as a fact that that is not the rule and has not been during the three or four years that we have had this law upon the statute books. So that your estimate is not correct, and there is no way in which you can correct the estimate. There are some members who have not certified to having had clerical hire exceeding $3 a month.

Mr. WILLIS. Will you allow me one remark?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. I believe this. I will agree to your movement in this matter provided you originate it at the other end of the Capitol and let it go over the whole field.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. If I was over there I would be one who would be willing to do so.

Mr. WILLIS. In the way it is at present arranged I do not think your point is a good one. [Applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN. If the gentleman from Tennessee will permit me, I want to suggest, sir, that there is no statute upon this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. There is no such statute on this subject as the gentleman has referred to.

Mr. STEELE. He has not referred to a statute.

Mr. HEPBURN. The point I make, Mr. Chairman, is that, except as to additional legislation from year to year, there is no provision of law under which these clerks can be made available. The point I want to make is this: That the sum provided for under the joint resolution approved March 3, 1893, was to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House; a contingent fund that is created each year in the annual appropriation bill. If there was no provision of that kind in the appropriation bill each year there would be no fund out of which to pay. So that I insist there must be legislation every year in order to make the joint resolution available which gentlemen say prohibits us from this amendment. In other words, there is no law—the gentleman can point to no law, complete in itself—upon this subject; and every year there must be new legislation, additional legislation, in order to make the provision of the joint resolution of March 3, 1893, available. So that the point of order, in my judgment, is not good. The provision is this:

And the amount so certified shall be paid by the Clerk out of the contingent fund of the House on the 4th day of each month to the person or persons named in each of said certificates so filed.

The only way to secure that payment is through the contingent fund, and that requires annual legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee. The joint resolution to which the Chair has been referred provides that that clerk hire shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House. The clause in the appropriation bill makes the appropriation direct, to be paid to the members, not out of the contingent fund, but out of the general fund in the Treasury. In that particular it is a change of existing law, as contained in the joint resolution, as it appears to the Chair. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman upon that question, and also upon the further question, if it is admitted to be a change of existing law, whether an amendment which is germane to that provision in the bill, although it changes existing law, is not in order. The Chair would like to hear upon those two questions.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Give it up.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have no intention of going into a discussion of the fine point suggested by the Chair; and, so far as I am concerned, I have only made the point of order, and am satisfied, with what has been stated, to leave it to the Chair for his determination.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Chairman, it appears to me that the distinction drawn by the gentleman from Iowa is a perfectly clear one. The House by a joint resolution provided for the payment of the salaries of clerks of members. I do not consider, sir, that it was necessary that such provision should have been made by independent statute, but the right exists to provide in annual appropriations for annual legislative expenses. If it should be conceded that the existence of statutory legislation is necessary to authorize such appropriations, then it follows that one Congress has the right to limit another in its legislative expenses, a concession which I suppose no one will admit is correct.

My contention is that the current expenses of each House must be regulated by each House and provision for their payment made as the occasion arises. In other words, the power to provide for its legislative expenses is closely analogous to its power to establish rules for its own government, and if the House should find it necessary to increase the number of clerks to committees, or to increase any other means required for the transaction of the public business, it would be authorized to provide for the payment thereof by an item in the proper appropriation bill regardless of existing law. For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I am of opinion the amendment offered is not subject to the point of order made against it. It being within the power of the House to provide itself with whatever means it considers necessary for the transaction of the public business, it follows that if it should be considered necessary that members should have clerical assistance during the recess, the House has as much right to provide that as other means to transact the public business. But, Mr. Chairman, while I feel perfectly satisfied that the point of order is not well taken, I concur with the gentleman from Tennessee that the amendment involves an extravagant and unnecessary expenditure of public money which this House ought not to make.

Mr. DE ARMOND rose.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman who has just taken his seat, and who seems to be opposed to this amendment——

A MEMBER. No; he is in favor of it.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Then I will take my seat. [Laughter.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. There is manifest here, Mr. Chairman, a disposition to rush with hot haste through the rules of the House and over the law in order to put into the pockets of members of this House $100 a month when Congress is not in session in addition to the salary for which they contracted with their constituents. A point of order, however, is pending, and for the present the Chair may act as a breakwater, and by the use of the law and the rules of the House prevent this raid upon the Treasury, which has neither law nor justice behind it; has nothing to support it except individual interests. The joint resolution which was passed in 1893 provided that there might be paid out of the contingent fund of the House a sum not exceeding $100 a month for the hire of a clerk for each member during the session of Congress.

The first suggestion made now, in order to obviate the force of the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McCALL]—a point of order, in my judgment, unquestionably good—is that the provision in the bill itself is a change of existing law, and that a further change of existing law in the form of this amendment may be allowed, as no point of order has been made against the provision in the bill. Now, I submit that the provision incorporated in this appropriation bill is not a change of existing law in any particular, and that there is no shelter nor support for this attempt to override the law and make this unauthorized appropriation in anything that appears in this bill; so that if the law is to be overridden and this appropriation is to be made, the fault can not be laid at the door of the committee which reported this bill to the House.

What is the provision in the bill? The provision is:

> To pay Members and Delegates the amount which they certify they have paid or agreed to pay for clerk hire necessarily employed by them in the discharge of their official and representative duties, as provided in the joint resolution approved March 3, 1893.

Who has the right to restrict that language, "as provided in the joint resolution approved March 3, 1893"? Who has a right to say that the incorporation of that precise language in this bill does not carry with it all that is embodied in that resolution, the payment out of the contingent fund of the House? It is merely a quibble upon words to contend that this appropriation is of a different character. The very joint resolution of 1893 is itself referred to in the provision in the pending bill. That resolution of 1893 is almost bodily carried into this appropriation, an appropriation within the limitation prescribed by that joint resolution, an appropriation for the purposes specified by that joint resolution, an appropriation "as provided in that joint resolution."

Now, how do we find that this appropriation is to be paid out of a different fund or to come through a different channel? I am aware that there was a ruling in Committee of the Whole of the last House which, if the Chairman sees proper to follow it, may serve as a precedent for a ruling which will hold this point of order not to be good. One of the calamities that sometimes arise in legislative bodies, I believe, is that when a ruling is made, right or wrong, that ruling may be—and too often is, as a matter of course—used as a precedent for other rulings. But the question, I take it, before the present Chairman and before this committee and before the country is not so much whether the gentleman who presided in the Committee of the Whole in the last House ruled correctly or incorrectly upon a similar amendment as it is the question of how the Chairman now presiding should rule and how this House should govern its action with respect to this matter.

I say again if a precedent only is required for a ruling which shall override this point of order, the precedent has been set, but I appeal to the Chairman—and I believe I shall not appeal in vain—to exercise his own independent judgment on the law, and not to be bound by a precedent not founded. Precedents only deserve to be followed when they rest upon correct principles. Precedents deserve to be followed only when in themselves they are worthy of the approval of those called upon to act with respect to them. If we are to scurry over the country here and there for decisions upon this point and upon that point, there will be no court of justice which may not "dispense with justice" and decree that which will be the most arrant injustice, because precedents can be found for everything, and unfortunately they are not lacking in this House.

I recollect that in the last House, after a ruling in Committee of the Whole upon such a point of order as that now pending, I raised the question in the House itself whether or not the matter might not be there reviewed. It was my belief then, it is my belief now, that the House in its organized capacity, with its chosen presiding officer in the chair, ought to be privileged, and is privileged (unless we follow some of these precedents that are "more honored in the breach than in the observance"), to correct erroneous rulings made in the Committee of the Whole. The decision, however, was against me upon that point; and there stands another precedent.

However that may be, the duty of the Chairman now of course is to rule correctly upon this proposition; and I have not a particle of doubt that he will endeavor to do so. I ask him to use his own judgment, to be guided by the law, and not to rest upon a precedent which has no support in reason or in law—a precedent in reference to which, I venture to say, the gentleman himself who set it will not risk his parliamentary reputation by rising and stating in this House that it was founded in reason or is justified in parliamentary law.

Now, then, I venture to say that this provision as incorporated in this bill, without speaking closely or particularly about this or that exact phraseology of appropriation bills, does not work a change of law; that it is possible, it is reasonable, it is natural to carry out the law as embodied in that joint resolution of March 3, 1893, under and by virtue of this provision which the Committee on Appropriations has incorporated in this bill. A change of law has not been proposed by the committee. If a change of law be now made, let the responsibility or the credit, as the case may be, rest upon those who must bear the one or deserve the other. The provision of the committee does not propose to change the law, but the proposition to change the law is that which is now pending in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY].

The question here is not so much as to this point, though I would be perfectly willing for my part to let the House vote upon it, would be glad to have the House vote upon it, would be glad to have spread before the country the record of a yea-and-nay vote upon it—this is not, however, so much a question of the right or the wrong of this proposed amendment as an original proposition as it is the question of parliamentary law and of statutory law involved in this inquiry now before the Chair.

But passing on to the other question, I contend not only that this point of order ought to be sustained because it is manifestly good, but I contend that, being good, it ought to be sustained because apparently the upholding of the law here and the sustaining of the point of order made under the law and under the rules is the only means by which this House can be kept from thrusting ready hands into the Treasury and taking from it monthly when the House is not in session funds to which members of this House are not entitled, just as much an increase of official salary, just as completely and effectually, so far as it goes, a "salary grab" as that infamous measure, black and rotten, a stench in the nostrils of decent men, which relegated to private life so many men when the salaries of members of Congress were raised from $5,000 to $7,500 years ago.

The joint resolution which was passed March 3, 1893, did not relate to that Congress. I voted against it then, as a great many other gentlemen did, but it did not apply to that Congress. The gentlemen who put it upon the statute book did not by doing so legislate money into their own pockets. But here is a proposition to be passed upon by the beneficiaries to take out of the Treasury of the people money which belongs to them and money which we have no moral or legal right to take. I beseech the Chairman to sustain a point of order manifestly good, to disregard a precedent notoriously bad—to save the Treasury and to save the people of the United States from the looting that is here clearly threatened.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Certainly, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. In the gentleman's judgment, is not the provision reported by the committee a change in existing law?

Mr. DE ARMOND. It is not, in my judgment.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does it not provide for payment out of a different fund from the fund out of which these payments were to be made under the joint resolution of March 3, 1893?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Not necessarily.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it not true that under the joint resolution of 1893 the sums paid to members are to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, while the payments provided for in this bill are to be made by the Treasurer of the United States?

Mr. DE ARMOND. This is virtually a part, within the meaning of that resolution, of the contingent fund of the House.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, a change of the handling officer through whom an appropriation goes is not necessarily a change of law within the meaning of this rule. Whether one officer pays or whether by a mere regulation another officer pays, the money finally all comes out of the Treasury of the United States through whatever channels it may pass.

Mr. HEPBURN. In one instance the Clerk of this House is required to make payment——

Mr. DE ARMOND. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. And in the other instance the Treasurer of the United States is required to pay. Is not that a change of existing law?

Mr. DE ARMOND. It is a mere informal regulation. Either way there is simply an appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will address myself a moment to that proposition. If you concede that the contention of the gentleman from Iowa is correct—I do not concede it, I combat it—but if you concede that it is correct, I claim that still the pending amendment is not in order. The proposition to change the law in one particular does not authorize the enlargement of that proposition so as to change the law in other and different particulars.

Here is where we get, if the contention of the gentleman from Iowa is true, on his theory and tested by his own philosophy: He says this provision in the bill, as it is, is in itself a change of existing law. Now, for the sake of the argument, let us admit that it is and see what follows, according to his theory. On that basis he says that the amendment, which he concedes to be a change of existing law, is proper as an amendment to another proposition changing existing law. If that be true, then the rules of the House as to this particular item are absolutely swept away, and the point of order on any provision that may change, enlarge, or modify any provision of the paragraph in the bill would be in order. You could provide, for instance, for increasing the salary of these clerks from $100 to $500 per month, and that would not be subject to a point of order. You could provide that instead of one clerk we should have two. You could provide for a messenger as well as a clerk. You might provide for anything that could be dragged in as a part and parcel of something to go to a member. You could have clerks of particular classes. You could have a stenographer and a typewriter. You could have a Department clerk to attend to the business of the member in the Departments. In fact, there would be no stopping place so long as you are providing for the assistance of members, on the theory advanced by the gentleman from Iowa. That is, I submit to him, the logical result of his argument, and the gentleman is always an able and a clear debater on every question.

But, I repeat, the inevitable result of his contention is that any amendment relating to the subject-matter of the resolution of the 3d of March, 1893, so as to be germane to it, could be put upon this clause of the bill, and the provision of the rule against a change in existing law on an appropriation bill would be entirely futile and of no avail—if his contention is right.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit me a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Are you in favor of the proposition to pay members the amount necessarily expended by them for clerk hire, as reported by the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. DE ARMOND. No, sir; I am not; although I have no special objection to it in its present form.

Mr. TAWNEY. You are not only opposed to the amendment, but you are also opposed to the payment of any clerical hire whatever?

Mr. DE ARMOND. I will say this: In days when Congressmen on this floor were as useful to their constituents and to the country as any of us can ever be or ever hope to be, when they were paid smaller salaries, and when money was worth less than it is worth to-day, Congressmen were not supplied with clerical assistance at the expense of the people. I voted against the resolution of 1893; I would vote for its repeal; I would vote against this appropriation because, while the clerk is convenient and an aid to the member, I would be perfectly willing myself to forego that assistance and aid in order to bring to the people of the United States the saving that would come from leaving the money in the Treasury instead of thus paying it out.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think I have a distinct recollection of the gentleman from Missouri casting a vote in the Fifty-third Congress that cost the people of the United States very much more than they can possibly lose by the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Please state what vote.

Mr. TAWNEY. Your vote in favor of the Wilson-Gorman tariff bill. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. Ah, indeed! Then let me say to the gentleman from Minnesota that I voted for the Wilson-Gorman tariff bill, not as reaching the tariff system I desired, but as a long stride in the right direction. But I have never yet voted for some little bit of an "expediency" tariff measure repudiated in the house of its friends and absolutely worthless everywhere. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Will the gentleman from Missouri permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. DE ARMOND. If I have the right to the floor I will do so with pleasure.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I desire to ask you whether or not you have availed yourself of the privilege accorded by the resolution in question—March, 1893—and drawn any money from the Treasury of the United States on that account?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Then, as I understand it, to take a little money from the Treasury is all right; and the only difficulty with the gentleman is that when he comes to take a larger sum it is all wrong.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I do not know how the gentleman from California understands it. If he understands that he will be permitted to represent a district in California, and avail himself of the provisions of the law that apply equally to the people of California as to the people of my district in Missouri, who contribute their share of the revenues to support the Government, and that the people of my district shall be deprived of whatever service the employment of a clerk to their member of Congress may be to them, he is greatly mistaken, I assure him, so long as I occupy a seat on this floor. But if the gentleman wants to raise the question whether I will forego the privilege of having a clerk paid out of the public Treasury in order to save the people of the United States the expenditure for these clerks, I will say to him now yes, readily, at once, upon this bill or any bill. I stand upon that as I have always stood; but I am not around here admitting, by my acts or by my words, that the gentleman from California or any other gentleman here representing any constituency has any rights beyond those which I have, or that his constituency possesses any merits beyond those possessed by my constituency.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words with reference to the point of order, and incidentally upon some other matters that have been referred to by our friend from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hopes the gentleman will confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Oh, I will try to. My friend from Idaho [Mr. WILSON] says I may scatter a little, but I hope not. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, it was but a few days ago that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] made a very fine, close, legal, and technical argument, so technical and metaphysical that it needed the trump of the Archangel Gabriel to bring a man to the surface that could see the point he made in reference to the point of order.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I presume that man has the floor now, Mr. Chairman. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of California. No; I do not think any common man could understand the point.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I suppose Gabriel has summoned the man, and that he is here.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. No; I did not understand the gentleman's argument, and I do not understand it now. It was made in reference to the payment of salaries of Indian inspectors, and the gentleman said that the point of order was not well taken, because the bill itself, as introduced by the Committee on Appropriations, had changed the law, and he argued very elaborately and very eloquently and very learnedly, as he always does, and I am informed that he convinced the then Chairman that he was correct in his attenuated point of order. Now he seeks, emboldened by the success that he met with at that time, to ask the Chairman—I believe the same gentleman now presiding—to rule in his favor upon this point of order that he has now made, not because the point of order is good, but because he says that if the point of order is overruled it will take money out of the Treasury of the United States. He asks this Chairman to overrule a precedent made by a gentleman equal in knowledge of parliamentary law to anyone on this floor; equal, perhaps, to the gentleman from Missouri in devotion to the interests of his people and the rights of the whole nation. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] asks the Chairman to overrule that precedent. In the short time in which I have been able to practice law I have always distrusted not the ability, but the discretion of those lawyers who seek to win a lawsuit by asking the court to overrule the precedents that have been made by courts in former days. And so to-day, when the gentleman asks that this be overruled because the precedent has been made, and you must overrule that precedent, it seems to me he robs his argument of much of its force.

Now, in regard to this point of order, is not this a change of law? As is well said by the gentleman from Iowa, the joint resolution of 1893 provides that the money shall be taken from the contingent fund, shall be paid out by the Clerk of the House. As I understand, the bill introduced by the Committee on Appropriations provides that the money shall be taken from the general fund, and that it shall be paid out by the Treasurer of the United States; and it seems to me that that shows that it is a change of existing law, and that therefore, if no point of order was made against the paragraph introduced by the committee, certainly a point of order can not be made against the amendment. Now, so far as it may affect the gentleman from Missouri, I am not the keeper of his conscience. I am the keeper of my own; and I am ready to meet the verdict of the people of the Second district of California upon the question that they sent me here as a Representative and not as a clerk, and that they are willing to pay for the services of a clerk to help me answer their letters and attend to other routine business. [Applause.]

I want to say, speaking as one, that I have no doubt the people of the United States will sustain those Representatives who vote to spend their money in doing good work, and will not support those who seek to make a cheap record by wearing the old clothes of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holman] and to pose as great reformers and watchdogs of the Treasury at the present time. The day of watchdogs of the Treasury has passed, and we ought now to meet this matter upon its own merits. The gentleman says that he has drawn that money from the Treasury of the United States to pay for clerk hire. I am glad of it. It shows us that he is a much better man than he would have us believe by his attack upon this amendment. It shows us that he realizes that we all need clerks; that he realizes that the services of a clerk are necessary, and that this objection of his to this amendment is made solely and simply, as it seems to me, because he is satisfied with the small amount that he gets and is not broad minded, as he usually is, to allow the rest of us to have that which we desire.

Now, there is not any law to compel him to take this money. If the dear people of the United States are suffering, and are just standing up in arms and crying aloud because they are losing this money from the Treasury, the gentleman from Missouri need not draw his if he thinks it is too much. He can turn it over to the rest of us, and we will be glad to take it and use it. [Laughter.] But it does seem to me that this point of order is not well taken, or else that the point of order made the other day upon the salaries of the Indian inspectors was not well taken. Both of them ought to stand or fall together. If it was right then to follow the gentleman from Missouri in saying that the appropriation bill changed the law, it seems to me that it is right now, and if it was wrong then it is wrong now. A precedent was set then, and I believe in following precedents.

Mr. BOATNER. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the point of order made against the pending amendment is that it changes existing law and increases the expenses, which is prohibited by the rule. I want to call the attention of the House to the following facts which militate against this view of the question: In the Fifty-first Congress a provision to pay clerks $100 per month was inserted in a general appropriation bill. It was carried in Committee of the Whole House, and defeated on a yea-and-nay vote in the House. In the Fifty-third Congress, when we had exactly the same rule that we have now, an amendment was proposed on a general appropriation bill in the Committee of the Whole House and it was carried. It was voted down in the House.

Now, sir, if the contention of the gentlemen who support this objection is a sound one, that provision in a general appropriation bill in the Fifty-first Congress was contrary to the rule, and the same amendment which was adopted by the Committee of the Whole House on an appropriation bill in the Fifty-third Congress was also amenable to the same objection; but that objection, if it was made, was overruled. I do not recollect that it was made; but certainly, Mr. Chairman, the House did vote upon the proposition, and in view of the fierce opposition then existing to it, the point would have been made, had it been considered as a change of existing law and not in retrenchment of public expenditures. Now, sir, my insistence is this, that this House has the right to provide at each session of Congress for its legislative expenses, whatever they may be. That the proposition to add to its clerical force in any direction, whether for the service of the committees or for the service of members, is a question to be determined by the present exigencies, and can not be limited by any law which has for its object to forestall the action of future Congresses' expenditures; and upon that line of reasoning the point of order is not well taken, and should be overruled. [Cries of "Rule!"]

Mr. LINNEY. I want to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is pending, and must first be determined.

Mr. LINNEY. Oh, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the joint resolution passed in 1893.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That on and after April 1, 1893, each Member and Delegate of the House of Representatives of the United States may, on the 1st day of every month during sessions of Congress, certify to the Clerk of the House of Representatives the amount which he has paid or agreed to pay for clerk hire necessarily employed by him in the discharge of his official and representative duties during the previous month, and the amount so certified shall be paid by the Clerk out of the contingent fund of the House on the 4th day of each month to the person or persons named in each of said certificates so filed: Provided, That the amount so certified and paid for clerical services rendered to each Member and Delegate shall not exceed $100 for any month during the session: And provided further, That the provisions of this resolution shall not apply to members who are chairmen of committees entitled under the rules to a clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph in the bill, on page 16, reads in this way:

To pay Members and Delegates the amount which they certify they have paid or agreed to pay for clerk hire necessarily employed by them in the discharge of their official and representative duties, as provided in the joint resolution approved March 3, 1893.

That is the resolution just read; and then it makes an appropriation of a sum of money. Now, the language in the bill is "to pay," etc., as provided in the joint resolution. The Chair can see no warrant in separating the balance of that resolution from the provision requiring payment out of the contingent fund, and giving effect to a part of the language and leaving the other without effect, as has been suggested in debate here. Or, in other words, the very provision in the joint resolution is provided for in this bill—to pay as provided under the joint resolution, to pay from the contingent fund of the House, all clerks provided for under the joint resolution. So in the opinion of the Chair the text of the bill does not change existing law.

The next question is as to whether the language of the amendment changes existing law. The Chair has been referred to a decision made in the last Congress upon similar language in an amendment nearly identical, offered to the provision in the bill which seems to the Chair precisely identical with this, and it was held to be in order and not changing existing law. Upon turning to that decision the Chair finds that a gentleman, a member of the House, raised the point of order. The Chair asked if the gentleman desired to be heard on the point of order. The gentleman answered he did not; and, without any debate, and without any reason being stated, without even the grounds of the point of order being stated to the committee, the Chair very promptly overruled the point of order and held the amendment to be in order. The present occupant of the chair has not found from the RECORD what gentleman was in the chair at that time. He does not feel bound by a decision made in a former Congress, where no reason is given for the ruling, as stated, and where the Chair can not see any reason for sustaining or following the ruling that was made at that time.

Now, this amendment is clearly obnoxious to the point of order, standing in itself, and being an amendment to a paragraph in a bill, which paragraph does not change existing law, it is not in order under the rules of the House, and the Chair is constrained to sustain the point of order, and so rules.

Mr. TAWNEY. I take an appeal, Mr. Chairman, from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota takes an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and the question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. DOCKERY and others. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 43.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire whether the provision on page 7, which was passed over for the time being, is now in order for consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not, unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. MOODY. It was passed over until some future time by unanimous consent, and whether that time has arrived or not is my inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The understanding was that the committee might return to the paragraph at any time before concluding the bill. The Clerk will report it.

The paragraph was again read, as follows:

For 38 annual clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, at $1,200 each, $45,600.

Mr. MOODY. I move to amend, Mr. Chairman, by striking out the whole of the paragraph just read. I wish to say very briefly that this amendment——

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that part of the bill has been passed.

Mr. MOODY. The gentleman could not have been present when this paragraph was passed over temporarily by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order comes too late.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. I think the gentleman misapprehends the point of order I make. At the time we left this part of the bill the point of order raised by the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON] was undecided.

The CHAIRMAN. No; that point of order was overruled.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. I did not understand that the Chair had so announced.

Mr. MOODY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out this paragraph, because if it is stricken out by a vote of the committee, the effect will be precisely the same as if it had gone out on the motion of the gentleman from California who raised the point of order, but raised it too late.

Mr. Chairman, I have not an opinion upon the merits of annual clerks to members. I have not any right to have an opinion, because I have not had any experience of the calls upon members of this House in vacation, having been elected only a month before I took my seat. But I have an opinion upon another subject; that is, that we ought to require the same measure of economy at the other end of this building that we impose upon ourselves. [Applause.] Now, I am informed that the practical consequence of the adoption of the motion to strike out this paragraph may be this: That the Senate will insist on the appropriation and that in the conference between the representatives of the two Houses some equitable adjustment will be made, and then the question may return to this House to be discussed and voted upon on its merits. [Applause. Cries of "Vote!"]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert after the word "necessary," in line 14, page 16, the following:

"That all officers and employees of the House, including the Capitol police, who were employed on the 2d day of December, 1895, and who have ceased or who shall, prior to the 1st day of March, 1896, cease to be so employed shall be paid a sum equal to one month's pay at the rate they were severally receiving on the 2d day of December, 1895; and an amount sufficient for this purpose is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be immediately available and to be paid by the Clerk of the House of Representatives."

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Will the gentleman state it?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. It proposes an appropriation not authorized by law.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. It does not change any existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Hampshire desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that this does not change in any manner any existing law. There are several precedents for it, especially one which was approved December 21, 1881, almost identical in language and making an appropriation for precisely the same purpose. It is evident to all of us that quite a number of the discharged employees of this House are still in the city and that many of them are unable to leave for want of funds, and it is a matter of common grace and courtesy, and according to the usual custom of the House, to make this appropriation. I ask a ruling of the Chair in favor of the amendment and a vote upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment is not authorized by law, and therefore the Chair must sustain the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

BOTANIC GARDEN.

For superintendent, $1,800.

For assistants and laborers, under the direction of the Joint Library Committee of Congress, $12,093.75.

For procuring manure, tools, fuel, purchasing trees and shrubs, and for labor and material in connection with repairs and improvements to Botanic Garden, under direction of the Joint Library Committee of Congress, $5,000.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 19, line 10, strike out "twelve," and insert "two"; page 19, lines 10 and 11, strike out "and ninety-three dollars and seventy-five cents," and insert "one hundred dollars"; so that the provision will read "two thousand one hundred dollars."

Mr. STEELE. The adoption of this amendment, Mr. Chairman, will make a saving of about $13,000 on the maintenance of this sinecure at the foot of the hill. It seems almost as idle to propose to strike out any appropriation for the Botanic Garden as it does to strike out member's clerks. It has been tried time and time again, but has always failed, yet no member of this House can in his own mind sustain or justify the expenditure of $18,893 for maintaining that little bit of a house under the hill from which no member gets any benefit whatever. Though the amendment may not prevail, I have offered it in good faith. I think that the reduction proposed in my amendment ought to be made. If this amendment and the one which I propose to offer to the next paragraph be adopted, we shall authorize three laborers at $700 each and $2,000 for the purchase of manure and seed.

Why, sir, they have not even cut the grass over there during the last few years. With the orchard grass and the crow's-feet, the place looks more like an abandoned Virginia farm than like a garden kept by the Government as an example for the country. If my proposition prevails we can save $13,000, and when the Government is running behind at the rate of about $40,000,000 a year in its expenses it seems to me we ought to lose no opportunity to cut off absolutely useless expenses such as these. My amendment will not interfere at all with Mr. Smith. He will receive his salary just the same. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. STEELE,

The CHAIRMAN said: The noes seem to have it.

Mr. STEELE. Let us have a division. I want to see who will stand up to appropriate $10,000 for useless expenditure.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 23, noes 28.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to amend by striking out the last word. I offer this amendment simply for the purpose of putting a question to the gentleman in charge of the bill. I should like to know whether all the appropriations made or to be made for this institution are to be found in this bill; and if not, what appropriations there will be in addition to the $17,000 covered by the bill.

Mr. STEELE. Eighteen thousand dollars.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I will state for the information of the committee that there is an appropriation of $5,000, I believe, in the sundry civil bill for this institution.

Mr. HEPBURN. So that the appropriation for this year will be about $22,000.

Mr. STEELE. Twenty-three thousand dollars.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether he can give to this Committee of the Whole some approximate statement of the cost of the Botanic Garden to the United States? I have been familiar with these appropriations for about fifteen years, and I think during that time there has been appropriated to the Botanic Garden at least $300,000. And I know that at the time my service here began that garden was in about the same condition that it is now. I should like to know, if the gentleman can tell us, how near to a million dollars this institution has cost the United States.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have not had the honor that my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has had of serving in this House for a great number of years, and therefore I have not been, as he has been, the recipient of flowers, etc., grown by the Government. Of course I do not pretend to be well informed as to the exact sum that this Government has expended upon this department. The gentleman's statement of $300,000 is possibly as accurate as any guess that I might make.

Mr. STEELE. Allow me to ask the gentleman whether he can give any excuse for the maintenance of this garden at all; whether he can show any benefit it has given to the country in return for the $300,000 which, as the gentleman from Iowa states, has been expended during the last fifteen years?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. There is the same excuse, I presume, for the existence of the Botanic Garden as there is for the beautifying of any of the public grounds about this Capitol. As I understand, it is not necessary that flowers be grown over in the Smithsonian grounds or along the drive there; it is not necessary that flowers be grown about the Library building or the Capitol or upon any of the reservations in the city. Yet this has been the custom for years. It shows the good taste of Congress; it shows a love for the beautiful; and I suppose that is the reason, or as the gentleman says "excuse," for the existence of this Botanic Garden.

Mr. HEPBURN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. STEELE. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 12 to 15, inclusive, and insert "For procuring manure, tools, fuel, and shrubs, under the direction of the Joint Library Committee of Congress, $1,993.75."

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. One question before the gentleman proceeds. Why should we leave in the previous paragraphs of the bill appropriations of $12,000 for a particular purpose, and then by the gentleman's amendment to this paragraph strike out all the means or agencies necessary for carrying out the work contemplated?

Mr. STEELE. There is only $5,000 provided for in this part of the bill, and that is for the purchase of manure, shrubs, etc. The place does not look as if there had been any manure put upon it for the last ten years.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman may not be as well acquainted with the Botanic Garden as are some other members on this floor.

Mr. STEELE. I am not. I have not been there this year. Looking over the fence is all I want. [Laughter.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. A little more familiarity with the Botanic Garden might make the gentleman acquainted with the agencies carried on there under the direction of Mr. Smith.

Mr. STEELE. Well, this is $12,000, and I left that to the judgment of the House because I had to, and I leave this the same way. If they see fit to give him $5,000 for manure instead of $2,000, I am content to leave it to the judgment of the House. The question is for them now to consider.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STEELE) there were—ayes 8, noes 38.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to the following in the office of the President of the United States: Private secretary, $5,000; assistant secretary, $2,500; one executive clerk and disbursing officer, and one executive clerk, at $2,000 each.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, in line 22 there is a provision for the private secretary of the President at $5,000.

I make the point of order against that provision that it changes existing law. The statute only authorizes $3,500 for such service, and that is an excessive salary for the person who now fills the position. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is that statement disputed as to the law?

Mr. CANNON. I suppose that is what the statute provides, although for several years the amount of $5,000 has been appropriated.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CANNON. How will this clause read now?

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to the following in the office of the President of the United States: Assistant secretary, $2,500; one executive clerk and disbursing officer, and one executive clerk, at $2,000 each, etc.

The CHAIRMAN. The words in the bill have been stricken out on the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. The statute fixes the salary at three thousand five hundred.

A MEMBER. Would it not be better to strike out the fifteen hundred and leave it at three thousand five hundred?

Mr. BAILEY. The point of order was against the provision of the bill. Of course the gentleman can cure it by offering an amendment.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 22, page 19, after the words "United States," insert "private secretary, $3,500."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary traveling expenses, including those of examiners acting under the direction of the Commission, and for expenses of examinations and investigations held elsewhere than at Washington, $7,000.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "seven," in line 2, on page 21, and insert "nine," in the paragraph relating to the Civil Service Commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, line 2, after the word "Washington," strike out the word "seven" and insert "nine"; so as to read: "and for expenses of examinations and investigations held elsewhere than at Washington, $9,000."

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph provides for the expenses of the traveling commission of the civil service when on duty away from Washington, to enable them to go through the States and Territories and examine applicants for the civil service. My experience, and I think every other member of the House will corroborate it, is that they fix but very few places, that is to say, that the appointments are few and far between in each State, for the purpose of making these examinations. In my State, for instance, applicants often have to travel from their residences to the place of appointment for these examinations from two to four hundred miles; and I take it that that is the case more or less throughout the whole country.

Now, it is very unfair to applicants, unfair to young men and young women, who can not afford the expense of going these long distances, to be placed at such a disadvantage in these examinations. When you go into the Civil Service Commission here and ask to have places fixed for the examination so that it will be more convenient to the people, they answer: "We would do so if you would provide for the expense."

I think it is true that the examiners ought to go to as many places in the country as they have money to pay the expense of reaching in order to make these examinations for the convenience of the people. This money is too small an amount as the bill now provides. It does not give them an opportunity of holding these examinations in a sufficient number of places in each State, and does not give the applicants for examination a fair chance. A man who is too poor to pay his way these long distances for the purpose of undergoing the examination is entirely excluded.

My amendment, to add $2,000 more to enable the examiners to fix additional places in the States and Territories for examinations, would enable our constituents who desire to be examined and appointed—very few of them get the appointments anyway—to have an opportunity at least to be examined; and if this amendment is adopted these examinations will be held at places within their reach, and not involve people of very limited means, as is often the case, in the expense of traveling long distances to undergo the examination.

I believe that this amendment ought to prevail. It is in the interest of those who desire to be examined for these places, and it is utterly impossible in a large number of cases, unless a young man is pretty well off, for him to get to the point where the examination is held. The adoption of this amendment will give us additional places for examination in the State.

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. How many additional places will this provide for?

Mr. PICKLER. It ought to provide one or two additional places in each State. I think it will. The appropriation is only $7,000 now, and adding $2,000 I think would probably give one or two more places in each of the States and Territories—probably not more than one place. I take it in my own State it would give one more. Although my own State is 300 miles long from east to west, we only have two points of examination now. I presume the addition of this $2,000 would only give one more point in my State. It would give more, of course, in the more thickly populated regions. I hope the committee will accept this amendment. It is in the interest of poor men and poor women who are unable to incur the expense of going these great distances, staying two or three days at these examinations, paying hotel bills, and so forth. It will confer a benefit on a class of persons who, it seems to me, ought to have this consideration.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Why not have the examinations conducted at their homes and be done with it?

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, well, that would be carrying the thing a little too far, I think.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I see that in 1889 there was an appropriation of $5,000 for this work. Then there was an appropriation of $5,250 in subsequent years down to 1894, when there was an appropriation of $6,000. In 1895 there was $6,000; in 1896, $7,000. Now, I understand the gentleman's amendment proposes to increase it to $9,000?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes. An additional reason is that very lately, as the gentleman well knows, they have put applicants for teachers in Indian schools under the civil service, and a number of other employees of the Indian service. The employees of the Printing Office and of the Geological Survey have also lately been put in the civil service, which of course brings a greater number of people for examination, and would therefore be a stronger argument why this sum should be increased and give better opportunities for examination.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. I was going to remark that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] differs from the gentlemen in charge of this department who state in their estimates that they only desire $8,000. And as we gave them $7,000 last year, and that was the first year they had received that amount, we thought, under all the circumstances, $7,000 would be enough to appropriate for 1897. I only wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that my friend must be excited on this question, because he exceeds the estimate by $1,000. Therefore I must insist that the amendment should be voted down.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the estimate is. I know that when a member of the House goes to ask that another place for holding examinations be allowed in his State the universal answer has been that Congress refuses to appropriate for the expense, and that therefore they can not do it. I have been there for four or five years, and the answer has always been that. They say they are willing to do it, but that Congress refuses to appropriate the money. I do not believe there can be any more worthy appropriation put into this bill. With the large civil-service list that there is now in this country, it is a good thing to give the young men and young women of the States and Territories an opportunity to go where these examinations are held.

Mr. STEELE. If you have been turned down in this way, why not make a motion to strike out the whole provision? I will vote with you.

Mr. PICKLER. I will not do that, because I believe in the Civil Service Commission. I do not want it stricken out.

Mr. BROSIUS. I just want to add a word to what the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] has said. I had not intended to say anything upon this subject, but I am very strongly impressed, after giving the matter some considerable attention, that there is a real necessity for an increase in the appropriation for the expenses of the Civil Service Commission. The law and the rule require that two examinations be held in every State and Territory in the Union. That number of examinations is absolutely necessary. Indeed, it is inadequate. In 1894 there were over 37,000 persons examined for places in the civil service of the United States. Now, they are unable often to hold the required number of examinations, namely, two in each State and Territory. An increase in the amount allowed for this purpose—the small amount named by my friend from South Dakota—would, I think, be a very proper recognition of the importance and value of these examinations.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BROSIUS. With great pleasure.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Do not the present facilities for examination give us the examination for about 40,000 persons for civil service and their eligibility passed upon, which is 35,000 more than we need or have places to fill? Now, if you extend the facilities, then you extend the number of applicants and increase by thousands and tens of thousands the people knocking at the doors of the Departments who can not get places. What do you want to do that for?

Mr. BROSIUS. I think it is very important and a good thing that the young men and young women of the country should aspire for civic honors. It would afford them opportunities of securing an honorable record if they desire it, and would increase this provision still more and authorize not only two examinations in each State or Territory, but three or four, so that the examinations would be accessible to all who desire to take them.

Mr. PICKLER. The suggestion of the gentleman from Georgia simply means that the rich man's son should be given an opportunity to be examined while the poor man's son would not be able to be examined.

Mr. BROSIUS. The great virtue, the peculiar excellency of our civil-service system is that it opens the doors of the civil service to personal worth. It knows no rank, but gives every man and every woman who is ambitious to serve his or her country in its civil service a convenient opportunity for an examination with a view to entering that service.

Mr. HARDY. At one hundred or two hundred dollars a month.

Mr. BROSIUS. I think this slight concession to this great institution of ours should be made.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, it costs now, in round numbers, $100,000 to run the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. About $100,000 more than it is worth.

Mr. CANNON. I am not here to attack it or to defend it. If we meet its estimates—and they always guess high enough, for they have caught on to that along with the other Departments—we will do quite well. In my judgment the bill gives quite a sufficient sum for effective service. It is useless for me to reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROSIUS], because we might not agree about the great benefit that comes to the multitude who have a chance to enter the civil service. Out in my country, when the notice is given, people travel and submit to the examination, and not one in fifty, after they pass the examination, has any fruition. Should I undertake to say anything further, from that standpoint it is a flat failure. I am not here to attack it or interfere with it, but when we give them the estimates we give quite enough. I did not think they were really in earnest about this appropriation until the gentleman from Pennsylvania bore his testimony. I did not think my friend from South Dakota was in real earnest. I supposed he was talking for that very sparsely settled section of the country known as the Sioux Reservation, which he so ably and honorably represents now, as well as the other portions more thickly settled.

Mr. PICKLER. If the gentleman from Illinois will allow me. He says the civil service costs about $100,000 a year. Now, is not that the very strongest argument that these examinations should be made accessible to any young man or young woman who feels that he or she wants a chance for an examination? Is not that the very reason why we should give them an opportunity, after we have spent all that money?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, when we meet the estimates we travel quite as fast as we are authorized in traveling, I will say to my friend.

Mr. PICKLER. The estimate is $8,000.

Mr. CANNON. But the gentleman knew better than they did, and put it at $9,000. Now, it has been growing and increasing; and the committee, after examination, thought $7,000 sufficient, and I hope the committee will vote down the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PICKLER. Division, Mr. Chairman. [Pending the count.] I withdraw the demand for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. PICKLER. I move to strike out the word "seven," in line 2, page 21, and insert the word "eight."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 21, line 2, after the word "Washington," strike out "seven" and insert "eight."

Mr. PICKLER. That is the estimate, as I understand, of the Commission.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 22, after line 12, insert:

"That hereafter the total amount appropriated in the various paragraphs of an appropriation act shall be determined by the correct footing up of the specific sums or rates appropriated in each paragraph contained therein, unless otherwise expressly provided."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, pending that, I desire to present some amendments which I propose to offer to the marshals' and attorneys' salary bill, and I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The amendments are as follows:

Insert as an independent section, between sections 6 and 7, on page 9, of bill H. R. 6654:

"SEC. 7. That in all writs of venire facias and of subpœna for witnesses summoned on behalf of the United States it shall be the duty of the clerk issuing the same, so far as practicable, to ascertain and insert therein the post-office address of each person named therein, and when the marshal shall receive any such writ, if the time is sufficient for service by mail, as provided in this section, he shall address to each person named in such venire or subpœna, whose post-office address is given or can be ascertained promptly by him, a notice requiring such person to be and appear at the time and place and for the purpose mentioned in the writ. The marshal shall sign such notice officially, mail and register it at the post-office, addressed to the person therein mentioned, with a request indorsed on the envelope in the usual form for the return of the letter to him if not delivered within ten days. The postmaster to whom any such letter shall be delivered, inclosed in a Department of Justice penalty envelope, shall transmit the same without charge for postage or registry fee. The receipt of such registered letter by the person to whom the notice was addressed shall be deemed valid service upon him of the subpœna or venire, and the return registry receipt card, signed by such person, or proof of the delivery of such registered letter on his order, in writing, to any other person for him, shall be taken as prima facie evidence of service, and the marshal shall make return accordingly. Whenever any such notice shall be returned through the post-office undelivered, the marshal shall serve it as other writs are served; and whenever practicable all such returned notices, and all process and writs, the costs on which would be chargeable to the United States, other than writs of venire facias and subpœna for witnesses, shall be sent by mail, directed to the deputy marshal residing nearest the locality where such writs, process, or returned notices are to be served or executed, or to a special deputy appointed by him to serve the same in such locality, and such deputies shall make return of such writs, process, or notices to the marshal by mail: and in no case in which the United States would be chargeable with costs for the service of any writ, process, or notice of whatever character shall mileage be charged or allowed for travel from the place of issue to the place of execution or service thereof, if the same was sent or could have been sent by mail to a deputy marshal or other suitable person in the neighborhood of the place of service."

Insert the following new section between sections 14 and 15 on page 12:

"SEC. —. That every person who carries on the business of a retail liquor dealer without having paid the special tax as required by law shall for every such offense be fined not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars and be imprisoned in jail not exceeding six months. That the judges of the circuit courts of the United States and the judges of the Territorial courts shall divide each district into commissioners' districts, consisting of one or more counties or parishes, and they shall appoint one or more United States commissioners in each commissioner's district, as may be required for the efficient and economical execution of the laws. All United States commissioners are hereby constituted inferior tribunals, with jurisdiction for final determination and judgment on any complaint for the offense of retailing liquors without payment of the special tax required by the laws of the United States. The trial of such cases by commissioners shall be without indictment, and a traverse jury of twelve men, when demanded by the defendant, shall be summoned from the bystanders. From any judgment of the commissioner in any such case the defendant may appeal to the district court. In all proceedings in and about the trial of such complaints the commissioner shall conform to the rules for criminal procedure prescribed by the Revised Statutes, so far as the same are applicable, and in matters not provided for by the laws of the United States the commissioner shall follow the rules of procedure and the practice in trials of misdemeanors by justices of the peace or other courts of limited jurisdiction, under the laws of the State where the complaint is tried. United States commissioners shall receive for their services such fees as may be provided by law, except that in all criminal cases heard by them they shall only be allowed $1 for issuing process to arrest and $1 for a recognizance or bond for court, including affidavits of jurisdiction of sureties and acknowledgments, and for all other writs and processes issued, for all oaths administered, for docketing and trying the same, and for all services performed the sum of $5, and no more, for each case; but where two or more charges are preferred against any person at the same time the commissioner shall be allowed only for a fee in one case. In preliminary examinations where there is probable ground to believe the defendant guilty the commissioner shall bind him over, if he shall give the bail required, to appear for trial before the court having jurisdiction nearest the place where the offense was committed; and if he can not give the required bail the commissioner shall commit him for trial to the nearest jail where prisoners can be securely and most economically kept, and shall in both cases transmit all the papers in the case to the clerk of the United States court to be held in said district nearest the place where the offense was committed, at which court grand juries are impaneled; and the clerk shall notify the district attorney thereof; but any accused person who may be committed in default of bail may, upon the order of the judge, in writing, be removed to and tried at that place in the judicial district where the court will be held next after his commitment. Justices of the peace shall receive the same fees as United States commissioners for services in criminal cases. Their accounts shall be verified by oath and forwarded to the United States attorney of the district to be submitted to the court for approval. It shall be the duty of commissioners and justices of the peace to examine and certify to the marshal for payment bills of witnesses for transportation and attendance. Jurors shall be allowed for attending a commissioner's court, as provided in this section, 50 cents each, to be paid by the marshal on the certificate and order of the commissioner."

Insert the following sections between sections 16 and 17, on page 15:

"SEC. —. That no fees shall be paid to any United States commissioner on any warrant issued, or any other fees, in prosecutions under the internal-revenue laws, unless said fees have been taxed against and collected from the defendant, or unless the prosecution has been approved either before or after arrest of the defendant by a circuit or district judge, or the attorney of the United States in the district where the offense is alleged to have been committed, and unless said prosecution shall have been commenced upon a sworn complaint setting forth the facts constituting the offense and alleging them to be within the personal knowledge of the affiant, or upon a sworn complaint by a United States district attorney or his assistant, a collector or deputy collector of internal revenue, or revenue agent, setting forth the facts upon information and belief.

"SEC. —. That section 853, Revised Statutes of the United States, is hereby repealed from and after June 30, 1896, when this act shall take effect and be in force."

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, before the motion that the committee rise is put, I wish to ask unanimous consent that where any amendment has been adopted which involves a change of the total at the end of the paragraph the clerk of the committee shall have the right to make the total appearing in the bill conform to the fact.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The motion of Mr. McCALL of Tennessee that the committee rise was then agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the legislative appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without my approval House bill numbered 2769, entitled "An act to authorize the leasing of lands for educational purposes in Arizona."

This bill provides for the leasing of all the public lands reserved to the Territory of Arizona for the benefit of its universities and schools, "under such laws and regulations as may be hereafter prescribed by the legislature of said Territory."

If the proposed legislation granted no further authority than this, it would in terms at least recognize the safety and propriety of leaving the desirability of leasing these lands, and the limitations and safeguards regulating such leasing, to be determined by the local legislature chosen by the people to make their laws and protect their interests.

Instead of stopping here, however, the bill further provides that until such legislative action the governor, the secretary of the Territory, and the superintendent of public instruction shall constitute a board for the leasing of said lands under the rules and regulations heretofore prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. It is specifically declared that it shall not be necessary to submit said leases to the Secretary of the Interior for approval, and that no leases shall be made for a longer term than five years, nor for a term extending beyond the date of the admission of the Territory to statehood.

Under these provisions the lands reserved for university and school purposes, whose value largely depends upon their standing timber, and in which every citizen of the Territory has a deep interest, may be leased and denuded of their timber by officers none of whom have been chosen by the people, and without the sanction of any law or regulation made by their representatives in the local legislature. Even the measure of protection which would be afforded the citizens of the Territory by a submission to the Secretary of the Interior of the leases proposed, and thus giving him an opportunity to ascertain whether or not they comply with his regulations, is especially withheld.

It was hardly necessary to provide in this bill that these lands might be leased "under such laws and regulations as may be hereafter prescribed by the legislature of said Territory," if the action of the legislature was to be forestalled and rendered nugatory by the immediate and unrestrained action of the officers constituted "a board for the leasing of said lands" pending such legislative consideration. These are inconsistencies which are not satisfactorily accounted for by the suggestion that the time that would elapse before the legislature could consider the subject would be important.

The protests I have received from numerous and influential citizens of the Territory indicate considerable opposition to this bill among those interested in the preservation and proper management of these school lands.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 28, 1896.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that action upon the message just read be postponed until to-morrow morning, after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. DINGLEY. Do I understand that a vote is then to be had without discussion?

Mr. LACEY. The request is that the matter come up for consideration to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not hear the gentleman distinctly. Does this request, if agreed to, bring the matter up in the House without referring it to the committee?

Mr. LACEY. It brings it up in the House. The committee have no desire to consider the matter further. It has been thoroughly considered.

The unanimous consent asked for by Mr. LACEY was given.

CONTESTED ELECTION—M'DONALD VS. JONES.

Mr. TURNER of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Elections No. 1 to present its unanimous report in the case of McDonald vs. Jones, from the First Congressional district of Virginia. I ask for the present consideration of the report, and shall move the adoption of the accompanying resolution.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

To the honorable Speaker and the House of Representatives:

The Committee on Elections No. 1 do hereby respectfully report as follows:

That we have fully considered the application of James J. McDonald for leave to serve notice of contest and to contest the election of WILLIAM A. JONES, as Representative in Congress for the First Congressional district of the State of Virginia, and we have listened attentively to the arguments of the counsel for the respective parties and to the proofs produced by them, and respectfully report:

That with reasonable diligence the notice of contest could have been served within the time prescribed for that purpose by the act of Congress in such case made.

And we are further convinced by the proofs produced before us on the hearing of the said application and report that there is no substantial ground in fact for the proposed contest, and the same could not be successfully maintained if it should be allowed to be made.

It also appeared that the said James J. McDonald at the time of the election in 1894, and prior to and since that time, was engaged in business and resided with his family in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, and that he had no place of business and no business or residence of any description in the State of Virginia, and the committee is of opinion that he was not an inhabitant of the State of Virginia at or near the time of the election for Representatives in Congress in the First Congressional district of said State in 1894. And that he was not eligible for said office at or near the time of the said election in the year 1894.

Upon these grounds the committtee unanimously adopted the resolution that the application of the said James J. McDonald for leave to serve a notice of contest of, and to contest, said election should be, and it thereupon was, denied. And the committee respectfully recommend the adoption of the following resolution by the House of Representatives. All of which is respectfully submitted.

Dated February 25, 1896.

CHARLES DANIELS, Chairman.
LEMUEL W. ROYSE.
FRED C. LEONARD.
ROMULUS Z. LINNEY.
WILLIAM H. MOODY.
EDWARD D. COOKE.
HUGH A. DINSMORE.
C. L. BARTLETT.
S. S. TURNER.

Resolved, That the application of James J. McDonald for leave to serve a notice of contest and to contest the election of William A. Jones as Representative of the First Congressional district of the State of Virginia in the Fifty fourth Congress be, and the same hereby is, denied.

Mr. TURNER of Virginia. I move the adoption of the resolution just read.

The question being taken, the resolution was adopted.

On motion of Mr. TURNER of Virginia, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I move that the House now take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. GIBSON. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that request for a moment. I hold in my hand, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. If the motion for a recess is withdrawn, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4408) to amend subdivision 10 of section 2238 and to repeal subdivision 12 of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I have not withdrawn my motion for a recess.

The motion of Mr. McCALL of Tennessee for a recess was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa, Mr. HEPBURN, will preside at the evening session.

The House then took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House, at 8 o'clock p. m., was called to order by Mr. HEPBURN as Speaker pro tempore, who directed the Clerk to read clause 2 of Rule XXVI.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar under the rule just read.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Speaker, when on last Friday night the gentleman who has just made that motion attempted to accentuate the position of some gentlemen on this side, myself among the number, as obstructing pension legislation and as preventing the passage of pension bills for deserving soldiers, without giving us an opportuaity to reply, he probably provoked such antagonism as to have prevented any pension legislation at all until a quorum should appear on this floor, but for myself I do not propose to raise that question at this time on going into the Committee of the Whole.

But I wish to say this in regard to the allegation of the gentleman from South Dakota. I wish to say that I, and my associates with me here, stand ready to assist in passing what we regard as honest and deserving bills for honest and deserving soldiers or their widows; but we do protest that favoritism and unfairness shall not be recognized in this House in the consideration of pension legislation. We protest that the "bums," the bounty jumpers, the camp followers, and others of that class who are excluded from the general pension law and from the benefits of the legislation heretofore passed shall not come in here, when they have a friend at court, and have their bills presented and driven through to the exclusion of honest, deserving, and meritorious soldiers.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ERDMAN. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Has the House attempted to grant any pensions to camp followers during this session, or to deserters? If so, I would like to know which they are.

Mr. ERDMAN. There have been attempts; and from the bills that are still on the Calendar the gentleman will see, if he chooses to inspect them now, or in future, that there are many of this character to come up for the consideration of the House; and I want to say for myself that these bills we are going to oppose, and if the great majority of the House proposes to put themselves on record, and go to the country in favor of forcing through bills of that character, let them do it.

Mr. CROWTHER. Will the gentleman please name one bill on the list of bills on the Calendar, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, which is to grant a pension to a camp follower?

Mr. ERDMAN. I will point them out in due time when we reach them, and proceed to discuss the several bills in their order. If the other side attempts to parade us before the country as opposed to proper legislation, they are doing or attempting to do an act that is not warranted by the facts, and one that is not based on truth.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Dakota moves that the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider bills on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HOPKINS in the chair.

CAROLINE D. MOWATT.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first business on the Calendar.

Mr. PICKLER. The House bill, Mr. Chairman, No. 1139, granting a pension to Caroline D. Mowatt, I ask to be reported again, as it was before the committee at the time we rose at the last session.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Caroline D. Mowatt, as widow of Alfred B. Soule, late major of the Twenty-third Regiment Maine Volunteers.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill that was under discussion when the committee rose on last Friday night, as I remember. I have stated that this is House bill No. 1139, granting a pension to Caroline D. Mowatt.

From the report of the committee accompanying the bill, about which there appears to be no controversy, as I understand it, the facts are disclosed that this lady was the wife of a soldier, a major in the army during the war of the rebellion, who was discharged as such by reason of disabilities incurred in the service or in the line of duty, and that soon after his discharge he died as a result of wounds incurred in service. It further appears from the state of facts accompanying the bill that she was married to this major long prior to the war, in fact prior to 1850, that she bore him children; that soon after the war, probably four or five years, she remarried and remained the wife of her second husband for a period of years, when her second husband died, leaving her again a widow. She asks now to be restored to the pension rolls, and the question is presented to the House whether or not it will pension a "war widow" who forfeited her right to a pension by her remarriage.

It will be seen, therefore, that a proper and careful consideration of the facts accompanying this bill, that the principle involved in the bill itself necessarily requires the consideration of two or three material and important questions, which ought to be disposed of now. The first I have already stated. The other directly or indirectly involves another question: Whether or not it is the purpose of this Congress to materially increase the pension rolls; and in the third place, and immediately following that, whether or not it is the disposition of this Congress to materially increase the appropriations for the payment of pensions. I say that all these questions are directly, or if not directly at least indirectly, involved in the disposition of this case, and hence it requires our serious consideration at the very outset.

I may say also, as a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, that I believe it is the desire of the Invalid Pensions Committee that this question should be disposed of now if possible, as a matter of instruction or guide to that committee, for the reason that a large number of these bills are pending before the committee, and if this bill should be favorably considered I have no doubt that a very large number of bills of a similar character will be presented for your consideration.

Now, as to the first question, so far as this bill is concerned, I for one have no hesitancy in saying it ought to receive our favorable consideration. I repeat that the facts show that this widow now claiming a pension was the wife of a soldier during the war; that she bore him children, one or two of whom are yet living; that she is an aged woman, something over 70 years old, I believe; that she has no property or means of support whatever and is dependent upon the labor of a daughter, who is also the daughter of the soldier. I favor the passage of this bill for these three reasons: First, because she is a war widow—and the remarriage never removes that fact from my mind. She fought the war with her gallant soldier husband, Major Soule; she endured the anguish of suspense during the time that her husband was in the war; she remained at home and supported his children. She did her duty just as well as did her soldier husband, and the simple fact that she remarried can not remove that from my mind. She still remains a war widow and as such is entitled, in my judgment, to a pension, just as much as the gallant soldier who went out and exposed himself in battle for his country.

In the second place, she is an aged woman, unable to maintain herself, and in the third place, she has no property or means of support and no one upon whom she can depend for support, except this one daughter—the daughter of the soldier. Now, I say without hesitation, after having given this important question serious consideration, that all such widows should be again restored to the pension roll. Whether this committee should go further than that I am not prepared to say. Gentlemen ask, "Why do you not place all the widows, then, upon the pension roll, if you adopt this principle? In order to be consistent and in order to do justice you must place them all upon the pension roll." I do not concede that proposition, Mr. Chairman. I say, so far as this state of facts is concerned, so far as war widows are concerned, so far as aged and dependent widows are concerned, we ought to replace all of them upon the pension roll, and I am in favor of doing it. Whether I would go further, I do not know that I am at this time ready to express an opinion. In my judgment there are not many of this kind of widows in this country. It has been stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN] that there are probably 10,000 unmarried and divorced widows. I understood him to say that that includes all widows of soldiers not upon the pension rolls that have remarried or have been divorced from their husbands since the war.

He does not include the war widows in that estimate alone. I undertake to say if 10,000 is the total of all that class of widows, the number involved in the spirit and the letter of this bill would not be one-fifth of that number—perhaps 2,000. Of course I have no data by which this number may be determined, and I am simply guessing at it. But let the number be large or small, I repeat, after serious consideration, I am earnestly in favor of replacing them again upon the pension rolls for the reasons I have stated. I do not hesitate to say while I have the floor—and I do not often take up the time of the committee—that I am in favor of extending the pension roll in other respects, and I trust this Congress is also of the same mind. We have a bill pending before us to increase the pensions of armless and legless soldiers.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, is there any limit on debate at these Friday night sessions?

Several MEMBERS. One hour.

Mr. HARDY. The time is valuable, and we have a great deal of business before us.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will not interrupt the gentleman who has the floor without his permission.

Mr. LAYTON. I regret very much that the gentleman from Indiana should attempt to call me down.

Mr. HARDY. I am not attempting to call you down. I only say the time is valuable——

Mr. LAYTON. This is the first time that I have asked the indulgence of this committee, notwithstanding I have been present at every Friday night meeting not only in this Congress, but in the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses. I am trying to explain, in answer to a suggestion, that this side of the House is not opposed to reasonable pension legislation. I want to state to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARDY] that by reason of the fortunes or misfortunes of politics, my most worthy colleague [Mr. SORG] and myself happen to be placed in the position of representing, in a measure, 400,000 intelligent Democratic white voters of the State of Ohio [applause on the Democratic side]; and in what I now say I am, as I believe, representing on this question those 400,000 intelligent white Democratic voters of Ohio.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman allow me for one moment?

Mr. LAYTON. For one question, not a speech.

Mr. HARDY. I want to place myself right before the gentleman. I assure the gentleman that I did not know what State he was from, and I did not inject anything into his remarks for the purpose of curtailing his time, but only in the matter of the economy of time at these Friday night pension sessions. I am heartily in favor of the bill and of everything that he asks and proposes, and I have nothing against the gentleman personally or politically or any other way. I am in favor of what he has stated; but let us economize time. That is all I am after.

Mr. LAYTON. I accept the gentleman's apology. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HARDY. It is not an apology, but an explanation. I am with you.

Mr. LAYTON. This is not my bill, Mr. Chairman. I have no personal interest whatever in this bill. It was introduced by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY]. I do not know the beneficiary.

Mr. HARDY. I am for the bill; I tell you that.

Mr. LAYTON. I am speaking, and I think I made myself intelligible, because an important principle is, as has been stated upon this side, involved in this bill.

Let me state to the gentleman from Indiana, if we settle this bill and settle it right, we have advanced the cause of pensions a great deal.

Mr. HARDY. Go on, and God bless you. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAYTON. Thank you. I have said I am in favor, as one on this side of the House, of extending the pension roll; and I have mentioned one case in which I propose to advocate upon this floor the serious extension of that roll; but I do not want to take up the time of this committee by anticipating any further legislation, but to impress upon the committee the importance of giving this particular bill, small as it may appear, their serious and earnest consideration, so that we may know hereafter, in the Committee on Invalid Pensions especially, what we are to do with the numerous cases of this character that are submitted to us. The question I refer to, and a good many members are interested in the matter, is the simple question, and the only question, involved in this bill submitted by the gentleman from New Hampshire, whether or not the widow of a soldier during the war, who bore him children before he went to the war, stayed at home during the time he was at the front, took care of and supported his children, and who afterwards remarried and again became a widow, who is now aged, over 72 years of age, and dependent entirely upon pension, whether or not that kind of a widow shall be restored to the pension roll.

Mr. HARDY. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAYTON. That is the question, and I say yes. I say not only this widow, but all similar widows, should be placed on the pension roll, and I hope that I will not be met, and no gentleman will attempt to meet me, with the argument that has been advanced so frequently heretofore, "Why not place them all upon the pension roll?" I say to you gentlemen of the committee, let us dispose of these bills as they come before us, especially in a case of this kind, where the lady is aged and liable to die before a general pension bill shall be adopted.

Mr. HULICK. Will my colleague permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. HULICK. I wish to know whether your committee consider all applications for bills like this, and report favorably on the cases of all widows who are applying for a special act, or whether you make a distinction. I do this for my own information in regard to presenting similar bills for my constituents.

Mr. LAYTON. The question as to whether we are reporting all of them I can not answer; but so far as bills of this exact character, where the woman was a war widow and is dependent, has no means of support or property, this committee has invariably thus far reported the bills favorably, although we have met with some opposition on the side of the minority.

Mr. HULICK. Then you do discriminate against certain clases of widows?

Mr. LAYTON. I can not answer that question directly, I will say to my colleague. My recollection is now that that question has not as yet been presented by any special bill.

Mr. ERDMAN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. ERDMAN. Does he know of a single bill that the Committee on Invalid Pensions has rejected, of any character, when presented by a subcommittee?

Mr. LAYTON. I can not answer that question directly. I have no distinct recollection. But in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio, I state that so far as this particular character of bills is concerned they have all been reported favorably.

Mr. ANDREWS. Just a moment, in response to the question asked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I believe he desired to be informed whether or not the Committee on Invalid Pensions had rejected any bill recommended by any subcommittee. I do not recollect of such an instance; but I know of instances in which bills have not been reported which, in the judgment of the subcommittee, were not worthy of a favorable report.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I can corroborate the gentleman from Nebraska as to that statement, because I have had similar experience. After investigation of a number—a large number, I will say—of bills, after a careful investigation, and after consulting with my colleagues and with the clerks of the committee, who are experts upon the question, and examining the precedents, they have been laid aside without favorable action; quite a number of them. But I do not desire to anticipate all the questions that may arise. But what the Committee on Invalid Pensions want determined to-night is whether or not this particular class of bills are to be considered favorably by the Committee of the Whole and by the House. If not, we will simply lay them aside and be relieved of a good deal of unnecessary labor.

One word now as to a general bill. There are, as I remember, two or three general bills of a similar nature to this—that is, bills proposing to replace the remarried widows of soldiers upon the pension roll—and the action taken here in reference to this particular bill will serve as a guide to the Committee on Invalid Pensions for its action on those bills. For this reason, while I may, perhaps, as suggested by the gentleman from Indiana, have taken up a good deal of time, it will be found in the long run that if this general question is settled here fairly and intelligently we shall really gain time in pension legislation, and that is why I have ventured to occupy so much of the time and attention of the committee on this occasion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass?

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I think I shall send up and have read by the Clerk, in my time, the views which I expressed upon this question on a previous occasion, and then I should like to hear some gentleman who holds the opposite view take up and answer seriatim the argument which I have advanced.

The Clerk proceeded to read the matter sent up by Mr. ERDMAN.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, may we have a reference to the page of ancient history where this statement can be found?

The CLERK. It is on page 1741 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 14, 1896.

The Clerk read as follows:

The purpose of this bill is to restore her to the pension roll the same as if she were still the widow of the soldier whose name she voluntarily surrendered years ago.

To pass this bill is to nullify for the benefit of this one individual the substantial limitation of the general laws that the pension of soldiers' widows who have remarried shall cease.

The objections to be urged against such bills as this are numerous. In the first place, it makes an exception of a case which is in no wise exceptional. There may be varying degrees of destitution in different cases, but it may be fairly stated that all cases of widows who have remarried and again become husbandless, by reason of death or divorce, present the same substantial conditions.

If any widow so situated should be restored to pension, all widows so situated should be restored, and this by general enactment and not by individual private bills, whereby those who may happen to have a friend to espouse their cause secure a benefit which the modest and the unknown never think of seeking. Special pension acts are justifiable only in cases which are essentially exceptional and should not be used to grant to one that which is denied to the many whose situation is precisely the same. But aside from this consideration, however, the soldier's widow who remarries voluntarily relinquishes her pension because she prefers to do so.

The Government can not become an insurer against an unfortunate termination of this second matrimonial venture either by divorce or death. To restore pension in case of divorce is to encourage remarried widows to seek divorces, and, in any event, it is to give them an ostensible claim upon the soldier's death and memory which they have long since renounced by preference.

Furthermore, it is not to be assumed that legistation of this character is in the line of justice or of honor to the soldiers themselves, or that it is necessarily desired or favored by the soldier classes. A contribution from the public Treasury to the support of the widow of the soldier, so long as she remains his widow, every soldier, perhaps, desires, and the common consent of the nation for thirty years has sanctioned this; but that each soldier looks forward to and desires that his services and his memory shall be the basis of a pension to his wife at some remote day, beyond an intervening period of matrimonial alliance with some other husband, is by no means self-evident or fairly to be presumed.

During the reading of the foregoing the following occurred:

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the reading of that statement. This is the second time during this Congress that the gentleman has had that read, and the point I make is that after a paper has once been read, it can not be reread unless by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that this is a part of the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HEPBURN. Even if it is, does not the rule apply? This is an independent paper.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not, and will overrule the point of order.

Mr. ERDMAN (at the conclusion of the reading). Now, Mr. Chairman, I simply want to say that if you find yourselves without a quorum in endeavoring to force this bill through do not come over to this side and appeal to us to lay the bill aside and take up something else. If this is to be a tentative process, let the effort be made and let the session end. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken on the motion to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation, the Chairman declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. ERDMAN. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 85, noes 5.

Mr. ERDMAN. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN proceeded to count the House. Before the announcement of the count was made,

Mr. ERDMAN. I demand tellers upon the count.

The CHAIRMAN. There are 106 members present, a quorum, and the bill is laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The Clerk will read the next bill.

THEODORE WERNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2142) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Theodore Werner.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Theodore Werner, late a private in Company E, Forty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and to issue to him an honorable discharge: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or emoluments shall become due to said Werner by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Let us have the report.

An amendment by the committee was read, as follows:

Line 7, after the word "discharge," insert "to date December 30, 1864."

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Let us have the report read, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, the report is called for.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I have asked for the reading of the report three times.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the gentleman. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. BISHOP) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2142) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Theodore Werner, having had the same under consideration, would respectfully refer the same back to the House, and recommend that the bill be amended in line 7 by adding, after the word "discharge," the words "to date December 30, 1864," and that the bill when so amended do pass.

The facts in this case, briefly stated as found by your committee, are as follows:

This soldier enlisted August 12, 1861, and served faithfully until the last of December, 1864, a period of more than three years and four months. He participated in the battles of Shiloh, Corinth, Stone River, Perryville, Chickamauga, Mission Ridge, Buzzards Roost, Pickets Mill, Atlanta, Jonesboro, and Nashville. He had the record of a brave and fearless soldier. After the retreat of Hood after the battle of Nashville the soldier became separated from his command and went home.

Your committee are of the opinion that a soldier with so brilliant a record standing to his credit should at this late day have this act of clemency extended to him.

The report of the Adjutant-General is as follows:

Case of Theodore Werner, late of Company E, Forty-ninth Ohio nfantry Volunteers.

RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
January 23, 1896.

The records show that Theodore Warner (also borne as Theodore Werner) was enrolled August 12, 1861, and mustered into service August 22, 1861, as a private in Company E, Forty-ninth Ohio Infantry, to serve three years. The company muster rolls report him as follows: August 31, 1862, presence or absence not stated; October 31, 1862, present; December 31, 1862, "Missed in the battle of Stone River, December 31, 1862"; February 28, 1863, "Paroled prisoner, captured December 31, 1862, at the battle of Stone River"; April 11, 1863 (special muster), "Captured December 31, 1862, paroled, and in Columbus, Ohio"; to October 31, 1863, same report; December 31, 1863, "Left in convalescent camp, Chattanooga, Tenn., since December 1, 1863."

He reenlisted as a veteran volunteer January 1, 1864, and he is thereafter reported as follows: February 29, 1864: "In Ohio on thirty days' furlough since February 12, 1864;" to August 31, 1864, present; December 31, 1864 (four months' muster), "Absent without leave since December 25, 1864;" February 28, 1865, "Deserted near Columbus, Tenn." The muster-out roll of the company, dated November 30, 1865, reports him: "Deserted in the face of the enemy January 1, 1865, at Columbus, Tenn." He did not return to his command after his desertion.

The Prisoners of War Records report him as follows: "Captured at Murfreesboro, Tenn., December 31, 1862; confined at Richmond, Va., January 16, 1863; paroled at City point, Va., January 26, 1863; reported at Camp Parole, Maryland, January 27, 1863; sent to Camp Chase, Ohio, March 10 or 12, 1863, where he reported March 13 to 22, 1863, as an exchanged prisoner; transferred to Columbus, to be forwarded to his regiment, June 23, 1863, and sent to Cincinnati, Ohio, the same day."

In an application for removal of the charge of desertion the soldier submitted testimony as follows:

1. Affidavit of his brother, Henry Werner, who declared, March 17, 1888, that appllicant had been sick of typhus fever at his (affiant's) house from February to May, 1865.

2. His own affidavit, in which he declared, February 23, 1892, that about December 12, 1864, he left his regiment with two comrades on a foraging expedition; that after going some 5 miles, his comrades proposed that they go home; that he, being young, was easily persuaded to accede to the proposition, thinking that all three would soon return; that he went to Missouri, and having heard of the President's proclamation recalling soldiers to their commands, he was about to return when he was taken sick with typhoid fever; that when he was again able to travel the time within which deserters could report under the proclamation had expired, and he supposed that it was too late to try to rejoin his regiment, and that the attempt might get him into further trouble.

3. Another affidavit of his, under date of May 17, 1894, to the same effect as his preceding testimony.

This application for relief has been repeatedly denied, the testimony submitted not being deemed sufficient to warrant favorable action under the law.

Since the date of last denial, May 26, 1894, the status of the case has undergone no change.

Respectfully submitted.

F. C. AINSWORTH,
Colonel, United States Army, Chief Record and Pension Office.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a letter accompanying the report. Does the gentleman desire to have that read also?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I would like to have the gentleman reporting the bill explain how this soldier got separated from his command. A satisfactory explanation of that is the only excuse in such a case except a record of previous good service. If this man got separated from his command intentionally, if he intended to desert, he ought to stand upon the record he has made. There should be some explanation on that point.

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Chairman, I made the report on behalf of the committee. The introducer of the bill and the beneficiary of it are both entire strangers to me. I took great pains, however, to look up the record of this soldier as presented in the War Department records, and also to examine the various affidavits presented to sustain the bill. It appears that on the retreat of Hood this man was ill and remained a short time in Nashville. He then tried to rejoin his command, but did not succeed in finding them, as they were moving very rapidly toward the south. It was proposed by one or two of his comrades that they should go home and wait until the regiment should be stationed at some place where they could rejoin it. Very soon after getting home he was taken sick with typhoid fever and remained so until after the time when the regiment was at a point where he could rejoin it.

But the special thing that the committee considered more than all others was the fact that this soldier enlisted in 1861 and participated in some of the hardest fought battles of the war. He did valiant service. He stayed with his command until the war was almost over. The committee thought that this man, who had stood in the forefront at Chickamauga, at Stones River, at Nashville, and eleven or twelve others of the hardest fought battles of the war, ought to be forgiven for a single act of neglect of duty.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to, and the bill as amended laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JOSEPH PORTER.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3993) granting a pension to Joseph Porter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Joseph Porter, late a private in Company K, Eighth New York Heavy Artillery, at the rate provided for total blindness, in lieu of the pension he now receives.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out, in line 6, the words "provided for total blindness" and insert the words "of $30 per month."

Mr. McCLELLAN. I ask that the report be read for the information of the committee.

The report (by Mr. BAKER of Kansas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3993) granting a pension to Joseph Porter, having carefully considered the same, adopt the accompanying Senate report (No. 820) as their own and respectfully recommend that the bill do pass with the following amendment:

In line 6 strike out the words "provided for total blindness" and insert in lieu thereof the words "of $30 per month."

[Senate Report No. 820, Fifty-third Congress, third session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2141) granting a pension to Joseph Porter, have examined the same and report:

The petitioner, Joseph Porter, late a private in Company K, Sixth New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, enlisted September 23, 1864, and was discharged June 28, 1865, having served about nine months. He filed an application on September 1, 1890, alleging rheumatism and injury of left hand, claiming that he was totally unable to earn a support, and was crippled in his left hand as a result of his service, said disabilities having been contracted in the line of duty and not due to vicious habits. He claims that he incurred said injury at Cedar Creek, Virginia, on the 19th day of October, 1864; claiming that while his regiment lay there the enemy suddenly and unexpectedly came on them and they all rushed for their guns. In the rush and excitement he received said injury in his left hand, it being very dark, the night being lighted only by the camp fires. He is not able to state just how it was done. The wound was not noticed until after the excitement was over. He has always believed that his hand was pierced by a bayonet. This is the only knowledge that he has and statement that he is able to make. He further claims that his rheumatism was brought on by exposure and hardships, damp, cold weather, laying out all night in the rain, and other exposures incidental to army life.

Dr. Perdue, of Haverstraw, N. Y., whom he alleges treated him in 1865 at the time of the first appearance of his disability, in the month of October or thereabouts, after the battle of Cedar Creek, is dead, and hence he is unable to get the evidence of this physician. He was afterwards treated by Dr. Nye, of Avoca, Iowa, in 1877, which physician is also dead. He was also treated by Dr. Carman, of the same place, in 1880. From the year 1865 up to within the last six years the petitioner claims he was unable for the performance of manual labor to the extent of about one-half, and within the past six years he has been totally disabled for the performance of any manual labor. Applicant has been totally blind for over four years, and he alleges that his eyesight began to fail from the time of his discharge.

One of his neighbors, John C. W. Cool, testifies that he is personally acquainted with the petitioner and has known him for a number of years past and met him almost daily after his blindness occurred, and that he knows him to be suffering from what he alleges to be rheumatism, complaining of the same every week. Christopher Armstrong also testifies by affidavit that he has been personally acquainted with the petitioner for eighteen years, and is familiar with his physical condition; that he is totally blind, and is without any means whatever except the pension he is now receiving of $12 per month. He has no property of any kind; that he requires the aid and attendance of some one continually, and that his wife is advanced in age and is unable to give him the attendance he requires.

H. B. Day testifies that he is a regular practicing physician and has been engaged in the practice for fifteen years, and has been claimant's family physician; that he is totally blind in both eyes and has been so for three or four years, and that the said blindness is the result of glaucoma and cataract of both eyes; that both eyes have been operated upon and no relief has thus far been obtained, and that in his opinion there is absolutely no hope of his obtaining any relief in the future; that he is dependent on his neighbors for aid and attention, having no property of any kind, according to his knowledge and belief.

The report of the board of pension examiners is as follows:

"The petitioner suffers with rheumatism in the shoulders and legs, not being able to do any work, has so much pain after being on his feet, and can not lift arms above head; that the action of the heart is very weak, hard to hear at all, and can not feel its impulse; there is a pronounced obstructed murmur. He gets around with difficulty."

In view of the fact that after a careful examination of all the papers and evidence submitted your committee are of the opinion that the disabilities which at present affect him probably had their origin in the exposure due to his service in the Army, while under the law governing the Pension Department he is denied a further increase of pension, having applied for the same and the case having been rejected, still your committee believe that the equities of the case warrant an increase to the extent of $30 per month.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment.

Amend by striking out the words, in lines 6 and 7, "provided for total blindness" and insert in lieu thereof "$30 per month," so as to read "at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving."

Mr. McCLELLAN. Will the gentleman in charge of this bill tell us whether there is any evidence that this man's blindness is of service origin except his own statement and belief?

Mr. TAWNEY. If it were of service origin would he not be entitled to a pension of $72 a month?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Certainly. But as the circumstance of his blindness is introduced here as a part of the case, there ought to be at least some presumption connecting it with the service.

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. The only evidence is his own statement, but in view of the presumption that this trouble had its origin in the service, and in view of the other disabilities of the applicant, the committee felt itself justified according to its usages in recommending a pension of $30 a month.

Mr. McCLELLAN. He is otherwise disabled?

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. He is entirely disabled and is obliged to have an attendant a large part of the time. According to the custom adopted in our committee, if he required constantly an attendant and his disability could be distinctly traced to his military service to the satisfaction of the committee he would receive a pension of $72 a month. There is some evidence going to show that his present condition is traceable to his military service, but it is not so specific as we have in many other cases.

Mr. McCLELLAN. What is the evidence showing that his present disabled condition is traceable to his military service?

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. The only evidence, as I have said, is his own statement and a presumption arising from the circumstances of the case.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Then, his own statement is the only evidence tending to show that his disability is of service origin?

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. That is the only statement that came to my knowledge in the case.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to submit a few words; and I call attention to what we are asked to do here to-night in this very case. This unfortunate individual—or fortunate, perhaps, in view of some of the friends that he has on this floor who have carried his case thus far—never made an application for a pension until after the passage of the act of 1890. There can not be, I think, in the minds of any person any possible assumption that this man's present disability is the result of his service. The disease alleged was rheumatism; and now he has become blind. He does not himself even allege that his blindness is the result of his service. You are confronted, gentlemen, with this proposition: If you propose to pension at high rates every ex-soldier who is at the present time disabled, why not come forward like men and do justice and equity to all? Why pick out single individuals to receive special legislation in their favor? Why not do equity and justice in every case, and by general statute provide that every soldier who is at the present time disabled shall receive a pension of $50 a month?

I have the reputation among some of my friends here of being perhaps a little factious on these questions; but I do propose, so far as lies in my power, to test the sense of the House in House assembled—by roll call if I have the power—upon cases of this character; and if the House on such a roll call will determine it to be its policy to grant pensions in these cases, I shall say amen, but not until that hour arrives.

The question being taken on the amendment proposed by the committee, there were on a division (called for by Mr. ERDMAN)—ayes 93, noes 3.

Mr. ERDMAN. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN (having counted the House) announced 107 members present.

So (a quorum of the Committee of the Whole being present) the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is, Shall the bill as amended be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House?

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman, I believe this matter is now open for debate. I did not care to say anything while the amendment was pending; I wanted my remarks to be in order upon the merits of the bill. I wish simply to call the attention of the House to one fact in this case; if I am wrong I want to be corrected, because I have had difficulty in getting the consent of my own mind to stand up here and speak against the application of this old soldier. I sincerely say that in raising objection to this bill I am battling against my sympathies. This man is blind; he is old; he is helpless. I would like to help him. If we were sitting here as a board of charities I would vote him money, and vote it liberally. If we had a charitable fund upon which to draw I should be glad to vote him relief. But, gentlemen of the committee, we are here representing all classes of the American people, including all kinds of honest pension claimants and taxpayers, who have no claims to present.

There are thousands and thousands of worthy soldiers in this country who can not get a pension such as you propose to give this man, although they may go into the Pension Office and show just the condition that this man shows, and simply because they can not establish the fact that the disability was of service origin.

But, sir, that is not all that marks this case. Another precedent which you are establishing by forcing through a case of this kind is that a man may get the benefit of special pension legislation by simply coming before the Committee on Invalid Pensions and making a statement, unsupported by any testimony in the world, simply upon his own individual allegation, upon his own unsupported testimony and statements, unsustained by a medieal expert, or by the testimony of a neighbor or friend, that his disease, in his opinion only—mark you, in his own opinion, gentlemen—is of service origin. His claim is not even that the disability is actually of service origin, but he simply alleges as his own opinion that such is the origin of it, unsupported absolutely by any other evidence or the testimony of any other human being, and yet in the face of all this you propose to vote this large pension to him.

Now, that is exactly the pending case. That is what you are doing if you pass this bill. I simply want to call your attention to the fact. I do not care to argue or debate the question. I want you to understand that there are gentlemen on the Invalid Pension Committee who, although they may represent Southern constituencies, constituencies in which there are now living people who served in the Federal Army, yet who propose to do full justice to them, and who can not get the consent of their own minds and consciences to present the cases of their constituents for pension claims of this character, with no more merit than is presented by the pending case. I content myself, therefore, Mr. Chairman, with uttering my sincere protest against the partiality as well as the illegality and inconsistency of the pending bill.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, there is no dispute as to the facts in this case. The gentleman from Maryland says that the claimant's statement is uncorroborated by further testimony. There is no dispute of one fact, that he bears a wound which he claims to be a bayonet wound in his arm or hand, and there is no dispute of the fact that he slept out in the cold and in the swamps, and served in the Army honorably——

Mr. MILES. You do not claim that his blindness originated from the wound in his hand? Besides that, he is being pensioned already for that wound at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. PICKLER (continuing). He is now blind——

Mr. MILES. You do not claim that that blindness is of service origin?

Mr. PICKLER. No; of course not. Because if it were he would get $72 a month at the Pension Office. We are to consider these cases on the testimony presented to us. We must take into consideration the probabilities accompanying each case.

Now, my colleague, I think, is not exactly fair in his statement of the facts. There is no dispute, as I have said, as to the disability of the man. There is no dispute as to the total incapacity of this man to perform manual labor, and no dispute that he needs constant attendance. These facts are all unquestioned.

Now, $30 a month would be the pension to a man who is incapacitated from the performance of manual labor. If he could bring proof that he was totally blind, and that the blindness was the result of his service, then he would get $72 a month. I appeal to the committee, therefore, if as fair men, if as humane men, we can do less under the circumstances, where this man is totally unable to perform manual labor, where there is every reason to believe that the disability is of service origin, than to give him $30 a month under the circumstances as we find them?

Mr. MILES. It is humanity, I concede. It is very humane. The question is, is it right?

Mr. PICKLER (continuing). And to ease the conscience of my colleague let me say that this report is the very same report which was made in the last Congress by a Democratic House on this very particular bill.

Mr. MILES. The last Congress was not the keeper of my conscience, thank God! [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard for a moment. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

I intend to vote for this bill, and gentlemen can vote in a few moments; but there are some considerations that we ought to regard in considering this bill. There is very much force in the remarks of the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD]. I take the floor, therefore, not for the purpose of speaking against the bill; not at all, but in favor of some of my own soldier constituents. I have one in my own mind at this moment, in my town, lying upon his bed, who can not turn himself over because of rheumatism. He has alleged and proved to the satisfaction of the Pension Commissioner that he was entitled to $18 a month for the disability, which originated in the service, and continued to receive that until a few years ago, when, under the present administration of the Pension Office, he was cut down to $12 a month under the act of 1890. I was advised a few days ago that he is lying upon his back, unable to turn over in bed. My advice to him is that he can not, under the present law, get over $12 per month.

I have no doubt that the feeling in the Invalid Pensions Committee would be to grant that soldier an increase of pension equal to his disability, but you will find over 6,000 private bills already pending before Congress. On the day before yesterday I went to the Invalid Pensions Committee with bills from soldier constituents in my district, and was advised by my colleague from Ohio, who had charge of the bills that I presented to the committee, that the number of bills was so great that they could not expect to get through with them at this session, and for me to select two or three or four of the most meritorious cases and have them passed by the committee and reported favorably to the House, and that in that event there would be a possibility of getting only that number through at this session.

Now, this is what I want. I want this committee to report a bill in favor of all soldiers who are thus disabled, such as the one I refer to, and hundreds and thousands of others. I want them to report a bill which, instead of giving only $12 a month under the law of 1890, will give these soldiers (all of them) such pensions as will compensate them for the disabilities under which they are now suffering, and not discriminate against other disabled soldiers by passing special acts for a small number of them.

Mr. PICKLER. That is just what we are going to do.

Mr. HULICK. That is right. Let the committee do that, and equal and exact justice will be done. When I present bills in favor of my constituents, in favor of the soldiers (who are thus disabled), I am told, "You can not get these bills through." Now, let us have a bill for the protection of other soldiers who are disabled equally with this one. Let us have a general bill, so that we can give to these men pensions sufficient for the disabilities under which they suffer. [Applause.]

Mr. ERDMAN. Before the gentleman takes his seat will he permit a question?

Mr. HULICK. Certainly.

Mr. ERDMAN. Is the gentleman in favor of so amending the general law that a person may obtain a pension upon his own sworn statement, uncorroborated by any other testimony?

Mr. HULICK. Any soldier who went out in defense of his country, swearing that he would defend it with his life, and can not obtain other evidence, then I will take his oath. [Applause.] The pensioner in this case testifies that the doctors who attended him immediately upon his return from the service are dead and he can not get the kind of evidence required by the Pension Office, and I think we should receive his own statement.

Mr. ERDMAN. I asked the gentleman a question which I wish he would please answer.

Mr. HULICK. Yes; I will do so.

Mr. ERDMAN. You are in favor of changing the general pension law so that a person upon his own sworn statement, without corroboration, shall be allowed a pension?

Mr. MILES. Provided he was a soldier, the gentleman from Ohio says.

Mr. HULICK. I am in favor of changing the law so that a soldier can get a pension for disability, on the very best testimony that he can present, and if he can not get any better testimony, I am willing to take his own sworn statement. I am not willing to see him deprived of his pension because, forsooth, he can not get other evidence except his own. A man who will fight for his country and become disabled by wound or disease ought to have the most liberal and favorable consideration when we come to grant him a pension. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill as amended be laid aside with a favorable recommendation?

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGIANNA C. HALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4182) granting increase of pension to Georgianna C. Hall, dependent mother of Maj. John W. Williams, deceased, late surgeon, United States Army.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension allowed under the act of January 29, 1887, to Georgianna C. Hall, as the widow of William Hall, of Company B, Third Louisiana Volunteers, in the Mexican war, to a sum equivalent to the amount which she would be entitled to as dependent mother of her son, the late Maj. John W. Williams, deceased, surgeon of the United States Army, on whom she was dependent for subsistence.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, is this bill reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions?

A MEMBER. From the Committee on Pensions.

The Committee on Pensions recommended an amendment, as follows:

Strike out the words "a sum equivalent to the amount which she would be entitled to as dependent mother of her son, the late Maj. John W. Williams, deceased, surgeon of the United States Army, on whom she was dependent for subsistence," and insert in lieu thereof the words "$12 per month."

Mr. LOUD. I should like to have the report read.

Mr. PICKLER. This is the widow of a Mexican soldier, and $12 a month is all that is asked. Let it go through.

Mr. LOUD. I perhaps can judge just as well about this case after the report is read.

The report (by Mr. COFFIN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4182) increasing the pension of Georgianna C. Hall, have considered the same, and respectfully report as follows:

The claimant is the widow of William Hall, who was a corporal in Company B, Third Louisiana Volunteer Infantry, and served from May 4, 1846, to August 14, 1846. She is now in receipt of a pension at $8 per month, under the Mexican war service pension act of January 29, 1887. At the time of the granting of said pension by the Pension Office Mrs. Hall proved that she was dependent for support upon her son (by a former marriage), John W. Williams, major and surgeon, United States Army. This son has since died, leaving a widow who receives the pension due on account of his service and death.

Mrs. Hall is now about 75 years old and so much affected by rheumatism as to be unable to do any work for a livelihood. She has no property of any kind and no income aside from the small pension, which is insufficient to supply the necessaries of life, and she has to depend upon a widowed daughter for assistance. This daughter is poor and has to depend upon her labor for support.

The facts are established by the testimony of Thomas A. Mitchell, George H. Baldwin, W. O. Dennison, and other reputable citizens of Washington, D. C.

Mrs. Hall, besides being the widow of a Mexican war soldier, lost a son in the service of his country. She is now old and needy, and an increase of her pension is absolutely necessary to her comfortable support.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment striking out all after the word "to," in line 8, and substituting therefor the words "$12 per month."

Mr. LOUD. I should like to ask what the incentive is to increase the pension of this widow? She is entitled to $8 a month, I understand, under the law. Why should an exception be made in this case? Nobody seems to know, Mr. Chairman, but I will read in the report a very strong appeal made to this House to grant this extraordinary pension:

She is now old and needy and an increase of her pension is absolutely necessary to her comfortable support.

Now, I desire to congratulate the Committee on Pensions on their extreme liberality here in assuming that $12 a month is going to comfortably support this old lady. Of course I understand that I am simply getting in the way of the wheels of progress here, as you term it, but I do desire to call the attention of my Republican friends to the condition which you are presenting to us night after night. While many of you, during the term that Mr. Cleveland was President before, condemned him and raised up a condemnation throughout the country because of his vetoing of pensions, let me say to you as a party, if he uses discretion in the vetoing of the pension bills passed by this Congress he will receive the applause of nine-tenths of the people of this whole country. [Cries of "No!" "No!" on the Republican side.]

Well, Mr. Chairman, I discovered long ago that if there is any one thing the American people love better than another it is absolute justice, equity, and fairness to everybody. You are here picking out a few individual cases and increasing their pensions, and I say if President Cleveland uses due discretion in the vetoing of pension cases that have passed this Congress and are to pass hereafter, that he will receive the applause of the people of this country because he has acted in the line of justice and equity, and I believe I am as good a judge of that as anybody here.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I would like to ask the gentleman from California if he has ever advocated the passage of a special pension bill?

Mr. LOUD. If I have ever?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOUD. I can not remember that I have. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. That is all.

Mr. LOUD. I do not think that that question has much pertinency to this case. Everybody who has a case on the Calendar is the strongest advocate of any pension bill that comes up, because he has a case behind it on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. LOUD. Gentlemen will permit me to conclude before they get a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman had concluded his remarks, and rose simply to answer the question of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. LOUD. I have not been down yet; and I will say to the House, if gentlemen will let me alone I will get through a great deal quicker. I only rose for the purpose of calling the attention of this House to the strength of the report before the House, and that is all there is in it—

That she is now old and needy and an increase of her pension is absolutely necessary to her comfortable support.

That is the only argument that you give us, and that is the only argument, of course, that you have. Why, I do not suppose there is a member of this House who is not appealed to every time he goes into the corridor by a widow of some officer of the Regular Army who pleads her case that the pension of $25 or $30 a month now allowed her by law is not sufficient to maintain her in the station of life in which she has been accustomed to live. That is the one argument that appeals to you, gentlemen, in many cases that you will bring up hereafter. It is the only argument that should appeal to you in this case.

Now, let me express to you an honest sentiment of mine—you need not accept it as yours, but it is mine—that the policy pursued in this country for the last few years, and being pursued here to an extreme, has done more to debauch the American people than all the acts of Congress that have transpired in a hundred years before it. Let me say to you that we are appealed to upon every side for pensions, for every person who is now in the Government service; not alone soldiers, but every person now in the Government service. It is a logical result of the condition you have brought about. You have encouraged the people of this country to believe that the Government must support them.

Mr. MILES. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him there?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. MILES. I just simply wanted to congratulate the gentleman that he is making that statement here, and is not making it in Edinburgh, or Boston, England. He is, therefore, in no danger of censure.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, well, of course gentlemen understand that while a member is subject to criticism, he is not amenable for any statement he may make in debate anywhere except in the House.

Mr. MILES. And the gentleman from Massachusetts is not present, either.

Mr. LOUD. A member of the House is not responsible to anybody but his constituents. I am speaking to you gentlemen my honest thoughts. You have all seen it; it is not on this alone, not on the bill for the pensioning of widows and soldiers, but on every hand you are building up and increasing a sentiment in this country that this is a paternal Government. If any person has by reason of position done any service, even if he may have been well paid for it, not alone are you bound to support him during his own natural life, but to pension his widow and his children. Now, consider this condition, gentlemen, and is it advisable to encourage it further?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARY ANN TRACY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 152) granting a pension to Mary Ann Tracy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Ann Tracy, as daughter of David Tracy, late lieutenant in the Thirty-seventh Regiment United States Volunteers in the war of 1812.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Let us have the report read, Mr. Chairman.

The report (by Mr. HALTERMAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 152) granting a pension to Mary Ann Tracy, have considered the same, and report:

The facts in this case are fully shown in a petition numerously signed by prominent citizens of Norwich, Conn., which petition is annexed.

The facts are also shown by the affidavits of the claimant and of Hannah A. Beckwith, Fannie I. Miner, and Thomas I. Ridgway, citizens of Norwich, Conn.

There are several precedents for the legislation prayed for, and in view of age, disabilities, and necessities of the claimant, your committee return the bill with the recommendation that it do pass, amended, however, by adding, after the word "twelve," in line 8, the words "and allow her a pension rated at $12 per month."

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Now, Mr. Chairman, I submit that that report is no such report as this House is entitled to receive from this committee. It refers to documents in their possession for the reasons why they report the bill without stating them; to petitions which are on file without stating the purpose or purport of the petitions.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. If the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. Accompanying the report, which the Clerk did not read, there is a full copy of the petition and some other statements in reference to this case. The committee adopted as theirs a report which was made by the Committee on Pensions in a former Congress. If the gentleman wishes, the Clerk may read the balance of the report, or I will briefly state the case as it is stated in the balance of the report which has not been read.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Let us have it.

Mr. MILES. It seems to me that this House and this Committee of the Whole might just as well receive the statement of one of the members of the Invalid Pensions Committee, unsupported by any other evidence, as to receive the unsupported statement of an applicant for a pension. We do not seem to require any evidence of any kind in order to justify the passage of a special bill. Most of the members of the Invalid Pensions Committee are comrades, old soldiers——

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. This is a report from the Committee on Pensions. It proposes to grant a pension to the daughter of a soldier of the war of 1812, a man who gave something more than two years of service. The beneficiary under this bill, who never married, is the only remaining child of the soldier. She is now 80 years old and dependent. The evidence shows that the soldier, upon his death, left a family consisting of a widow and this daughter without any means of support. The daughter by her own labor supported the mother until the mother's decease, and since then the daughter has gained support by such manual labor as she was able to perform and by the public charity of the citizens of Norwich. All of this is set forth in the part of the report which has not been read.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Was the widow of the soldier pensioned?

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. The widow of the soldier was not pensioned. This is the first application they have made for a pension.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. It was her own fault that she was not pensioned if the service of the soldier was for the period stated by the gentleman. However, Mr. Chairman, my particular object in rising was not so much to oppose this bill as to criticise the report. I had to rise and ask for a statement from a member of the committee in order to get any kind of basis of information upon which to vote in this case, and now the question comes up, how far are we to continue this pension list? Here we go to a daughter of the soldier. How long will it be before we go to a granddaughter? The gentleman should remember that, although there are only a trifle over 100 of the pensioners of the war of 1812 now surviving, there are nearly 4,000 widows pensioned on account of that war. Are we to begin now to pension the daughters, and then go the granddaughters?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes; if necessary.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. It seems to be a question how far this pension business is to run. I hear gentlemen say, "Yes; if necessary." I hear a great many cries around me upon which gentlemen in their earnest, sober senses would not go before the people, for the time must soon come when we shall halt somewhere and somehow in this pension business.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. I will say to the gentleman that this is not the first by any means of the pensioning of the daughter of a soldier of the war of 1812, as is stated in the report. I will also remind him that the beneficiary of this bill never married, and is now a feeble, dependent old woman of 80 years of age, so that in this case there is not very much prospect of a granddaughter coming before Congress for a pension. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The gentleman may be familiar with that question. I do not know how that may be, but I presume there are granddaughters of soldiers of the war of 1812, and very many of them.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I would like to ask my colleague [Mr. BAKER] if he would be willing to go before the people of New Hampshire on the basis of what he has been saying this evening?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I would; not only on this subject, but in relation to pensioning the remarried widows of soldiers. The people of New Hampshire wish every old soldier, and every old soldier's widow who was married to the soldier within any reasonable time, to be pensioned and cared for; but they do not propose to carry it to every line of consanguinity that can be discovered and to follow these soldiers' widows through their various and devious marriages and finally put them back on the pension roll.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I want to say to the gentleman that no man who has lived in New Hampshire for the last twenty-five years occupies any such position as he does. During all that time he has been a resident of the District of Columbia, which accounts for his position. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, upon that point I wish to say that my colleague has stated that which he does not believe and that which he never can and never will prove.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from New Hampshire to some facts which seem to indicate that he has recently undergone a change of opinion. I undertake to say that he ought not to condemn the House for doing that which he is himself constantly urging it to do. I find in one single number of the Index, covering only a period of fifteen or twenty days, that the gentleman himself has introduced the following private bills:

A bill for the relief of Francis L. Abbot; a bill for the relief of Francis A. Beater; a bill for the relief of Isaac W. Busey; a bill for the relief of John Ericsson; a bill to pension Annie M. Greene; a bill to increase the pension of Henrietta A. Lewis; a bill for the relief of James R. D. and William Morrison; a bill to remove the charge of desertion against Mason W. Presbry; a bill for the relief of William H. Quinn, and a bill to pension Emily M. Shaw.

A MEMBER. Oh, pshaw! [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. I believe that is all, but that is doing pretty well for seventeen days. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I am much obliged to the gentleman from Iowa for calling attention publicly to my activity in matters before the House, and I wish to say that nearly every one of those bills was introduced by me on my own motion and not by request. The parties in all but two of the cases he has mentioned I know of my own knowledge are entitled to relief at the hands of this House. They are genuine, true people, entitled to the money which they ask, for services actually rendered, and the Government stands indebted to them to-night, and has stood indebted to them for years, and it is a disgrace to the Government as a debtor that it has not paid them long ago. [Laughter.]

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH DESHLER WHITING.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1050) to grant an increase of pension to Elizabeth Deshler Whiting, widow of Lieut. Henry Whiting.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Deshler Whiting, widow of Lieut. Henry Whiting, United States Marine Corps, and pay her a pension of $25 per month from and after the passage of this act; and this pension shall be in lieu of that which she is now receiving.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Chairman, the lady whose pension this bill proposes to increase is the widow of a lieutenant in the naval service. In the discharge of his duties to the Government he was sent South, where his health was so seriously undermined as to render it necessary that he return to a northern climate. Soon after his return to the North he contracted a cold, which developed into pneumonia, and in a few days he died, leaving a widow and two children. His widow, now receiving a pension of $17 a month, has applied for an increase of the pension. A bill to grant her an increase was before the House in December of 1894, and was then passed, granting her a pension of $30 a month; but it was near the close of the session when the bill went to the Senate and it received no attention there—was not reported by the committee.

An application was made at this session to the House committee to pass a bill giving her the same increase which was proposed in the bill of the last Congress; but the committee has seen fit to report a bill granting a pension of only $25 a month in lieu of the pension of $17 a month which she is now receiving under the general law.

The evidence before the committee showed that this widow is entirely dependent upon her own exertions, with the exception of a small amount realized from the life-insurance policy of her deceased husband; that she has become deaf and unable to support herself by manual labor, so that she is wholly dependent upon the assistance which may be afforded her by the Government in the form of a pension. The amount of increase proposed by the bill is only $8 a month. The case is entirely meritorious, and I trust there will be no opposition on the part of the committee to granting to this widow the additional amount provided in the bill. It was hoped that a larger sum would be given; but, as I have said, the Pension Committee has seen fit to limit the pension to $25 a month—an amount which certainly is barely sufficient to enable her, with two children dependent upon her, to secure even the necessaries of life.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Will the gentleman state whether $17 a month is not the rate of pension allowed by the general law to lieutenants and the widows of lieutenants who served in the war of the rebellion?

Mr. DANIELS. I can not answer the gentleman.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I think it is.

Mr. DANIELS. That is the amount allowed to this widow by the Pension Bureau.

Mr. CONNOLLY. That is the amount, I understand, fixed by the general law—$17 a month for a lieutenant or a lieutenant's widow. Now, what reason is there that this widow should receive more pension than the widow of any other lieutenant who served during the war of the rebellion?

Mr. DANIELS. I do not think that she is to receive more. She is entirely dependent upon her own exertions. In view of the disability that has come upon her, the loss of hearing, she is certainly in a sad condition to provide for herself and her family.

Mr. HULL. Are her children young?

Mr. DANIELS. They are under 16 years of age.

Mr. HULL. Then for each of them she receives $2 a month.

Mr. DANIELS. But that pension will be extinguished when they reach the age of 16.

Mr. HULL. Is it not true that under the general law this widow would receive but $17 a month, and that the law pensions no widow on account of her disability?

Mr. DANIELS. I think not.

Mr. HULL. A widow is pensioned on account of the service of her husband.

Mr. DANIELS. And also on account of her own disability.

Mr. HULL. I have in my district two widows of lieutenants who are receiving $17 a month; they think they can not live on that, and want more, but I have told them I believe they ought to stand with all others of the same class.

Mr. DANIELS. They are probably not disabled, as this widow is. During the last session of Congress there was apparently no objection to allowing this widow a pension of $30 a month.

Mr. TALBERT. Why has she never applied to the Pension Bureau for the increase of her pension?

Mr. DANIELS. I will say to the gentleman from South Carolina that she can not receive any more there. This bill proposes simply to give her $8 a month more than she now receives.

Mr. TALBERT. She would not be allowed the increase at the Pension Bureau?

Mr. DANIELS. No, sir. As I was about to state, when a bill covering this same case was up at the last session—the 1st or 2d day of March, 1895—there was substantially no objection raised to giving this widow a pension at the rate of $30 a month, but at the present session when the committee came to review the facts and circumstances they agreed to increase the pension to only $25 a month, and that is all she is at present asking at the hands of the House.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question. I know the gentleman to be absolutely fair, and desires to be absolutely just in all cases. I will give the gentleman full credit for that, and think we all do so. I would like to ask him if he does not think that this is establishing a dangerous precedent?

Mr. DANIELS. I should think not. I should say to the gentleman from California that it is not a dangerous precedent. It is a precedent that seems to me to be justified and more than justified by the circumstances in the case.

Mr. LOUD. Well, the circumstances of the case must be her own condition, and if that rule is to be applied to everybody, why should it not be equitably applied, and equally applied, to every other woman in the country?

Mr. DANIELS. To every woman throughout the country who is similarly situated I should say yes, it should be applied. But this is a peculiar case. It is a case of singular hardship on account, in the first place, of the loss of her husband by death, and then the loss of her own hearing subsequently.

Mr. LOUD. Did he die a natural death?

Mr. DANIELS. He died from the effects of his service. I have substantially stated the case, Mr. Chairman, as it was established by the proofs before the committee. They have reported in favor of the allowance of this amount, as the former committee did in favor of the allowance of $30 per month. It seems to me, in my judgment, to be an extremely meritorious case. I trust that there will be no serious difficulty or objection on the part of the committee in sustaining the claim of this pensioner.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to ask the gentleman another question, with his consent. The gentleman is a good lawyer and understands his duty as a member of this body. I would like to ask him if he believes that under his obligation as a Representative on this floor he has any legal right, any legitimate or just right, to be generous with the money of the people of the United States?

Mr. DANIELS. I do not consider this to be a matter of mere generosity. I consider it a case that appeals to the justice of the committee.

Mr. LOUD. Well, surely, if it appeals to the justice of the House, the relief ought to be furnished under the general law.

Mr. DANIELS. The law seems to be deficient in this respect, and the Pension Office can not allow her a pension under the law. They can not allow her even a fair measure of compensation for the purpose of meeting her necessities.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word on this question. I believe that all who have served with me on this floor will bear me out in the statement that I have always favored liberal pensions in all cases.

But, Mr. Chairman, I feel, in justice to my position, that I must draw the line in these cases between pensioning a soldier for disability and pensioning a widow for disability. We have a very large number of widows in this country who are poor and dependent; they need help, for they have no means of subsistence excepting their own labor and the pittance they receive from the Government, whatever it may be. Whenever a private soldier dies from the effects of his service, his widow can get a pension of $12 a month under the general law; whereas if the soldier dies from any cause and the death could not be traced directly to the service, these widows get but $8 a month, and that is all they can get under the law.

Here is a widow whose husband was an officer in the Army and who draws a pension of $17 a month, or a little more than twice as much as the widow of a man—a private soldier—unless his death can be traced directly to the service. I concede that $17 a month is not a luxurious living. But I concede that $8 a month is still less luxurious living; and if we are to pension the widows of certain grades of officers in the Army, we should pass a general law to enable every widow of every lieutenant who died from wounds or injuries received in the service, whose death was traceable to the service, to draw this pension of $25 a month.

But this committee can not go into the question of the disabilities of widows and pension them. If they do that they can run the pensions up to $72 a month. What I wish to say in this connection is, that whenever the Committee on Invalid Pensions reports in favor of pensioning the soldier himself I have always been found in favor of it and voting for it. I have always been liberal in my views of pensions. I would rather give ten men pensions that are not entitled to it than to deprive one honorable soldier of a pension who is entitled to it. But when it comes to pensioning the widows I want a rule that we can stand by in all places.

And I want to say to the committee here and now while I am on my feet that when we find ourselves in this Committee of the Whole with bills coming before us pensioning the widows of distinguished men who died, not in the service, granting pensions ranging from $75 to $100 or $150 a month, men who were not connected with the Army in any way in twenty-five years, I shall vote against them and I shall take occasion to speak against them every time. [Applause.]

And I want to say I do it in the interest of my comrades. I believe in doing justice to them, but I do not believe in going out all over the country and taking cases where men have died while happening to hold high office, or immediately after going out of office, and placing their widows above those of all of our comrades, and giving them pensions that will enable them to live in luxury while the widows of our comrades are living in poverty and distress. [Applause.] I do not want to be understood in the mind of any man as not being willing to do absolute justice to all these classes, but I do want to enter my protest, and back it by my vote, against entering upon any system that will pension widows on account of their disabilities, or on any account except because they are widows of soldiers, and then in each case give the widow the pension that the law provides.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Chairman, I may say in answer to what the gentleman has just said that there is no danger, certainly, of this widow living in luxury upon a pension of $25 a month. It is to be remembered that she has two children who are now receiving $2 each per month. That will cease when they are 16 years of age. She has to educate and clothe these children as well as herself. They are dependent upon her for a respectable training for their future lives, and unless the Government is willing to do something to aid and assist her promoting these objects, which she of her own ability is entirely unable to promote, then of course no person can say what will be the history, or what may be the lamentable consequences to these unfortunate children, as well as to this unfortunate widow, who has been thus left in early life by the premature death of this lieutenant in the service.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman, I have not cast my vote in Committee of the Whole at any time in opposition to any pension. Neither do I want to; but it has seemed to me that this is establishing a very dangerous precedent, and I do not believe this bill should be voted on to-night. I think by common consent it ought to be allowed to go over, and we ought to give it the consideration it deserves. I agree with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL]. Now, the fact in this case is that we are asked here in this special instance to pension the widow of a soldier at $25 a month when there is no different reason in her case from what might be given with equal force in thousands of other cases.

This special pension legislation should be addressed to special cases, where the proof is incomplete and can not be made complete, so that the committee, having considered all the facts, are willing in those instances to apply the equities because they are just and right; but those are special cases that can be reached in no other way, and the particular province of this special legislation ought to be confined to that kind of relief. There are hundreds of meritorious cases before this Pension Committee, and I venture the prediction that, if we continue this kind of policy, when this session adjourns there will be thousands of special cases that would come under special provisions which will not be touched, and there will be case after case of this character that never ought to pass this House under these conditions.

As has been said here, we are not sitting in this Committee of the Whole for the purpose of offering charitable relief to special cases of this character. After listening to the learned gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS], the substance of his claim is that this widow needs money. I should be glad to give it to her, so far as I am concerned. I am willing to go to the extent of voting for the enlargement of all the pensions of widows in this great country; but this is a bad, pernicious example. This case ought not to be passed upon until we have considered it to such an extent that we have made up our minds that we will follow that precedent.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that that bill may be passed for the present, so that we may have an opportunity to consider it until the next session, and that it be not forced upon us at this time. I do not want to vote against it. I do not say that I will, but I think the committee ought to have time to consider this fully before they undertake to establish this precedent.

Mr. GIBSON. Move to recommit it.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked——

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman, it has been suggested to me, and I will make the motion, that this bill be recommitted to the committee for further consideration and report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not entertain that motion in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HULL. We can make that recommendation.

Mr. BLUE. Would it not be in order to move that the committee report it back to the House with the recommendation that it be recommitted?

The CHAIRMAN. That motion would be in order.

Mr. BLUE. That is what I intended to move.

Mr. DANIELS. Certainly this is a very ungenerous and illiberal view to take of this bill, which was passed by the last Congress without any substantial objection at the rate of $30 a month. If a Democratic Congress can be actuated by sentiments of justice and fairness to that extent, I see no reason why this committee should withhold the application of the same principle.

The bill was ordered to be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

JOHN DALTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3221) granting a pension to John Dalton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the name of John Dalton, of Lamar, Mo., who was employed as a teamster in the Quartermaster-General's Department during the war of the rebellion, and who, while serving as such in the line of his duty, was wounded in the left thigh by a musket ball at and during the battle of Marks Mill, Ark., on the 23d day of April, 1864, and who filed his application for pension on account thereof on the 25th day of August, 1873, be inscribed upon the pension rolls of the United States, subject to the restrictions and limitations of the general pension laws, with the same title to pension as if he had been duly enlisted, mustered into, and discharged from the military service of the United States.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read the report, and after the report shall have been read I will offer an amendment in lieu of the committee amendment.

The report (by Mr. CROWTHER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3221) granting a pension to John Dalton, submit the following report:

John Dalton was employed as a teamster in the Quartermaster-General's Department at St. Louis, Mo., March 7, 1864, and was sent from St. Louis to the barracks at Little Rock, Ark. He was a teamster in the ammunition train of General Steel in his expedition through Arkansas, and was sent with other teamsters from Washington, Ark., to Pine Bluff, Ark., for supplies, and while on the way, at Marks Mill, Ark., on the 23d day of April, 1864, the command was attacked by Confederate troops, the engagement being known as the battle of Marks Mill, Colonel Drake commanding the Union forces. During the battle John Dalton, while in the discharge of his duties as teamster, was wounded in the left thigh by a musket ball.

He was taken prisoner and afterwards paroled and sent to the hospital at Pine Bluff, Ark. He was then transferred to the hospital at Little Rock, Ark., and subsequently discharged from duty. He made application for pension to the Department, and his claim was rejected because he was not an enlisted man. His parole is on file at the Pension Office, and the records of the Quartermaster-General's Office show his employment as a teamster from June 1 to October 31, 1863, and from March 1 to May 31, 1864. The report of the Surgeon-General shows his admission to the hospital at Little Rock and his treatment thereat for gunshot wound. The evidence also shows that the musket ball has never been removed from his thigh, and his leg is so badly disabled by reason thereof that he is unable to perform manual labor.

The committee therefore report the bill back with the following amendments, to wit:

Strike out all the words between the word "sixty-four," in the ninth line, and the words "be inscribed," in the eleventh line of said bill; and strike out all after the words "general pension laws," in the thirteenth line, and insert after said words in the thirteenth line the words "at $12 per month."

The committee recommend that the bill when so amended do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "that," in line 3 of the amended bill, insert the words "the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension rolls of the United States"; also, beginning in line 9, strike out all the words after "sixty-four" and insert "at the rate of $12 per month."

Mr. PICKLER. Vote.

Mr. McCLELLAN. May I ask the gentleman from Missouri a question?

Mr. CROWTHER. Certainly.

Mr. McCLELLAN. This is an exceedingly meritorious case, and when my friend reports a case it is exceedingly meritorious.

Mr. CROWTHER. Thank you.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Why should not this man, who was a contract employee, I grant, but who stood up and fought like a man in defense of the United States property, be granted a pension according to the injuries he received, which would give him a larger pension than $12 a month?

Mr. CROWTHER. Inasmuch as the applicant applied under the law of 1890 for a pension and his application was rejected at the Pension Bureau for the reason that he was not an enlisted man and that he was willing to abide by that, the subcommittee thought it only proper to go as far as the applicant desired to go, and so reported.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Does not the gentleman think that it would be justice to this man, who stood up and fought like a man, to be placed on the pension rolls at the rate his injuries would entitle him to?

Mr. CROWTHER. The subcommittee investigated it in the light of justice, recommended this amount in the light of justice, and ask this committee to pass the bill as reported, with the amendment that I have just offered, so as to conform with the general run of pension cases that we are passing.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman, I simply want again to call attention to the fact that this House in its pension legislation acts like a board of charities, except that it has no well-regulated rules and is never consistent. This man, according to the report which my friend makes, is disabled and has a musket ball which he received in the service still in his thigh, and that disables him, and yet this Committee of the Whole having voted $30 a month this very night to a man who could not trace his disease to service origin, and who can not prove his case by any living witness except himself, proposes to put this soldier, because, forsooth, he was only a humble teamster, upon the pension list at $12 a month. We will not be consistent. I made the effort here last Friday night, and I make it again, to have this House legislate in a consistent way. I care not so much about the character of this pension legislation in any other respect as I do about its inconsistency.

I did not seek, Mr. Chairman, an assignment to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I curse the day I received that assignment, all the more, Mr. Chairman, because I find myself utterly unable to preserve for myself the appearance of consistency before the country. Because when I stand up here and appeal to this House I find members, even the chairman of the committee, ready to cry "Vote!" "Vote!" when my effort is not to reach his ears, not to reach the ears of the other side of this House, who do not seem to want to be consistent, but my effort is to reach the people of this country, the taxpayers of this country, and that large class of people, of which I am one, born, or arriving at the age of manhood since the war, a body composing the majority of the American people, and a majority of the tax-paying people of this country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say here that I am not fighting this pension claim. I shall vote for it, and vote for it cheerfully. The only objection I make to it is that when I vote for it at $12 a month I am not putting myself in a proper attitude before this country, because, it appears, not having a yea-and-nay vote on the bill passed a while ago granting a pension at $30 a month, that perhaps, unless I am permitted to make this statement, it should go to the country that, as a member of the Invalid Pensions Committee of this House, I favored a pension claim of $30 a month that was not half so meritorious as this one.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, it is evident that the gentleman has been born since the war. [Laughter.] No man who was in the Army and knows anything about soldiers and teamsters would make such a statement as the gentleman from Maryland has when he compares a teamster, hired by the month, who could quit when he pleased, and quit the Army, with a man who enlisted and who had to go into battle. The teamster did not have to go into battle if he did not want to, and he incurred no danger.

Mr. MILES. But this man did go into battle.

Mr. PICKLER. I do not yield. I refuse to yield. When the gentleman compares a teamster to a soldier and gets up here and prates about putting a man who never was enlisted on the pension roll on an equality with the enlisted soldier it shows that he was born since the war. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is entirely consistent. A teamster is doing well if he gets on the pension roll at all, and no teamster and no man who is not an enlisted man, does get on the pension roll unless he was wounded in the Army. This man was shot. He got a little more of it than most of the teamsters got. He was shot, and was in the hospital, and the committee concluded that, as he was at the front and was wounded, even though he was a teamster and not an enlisted man, and therefore had been refused a pension by the Pension Office, he ought to be pensioned at the rate of $12 a month. It is a fair and liberal pension, and any non-enlisted man is doing extremely well to get such a pension; and therefore I beg that the gentleman from Maryland will not say that there is any inconsistency in pensioning at $30 a month a real soldier, an enlisted man who was wounded, and then get up and shed crocodile tears over the case of a teamster. [Applause.]

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman has unduly criticised my remarks. I am a very earnest man, and speak earnestly. I do not claim to be a military man, but I have the facts staring me in the face, from the report, that this man bears something in his person which even the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, an ex-soldier, does not bear, a bullet in his thigh, received in the service of his country. I want to say further that I am no military anarchist. I have never, either in the Committee on Invalid Pensions or on this floor, advocated the payment of the same pensions to plain and simple soldiers that I would pay to men of high rank in the service of their country.

Mr. PICKLER. That is where the gentleman is wrong.

Mr. MILES. I never advocated that; but the gentleman from South Dakota did advocate that until to-night, and I think his change is another illustration that the "galled jade winces," for when his inconsistencies are pointed out he goes back upon his former record, and then stands up here and tries to put me in a false position.

Mr. PICKLER. What former record have I gone back on?

Mr. MILES. You have always protested against paying proper pensions to generals or the widows of generals who had rendered distinguished services to their country, on the ground that it took away pensions from the common soldiers.

Mr. PICKLER. Yes; that is right. I have protested in the Invalid Pensions Committee and elsewhere against paying undue pensions to generals and their widows, and I expect to protest against it. [Applause.] But the gentleman from Maryland, I think, always votes for the highest pension for the general or the widow of a general. I am in favor of doing fairly by them; but I am not in favor of giving them three or four times as much pension proportionately as I would give to a private soldier. That is my position in the Invalid Pensions Committee and on this floor.

Mr. MILES. That is all right. I recognize rank in the military service just as I do in the civil service. We work on that principle in the civil service, and I recognize it in the military service. We are not discussing that question now.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I did not want to get into a colloquy with my friend the chairman of the Invalid Pensions Committee.

Mr. HICKS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MILES. Yes, sir.

Mr. HICKS. What is the gentleman's objection to the bill under consideration?

Mr. MILES. I have no objection to it. I think I stated a while ago that I rose for the purpose of advocating it.

Mr. HICKS. Then, Mr. Chairman, I call the gentleman to order. He is out of order if he is not talking to the question before the committee.

Mr. MILES. Very well; I will see whether I am out of order. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is entitled to the floor and is entitled to proceed without interruption.

Mr. MILES. So my friend from Pennsylvania is out of order himself, and will please take his seat until I get through. [Laughter.]

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman allow me another question?

Mr. MILES. No, sir; I will not, because you rose a while ago ostensibly for the purpose of asking me a question, but really with a view of calling me to order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MILES. Now, Mr. Chairman, I simply want to emphasize this point again. It does not make any difference to me whether it finds a lodging place in the minds of gentlemen over there or not. I am not talking to you, gentlemen; I am talking to the country. [Jeers and laughter.] That is it! Jeer and laugh! That is your privilege, and it seems to be your highest ideal of a legislator to jeer and laugh when a man has the floor on this side. Go on; I do not care anything about that.

A MEMBER. It depends on the style of man.

Mr. MILES. That is a very polite remark! I would like to know from what State it comes. I know the manner of man, but I should like to know what section of the country produces such a man.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I did not get up to object to this bill of my friend from Missouri [Mr. CROWTHER], my colleague on the committee. I did rise, as I said, for the purpose of reaching the ear of the country. Gentlemen may jeer at that remark just as much as they please, but I want again to call the attention of the people of this country to the fact that this Invalid Pensions Committee and this House, sitting as a Committee of the Whole, and this Congress have no well-regulated rule. My friend sitting behind me bears me out in the statement that in these pension cases we are governed by no rule of conduct whatever.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, this man lives in my district, and I introduced this bill. He was a teamster, and, as this report states, was wounded. Under the law of 1862 he would have been entitled to a pension if he could have proved up his case prior to the 1st day of January, 1874. He made application under the law in 1873; but owing to his inability to obtain certain testimony he was not able to complete his claim, and it was subsequently rejected for the reason that he was not an enlisted man. I went to the Pension Office; I sat down by the table of the Commissioner of Pensions, and, with the aid of his private secretary, went through this man's record. And then and there, in the presence of the Commissioner, his private secretary made the remark: "That man ought to have had his pension, and it ought to date back to 1873, when he made his application."

I drew this bill upon that theory. But I am not here to make any exaggerated claims for teamsters. I do not claim that this teamster was any better than any other teamster; neither am I willing to admit that he was any worse. I am not here to demand that he shall have a pension dating back to the time of his application. Great God! I am willing to get anything for him. The man will die and be buried without receiving anything, unless we act promptly. Therefore, without questioning any man's motives, I am willing to take what the committee is willing to let him have.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I was disposed very favorably toward this bill, but the remarks of the gentleman who has just taken his seat have raised a very serious doubt in my mind. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Why, my friend, what have I said?

Mr. ERDMAN. I will tell you what you have said. You have said that this man, under the general law, made an application and was for some reason which you have not stated rejected; and that does not appear in this report.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. You did not hear me, my friend. I said that the man was not able to complete his proof by the 1st of January, 1874.

Mr. MILES. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion in favor of this applicant? Was not the reason of the rejection the fact that he was not an enlisted man?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. The 1st of January, 1874, having gone by, his application was rejected because he was not an enlisted man.

Mr. MILES. I simply wanted to make a suggestion—although, in the estimation of certain ironical gentlemen on the other side, it seems to depend altogether upon what source the suggestion comes from as to whether it has any value—I wanted to make a suggestion in the interest of this humble soldier.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Certainly; under the general law of 1862 a teamster, wounded as this man was, was entitled to a pension, provided he prosecuted his claim to a conclusion by the 1st day of January, 1874.

Mr. ERDMAN. I understand that.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. He was not able to complete his proof within the time limited, because he could not find the witnesses. The limitation of time having gone by, his application was rejected simply because he was a nonenlisted man.

Mr. ERDMAN. And for twenty-three years he has been endeavoring to get the proof! Is that it?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. He was endeavoring to get the proof for a number of years.

A MEMBER. But he did prove up.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Yes. And I know personally that with his crippled leg he is obliged, when he undertakes to walk, to drag himself along.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered for the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I am not sure that I know what that is.

Mr. CROWTHER. It simply makes this bill conform to the other special bills which we are passing.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Very well; I take the word of my friend.

The substitute was agreed to; and the amendment of the committee as amended was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be favorably reported to the House.

LYDIA A. TAFT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 577) granting a pension to Lydia A. Taft.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lydia A. Taft as the widow of Lowell Taft, late a private in Company G, Eighteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers.

The amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

In line 5 of the bill strike out the words "pension laws" and insert "act of June 27, 1890."

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, in the absence of my colleague, Mr. POOLE, I will take the liberty of making a brief statement in reference to this bill. It is a pension for a divorced widow, but represents a very exceptional case.

She never remarried after she had obtained a divorce. Her husband was a drunken beast, and she got her divorce from him chiefly upon the ground of extreme cruelty. Afterwards she helped to support him—after obtaining a divorce—and he died subsequently in the Soldiers' Home, and was buried at her expense. I think that it is so exceptional a case that there ought not to be any objection to its passage, and in justice to the claimant I ask the reading of the report in my time.

The report (by Mr. POOLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 577) granting a pension to Lydia A. Taft, report as follows:

The evidence before the committee shows that Lydia A. Taft was married on September 29, 1858, to Lowell G. Taft, who served as a private in Company G, Eighteenth Connecticut Volunteers, from August 21, 1862, to June 27, 1865. The soldier was a prisoner in the hands of the enemy for six months of the time covered by his long term of service.

The said Lydia A. Taft lived with the soldier as his wife from September 29, 1858, until February 12, 1882, at which time she obtained a divorce from him on the ground of his habitual drunkenness and failure to afford her support. While she has not lived with said Taft since the granting of said divorce, she has from time to time contributed from her slender means toward his support. The soldier died at the Soldiers' Home at Noroton, Conn., in January, 1891. His remains were taken to his former home and buried at the sole expense of his former wife. The soldier never received a pension.

It appears from the evidence before your committee that Lydia A. Taft is in advanced years, in poor health, and that she is poor—her net income from a small piece of property owned by her being but $70.97 per annum.

In view of the facts clearly shown by the testimony, the long and honorable service of the soldier, the fact that the said Lydia A. Taft was his wife during that service, suffering privation and anxiety on account of the same, her continued care for him up to his death, and then providing and paying for his burial, together with her age, failing health, and present need, your committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out, in line 5, the words "pension laws," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "act of June 27, 1890," and that the bill as amended do pass.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside with favorable recommendation.

HORACE TOWNSEND.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 136) granting an increase of pension to Horace Townsend.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Horace Townsend, late of Company A, Tenth New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. SULLOWAY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 136) granting increase of pension to Horace Townsend, having carefully considered the same, and adopting the accompanying Senate report (No. 46) as their own, respectfully report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

[Senate Report No. 46, Fifty fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 136) granting an increase of pension to Horace Townsend, have examined the same and report:

Claimant under this bill was a member of Company A, Tenth New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, serving from August 5, 1862, to May 31, 1865, at which latter date he was discharged from hospital in consequence of a gunshot wound of the foot.

Soldier was first pensioned at $2 per month, which was successively increased as the wound became worse to $4, $8, $12, $16, and $17. About six years and a half ago soldier had abscesses (or carbuncles) on the head, which it is believed was the result of blood poisoning from the wound, and from which, it is alleged, his eyesight became affected. Certain it is that from some cause the eyes became seriously affected, total blindness resulting in a few months after the abscesses first appeared. Soldier has been totally blind for six years. Since the close of his Army service he lost the left forearm as a result of accident, so that now he is in an exceedingly deplorable condition.

Application was made for increase on the ground that the blindness resulted from blood poisoning. The medical board at Nashua, N. H., gave it as their opinion that he was entitled to $50 per month; the medical board at Manchester, N. H., rated him at $72 per month, and the medical board at Concord, N. H., said: "It is our opinion that claimant's blindness is a result of his gunshot wound."

Had this opinion been accepted claimant would have been granted $72 per month, the rate for total blindness. But notwithstanding the judgment of these three medical boards, before whom the claimant personally appeared, the medical referee of the Pension Bureau refused to accept blindness as a result of pensionable causes, and the claim was rejected.

Your committee is clear in the opinion that this is an entirely meritorious claim, and therefore report the bill back favorably with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. CONNOLLY. What is the amount of pension granted by the bill?

Mr. PICKLER. Fifty dollars a month.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ALBERT ELLIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 708) to increase the pension of Albert Ellis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Albert Ellis, late of Company K, Twelfth Kansas Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $24 per month, in lieu of the pension that he is now receiving under certificate numbered 301358.

Mr. WOOD. I ask that the report in this case be read. It is quite brief and cites the facts in the case.

The report (by Mr. WOOD) was read, as follows:

In the case of Albert Ellis (H. R. 708), Twelfth Kansas Volunteers, the evidence submitted shows without any controversy:

1. That Ellis served from August 20, 1862, to May 26, 1865, and has an honorable discharge and record.

2. That he now is suffering from granulated sore eyes, and is totally unfit for manual labor.

3. That this disease is of service origin, and was incurred while guarding prisoners, by exposure, and probably also by contact with some diseased person. His first medical examination, October 8, 1884, showed one-half disability; his second, December 2, 1885, total; his third, February 5, 1890, twelve-eighteenths; his fourth, April 29, 1891, seventeen-eighteenths. At this last examination he could not distinguish a letter upon a card (Snellen's) at 4 feet distance.

4. He has steadily grown worse from his discharge, at which time the record shows him to be suffering from purulent iritis (an inflammatory discharge of poisonous matter from the eyes).

5. He was pensioned at $4 from August 29, 1884; at $8 from December 2, 1885; at $12 from February 5, 1890. His claim for increase February 15, 1892, was rejected for reason of "no increase."

6. His original application and all subsequent ones for increase set out disease for which he now asks increase.

7. He was discharged from hospital. His pension is under act of July 14, 1862. One medical referee has found a rating of one-half; another, total; another, twelve-eighteenths; another, no increase.

Your committee believe from the evidence submitted that the disability of this soldier is more than the loss of a hand or foot, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. ERDMAN. I hope the gentleman in charge of this bill will give us a very much more extended statement than that contained in this exceedingly terse report.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state in regard to this bill that the evidence before the committee was quite voluminous. The substance of it is set forth in the report.

I have seen this soldier myself. At a distance of 4 feet he was unable to distinguish a single figure or letter upon the test card known as Snellen's card. The letters on this card range from a very small size to letters 4 inches in length and correspondingly broad. The testimony is without any controversy that he suffered from this disease at the time of his discharge. He was discharged from the hospital, and the evidence shows that he was then suffering from this very disease. The testimony following from that time down to the present time shows that he has grown steadily worse all the time until his present condition is such that at 4 feet distance he is unable to distinguish a letter on the card referred to. He is substantially helpless and can not hoe corn, because he could not tell the weeds from the corn; he could not chop wood, because he could not see whether he was hitting at the stick or his foot; he could not drive a team; he could not sell goods, because he could not distinguish the quality of the goods at 4 feet or any other distance.

His record is good; he acquired the disease in the line of duty in the service, and the rate accorded by the bill is in exact correspondence with the rate in the Pension Office, where the disability is equivalent to the loss of a hand or a foot, and is fixed at $24 a month.

The finding of one of the medical referees is that he is totally blind, and the testimony of the examining board shows substantial blindness, and yet it is a fact that he can just see a faint glimmer of light.

Mr. ERDMAN. What I would like the gentleman to explain and lay before the House is some testimony to sustain the statement he makes in the first line of paragraph 3 of this report, namely, that "his disease was of service origin and was incurred while guarding prisoners." Will the gentleman be kind enough to explain that?

Mr. WOOD. I desire to state that his discharge and his hospital record both show that to be the fact, and the papers were before the committee at the time that the report was prepared, and at the time it was passed upon by the committee. The man is pensioned for that particular disability under the act of July 14, 1862. There is no question about that at all.

Mr. ERDMAN. This is a dispute, then, with the Pension Bureau as to the amount a pensioner ought to receive for a disability of this character?

Mr. WOOD. This is rather a dispute between the medical boards appointed by the Pension Office and the different referees to whom this case has been referred; but the fact remains undisputed that the claimant is substantially totally blind.

Mr. ERDMAN. What does the gentleman mean by the last paragraph of his report, in which he says the committee are of the opinion that the disability of this soldier is more than the loss of a hand or foot? Is this disability to be compared simply to the loss of a hand or foot?

Mr. WOOD. I understand that where any disability furnishes an obstacle in the way of obtaining a livelihood, equivalent to the disability of the loss of a hand or foot, such disability is pensioned at $24 a month. That is the rating of the Pension Office, and it is for the committee, who know the circumstances of this soldier and the condition of his blindness, to say whether it is not equal to or even greater than the loss of a hand or foot. If the bill had been framed for $30 a month it would not be unjust to grant it. The amount asked for was $24 a month, and the bill was so framed, and no amendment was asked.

Mr. GROUT. What does he draw now?

Mr. WOOD. Twelve dollars a month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. PICKLER. I move that the committee do now rise, and that the bills which have passed the Committee of the Whole as amended be recommended to the House for passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. HEPBURN having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HOPKINS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, reported that that committee had had under consideration sundry bills, and had directed him to report to the House the bills H. R. 1139, S. 136, and H. R. 708, with amendments thereto, and with the recommendation that as amended they do pass; also the bill H. R. 1050 with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions; also the bills H. R. 2142, H. R. 3993, H. R. 4182, H. R. 152, H. R. 3221, and H. R. 577, without amendment, and with the recommendation that they do pass.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on the bills recommended for passage the previous question be considered as ordered on their engrossment, third reading, and passage, with the privilege of fifteen minutes' debate on a side in the House.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I can not agree to the previous question being ordered and the debate being limited to fifteen minutes.

Mr. PICKLER. Then say thirty minutes on a side.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Unlimited debate. Some may not take any time at all, and others may take an hour.

Mr. PICKLER. Would thirty minutes on a side satisfy the gentleman?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Scarcely; no.

Mr. PICKLER. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Unlimited. We can not make any agreement as to the limiting of debate. Some may require no time at all. Others may require two or three hours.

Mr. PICKLER. That was the usage in the last Congress.

Mr. McCLELLAN. There has been no such agreement in this Congress.

Mr. PICKLER. Then I call for the reading of the bill on page 23, the unfinished business.

Mr. HANLY. Mr. Speaker, pending this request, I am informed that the point of no quorum will likely be made on reports No. 121, No. 118, and No. 123. I do not believe there is a quorum present. I have as a part of the unfinished business the bill H. R. 2054, report No. 133, about which there is no question, and to which there will be no objection. I ask unanimous consent of the House that I may now place that bill on its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HANLY] asks unanimous consent that House bill No. 2054 be now taken up for consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. PICKLER. In fairness to other members, I can not consent to that. I call for the regular order, the reading of the bill which I have indicated.

RACHEL PATTON.

The unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 1185) granting a pension to Rachel Patton.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. LOUD. Can we not have the bill read, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Of course, if it is requested.

Mr. LOUD. There are some bills that I desire to object to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman desire this bill to be read?

Mr. LOUD. I do, in order that I may know what it is.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rachel Patton, of Paris, Edgar County, Ill., formerly the widow of John H. Patton, late captain of Company C, Seventy-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

Strike out the words, in fourth and fifth lines, "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws" and insert in lieu thereof "at the rate of $20 per month."

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2769) to authorize the leasing of lands for educational purposes in Arizona.

Be it enacted, etc., That the lands reserved for university purposes and all of the school lands in the Territory of Arizona reserved by law for school purposes may be leased under such laws and regulations as may be hereafter prescribed by the legislature of said Territory, but until such legislative action the governor, secretary of the Territory, and superintendent of public instruction shall constitute a board for the leasing of said lands under the rules and regulations heretofore prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for the respective purposes for which the said reservations were made, except that it shall not be necessary to submit said leases to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval; and all necessary expenses and costs incurred in the leasing, management, and protection of said lands and leases may be paid out of the proceeds derived from such leases: Provided, That no lease shall be made for a longer period than five years, and all leases shall terminate on the admission of said Territory as a State: And provided further, That all money received on account of such leases in excess of actual expenses necessarily incurred in connection with the execution thereof shall be placed to the credit of the public school fund of said Territory and shall not be used for any other than public school purposes.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is, Will the House, upon reconsideration, agree to pass the bill?

Mr. LACEY. I hope I may be able to secure the attention of the House——

Mr. MCMILLIN. I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. There is so much confusion that we are unable to hear the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be obliged if gentlemen would take their seats and cease conversation.

Mr. LACEY. I trust that I will be able to secure the attention of the entire House this morning while I briefly outline the nature of the bill, and the grounds on which the President vetoed it. The House is confronted with a grave constitutional interference upon the part of the President with a bill that has passed the committee unanimously, passed the House unanimously, and also passed the Senate unanimously. This bill is identical with the Oklahoma bill, which I ask to have the Clerk read.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him to explain how the veto by the President is a "constitutional interference" with a bill passed by Congress?

Mr. LACEY. It is a "constitutional interference." It is by virtue of his constitutional authority. I do not mean an "unconstitutional" interference. We are confronted with a veto on this bill, and I want to say——

Mr. MILES. I do not want to be hypercritical, but can the gentleman call it an "interference" at all?

Mr. LACEY. Why, it is a fatal interference. Two great bodies going in opposite directions have met in collision one with another; and now we want to see which is right. I ask the Clerk to read the Oklahoma act, to which I invite the attention of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act to ratify the reservation of certain lands made for the benefit of Oklahoma Territory, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the reservation for university, agricultural college, and normal school purposes of section 13 in each township of the lands known as the Cherokee Outlet, the Tonkawa Indian Reservation, and the Pawnee Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Oklahoma, not otherwise reserved or disposed of, and the reservation for public buildings of section 33 in each township of said lands, not otherwise disposed of, made by the President of the United States in his proclamation of August 19, 1893, be, and the same are hereby, ratified, and all of said lands and all of the school lands in said Territory may be leased under such laws and regulations as may be hereafter prescribed by the legislature of said Territory; but until such legislative action the governor, secretary of the Territory, and superintendent of public instruction shall constitute a board for the leasing of said lands under the rules and regulations heretofore prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, for the respective purposes for which the said reservations were made, except that it shall not be necessary to submit said leases to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval; and all necessary expenses and costs incurred in the leasing, management, and protection of said lands and leases may be paid out of the proceeds derived from such leases.

Approved May 4, 1894.

Mr. LACEY. If a comparison is instituted between the bill which has been vetoed and the Oklahoma bill it will be seen that the two bills are essentially identical, the only difference being such changes as will adapt the law to Arizona instead of Oklahoma.

A MEMBER. When was the Oklahoma bill passed?

Mr. LACEY. It was passed in 1894. It was passed at the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office. They expressly requested that the Secretary of the Interior be relieved from the necessity of approving the leases. The following is the report on that bill in the Senate in the Fifty-third Congress:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred House bill No. 5065, "An act to ratify the reservation of certain lands made for the benefit of Oklahoma Territory, and for other purposes," have had the same under consideration, and we recommend that the bill be amended as follows, to wit:

Strike out all after the last "and" in the twelfth line of the said act and insert as follows:

"All of said lands and all of the school lands in said Territory may be leased under such laws and regulations as may be hereafter prescribed by the legislature of said Territory; but until such legislative action the governor, secretary of the Territory, and superintendent of public instruction shall constitute a board for the leasing of said lands under the rules and regulations heretofore prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, for the respective purposes for which the said reservations were made, except that it shall not be necessary to submit said leases to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval; and all necessary expenses and costs incurred in the leasing, management, and protection of said lands and leases may be paid out of the proceeds derived from such leases."

And as amended your committee recommend its passage.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, April 9, 1894.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a copy of a letter from the Commissioner of the Land Office upon H. R. 5065.

The views presented by the Commissioner meet with my approval.

Respectfully,

HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

Hon. JOHN MARTIN, United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 9, 1894.

SIR: I have had my attention called to a proposed amendment to H. R. 5065, entitled "An act to ratify the reservation of certain lands made for the benefit of Oklahoma Territory, and for other purposes,' submitted by the Hon. John Martin, United States Senate, as follows, viz:

Strike out all after the last "and" in the twelfth line and insert as follows:

"All of said lands and all of the school lands in said Territory may be leased under such laws and regulations as may be hereafter prescribed by the legislature of said Territory; but until such legislative action the governor, secretary of state, and superintendent of public instruction shall constitute a board for the leasing of said lands, under the rules and regulations heretofore prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, for the respective purposes for which the said reservations were made, except that it shall not be necessary to submit said leases to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval; and all necessary expenses and costs incurred in the leasing, management, and protection of said lands and leases may be paid out of the proceeds derived from such leases."

I have the honor to state that the proposed amendment meets my approval.

The Commissioner of the Land Office, in his report for 1893, recommended that the requirement to submit leases of school lands to the Secretary of the Interior should be dispensed with. The experience of the Department has been that these leases must be approved almost exclusively upon the recommendation of the Territorial officers. This being true, it is simply a waste of time and additional work, without any benefit, to require them to submit these leases to the Department.

I inclose a copy of said bill and proposed amendment.

Respectfully,

S. W. LAMOREUX, Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

[House Report No. 251, Fifty-third Congress, second session.]

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3610) to authorize the governor of Oklahoma Territory to lease certain lands, and for other purposes, have had the same under consideration, and report it back with the recommendation that it be laid upon the table and that the accompanying substitute therefor be passed.

The President in his proclamation opening the Cherokee Outlet reserved section 13 in each township, which had not been otherwise reserved or disposed of, for university, agricultural college, and normal school purposes, subject to the action of Congress; and also reserved section 33 in each township, which had not been otherwise reserved or disposed of, for public buildings. The proclamation as to these lands was as follows:

"Excepting also that section 13 in each township, which has not been otherwise reserved or disposed of, is hereby reserved for university, agricultural college, and normal school purposes, subject to the action of Congress; excepting also that section 33 in each township, which has not been otherwise reserved or disposed of, is hereby reserved for public buildings."

This bill will ratify the said reservations made by the President and authorize the leasing of the lands for a period of not exceeding three years for the purposes for which they were reserved.

I call the attention of the House to the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for 1893, pages 64 and 65. Speaking of the leases in Oklahoma, he says:

The Land Department of the General Government should not be charged with the supervision of this work. As the statute of 1891, above quoted, has been construed, it has become the duty of this office not only to supervise the leasing in a general way under your instructions, but to pass upon the correctness and completeness of each lease preparatory to approval by you, conduct a large amount of correspondence with the governor and individuals respecting the leasing, and to pass upon estimates of expenses.

The duty is a new one, and the work is not of the same character as that imposed upon this office by general law, to wit, the exercise of the duties pertaining to the survey and disposal of the public lands and the adjudication of private land claims.

Heretofore the officers under the direction of this office, besides inspectors and special agents, were the surveyors-general and registers and receivers of district land offices, who exercise functions exclusively national in character; but by this law and the regulations adopted thereunder an officer clothed with gubernatorial powers is placed under my direction as to certain of his duties.

The situation is an anomaly in the history of the land administration of the Government, and should not be continued.

And he asks that the Secretary be relieved from approving these leases. The law was passed accordingly. The Secretary, in his report of the same year, on page 9, says that—

The Commissioner recommends the enactment by Congress of supplemental or amendatory legislation placing the leasing of these lands and property acquired out of the funds derived therefrom exclusively under the control of the Territorial legislature, and I heartily concur in the recommendation.

In pursuance of these recommendations to the last Congress it passed the act of 1894.

Let me call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the results of that legislation. In the year 1895, under that law, the Territory of Oklahoma received from these leases $88,276.97. I read from the report of the governor of that Territory, recently printed. In the previous year, under the leases made by the Secretary of the Interior, there were received $46,582.26, showing that the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office were right in their recommendation to this House; and the passage of the bill giving to the governor, to the secretary of the Territory, and to the superintendent of public instruction of the Territory the leasing of these lands was a wise act and in the interest of the Territory where the lands are situated.

The following are the reports in the Senate and House on the present bill:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2769) to authorize the leasing of school lands in the Territory of Arizona, have had the same under consideration, and report it back with the information that these lands having been reserved and set apart by the General Government for educational purposes, to be available to the State for revenue purposes after admission, this act simply authorizes the lands to be leased by the proper authorities for the benefit of the school fund previous to admission, and in no way conflicts with public interests and can not fail to be beneficial when amended as herein recommended.

For the purpose of preventing substantial alienation of title under color of a lease, and to insure unencumbered title to the State when admitted, the committee recommend the following amendment, viz:

Amend by adding after the word "leases," in line 17, page 2, the following:

"Provided, That no lease shall be made for a longer period than five years, and all leases shall terminate on the admission of said Territory as a State: And provided further, That all money received on account of such leases in excess of actual expenses necessarily incurred in connection with the execution thereof shall be placed to the credit of the public-school fund of said Territory, and shall not be used for any other than public-school purposes."

With this amendment the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2769) to authorize the leasing of school lands in the Territory of Arizona, have had the same under consideration and report it back with the information that these lands having been reserved and set apart by the General Government for educational purposes, to be available to the State for revenue purposes after admission, this act simply authorizes the lands to be leased by the proper authorities for the benefit of the school fund previous to admission, and in no way conflicts with public interests and can not fail to be beneficial.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The President, notwithstanding the recommendation of one of his Cabinet two years ago, says in his veto message:

It was hardly necessary to provide in this bill that these lands might be leased "under such laws and regulations as may be hereafter prescribed by the legislature of said Territory," if the action of the legislature was to be forestalled and rendered nugatory by the immediate and unrestrained action of the officers constituted "a board for the leasing of said lands" pending such legislative consideration. These are inconsistencies which are not satisfactorily accounted for by the suggestion that the time that would elapse before the legislature could consider the subject would be important.

And he says:

Even the measure of protection which would be afforded the citizens of the Territory by a submission to the Secretary of the Interior of the leases proposed, and thus giving him an opportunity to ascertain whether or not they comply with his regulations, is especially withheld.

That was done on the express recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior as I have quoted it. Is it implied by the message that the governor of Arizona would not be just as safe a man to look after these lands as the Secretary of the Interior, 1,800 miles away? They are both appointed by the President of the United States, both of his own political faith, and the governor of the Territory also acts with the secretary of the Territory and school superintendent under this bill. I call the attention of the House to the fact that this is not an experiment. The bill passed two years ago with reference to Oklahoma is working well, and the situation in the two Territories is substantially the same. In the Territory of Arizona the situation is this: Tracts of school lands—the sixteenth and the thirty-sixth sections—are reserved by act of Congress for school purposes. Under existing laws settlers have taken the adjoining lands. Arizona is a Territory whose lands require to be irrigated. A section of school land often lies between two sections of private land, and the "influential citizens" referred to in the President's message do not like to pay for leases of those lands, and so the President says:

The protests I have received from numerous and influential citizens of the Territory indicate considerable opposition to this bill among those interested in the preservation and proper management of these school lands.

Unquestionably this legislation meets with opposition. The cattle barons of Oklahoma did not like the law of 1894, and influential citizens there opposed its enactment. Whether they appealed to the President for a veto or not I do not know, but I do know that the result of that law has been highly beneficial to the Territory.

Let me call attention to what the governor of Arizona says in his report for 1895 (page 28), which contains, as I think, the answer to the whole contention of the veto message:

Leasing of school lands: A wise provision of the Federal law sets aside the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections of all townships of the surveyed public lands of the Territory for the benefit of the public schools of Arizona, but which can not be utilized until the Territory is clothed with the rights of a sovereign State. Much of this land designated as school land has been settled upon and is being cultivated. Under the law this land is not liable to taxation, as are the lands contiguous thereto; neither are the schools receiving any benefit therefrom. It is estimated a revenue of from $75,000 to $100,000 annually could be derived from this source. I recommend that the Territorial board of education be empowered to lease these school lands for a term of years, the present occupants to be given the preference.

Mark these words, "the present occupants to be given the preference," showing that these lands which this bill proposes to lease are already occupied, free of charge, by persons who do not even pay taxes upon them.

We have a precedent in this recommendation, as Congress authorized the Territory of Wyoming to lease her school lands before her admission to Statehood.

I am not sure as to Wyoming; but in Oklahoma they have a precedent, and a good one. The President also says, in his message:

Under these provisions the lands reserved for university and school purposes, whose value largely depends upon their standing timber, and in which every citizen of the Territory has a deep interest, may be leased and denuded of their timber by officers none of whom have been chosen by the people, and without the sanction of any law or regulation made by their representatives in the local legislature.

Now, I assume that no leases will be made by the governor and by the secretary of the Territory of timber lands to be thus denuded. If either of those officials attempted anything of that kind their removal would promptly follow and ought to follow; they ought to and would be deprived of the offices which they were abusing. They are certainly as fit men to trust with this matter as Secretary Smith, an able and distinguished gentleman who has a good deal of other business on his hands at this end of the line, anyway. On the whole, I think it would be much better to trust this matter to the Territorial officers. Again, most of these lands being in possession of persons having no authority of law for occupying them, it is a very strange suggestion that if they should hold possession under leases they would be more likely to destroy the timber than they would be when they are in possession without authority of law. Of all men in the world the men least to be trusted with timber are those who occupy the lands without authority, who are in possession, but whose possession may be terminated at any time. Under the bill, as passed by the House and amended by the Senate, the leases upon these lands will terminate in five years. That is the utmost limit, and they will terminate sooner if Arizona is admitted into the Union as a State. The fact is the President has been deceived by somebody. He has undoubtedly sent this message to the House in the utmost good faith, believing that there is some danger in this bill and not having knowledge of or having considered the working of the Oklahoma bill. He has been influenced, no doubt, by influential men who have been influenced by other influential men who are upon the lands of the Territory and who do not want to pay rental for those lands.

I do not wish to consume time on this bill unnecessarily, yet I desire, Mr. Speaker, to give an opportunity to members of the committee to explain the matter fully to the House, so that no mistake may be made and that the vote may be intelligently cast, with a full knowledge of the history of the bill and of previous legislation of the same character.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the bill now before the House, which the President has vetoed, was carefully considered by the members of the Committee on Public Lands, representing both parties. It was reported to the House unanimously, after a careful investigation of the facts. It is a bill of importance and should receive the careful consideration of the House. I have read with care the message of the President conveying to this House his veto of this measure, and I do not see anything in the message to alter my opinion that the bill is a good and just measure and should be passed.

Mr. Speaker, the facts in reference to this matter are these: The United States Government has set aside two sections of land in each township in the Territory of Arizona to be held in trust for the schools of the future State of Arizona. The Territory is not allowed to dispose of that land; it must be held in trust for the benefit of the children of the future State. A large proportion of the land, however, can be utilized. A great deal of it is good grazing land, and revenue can be derived from it.

Under the general law the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to lease these lands for the benefit of the schools of the Territory; but in practice it has been found that these leases accumulate in the Department of the Interior so rapidly that he has been unable to approve them; that parties go into possession of these school lands and remain there—although the lease is not approved—until the term for which the lease was intended to be made has expired. Parties thus taking possession of the land and using it get it free of charge, and the schools of the Territory derive no benefit therefrom.

There was before the last Congress a bill identical with that now before us for consideration, except that it applied to the Territory of Oklahoma. It had been found that leases for similar trust lands in that Territory accumulated so rapidly in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior that he could not approve them, and therefore the schools were not deriving proper benefit from the lease of those lands. Hence, the Secretary of the Interior recommended that Congress pass for the Territory of Oklahoma a bill similar to the present one applying to Arizona. I will read what Mr. Lamoreux, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, recommended on this subject:

The Commissioner of the General Land Office, in his report of 1893, recommends that the requirement to submit leases of school lands to the Secretary of the Interior should be dispensed with. The experience of the Department has been that these leases must be approved almost exclusively upon the recommendation of the Territorial officers. This being true, it is simply a waste of time and additional work without any benefit to require them to submit these leases to the Department.

The present Secretary of the Interior, in transmitting that report to Congress, said—

The views presented by the Commissioner meet my approval.

A MEMBER. When was that?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That was in the last Congress. The report was dated April 9, 1894.

Now, that bill for Oklahoma, which met the approval of the Commissioner of the Land Office, which met the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, went to the President of the United States and received his signature. This bill for the Territory of Arizona is identical with that Oklahoma bill. Under the Oklahoma bill the receipts for the leases of these public lands have increased from forty-odd thousand dollars to eighty-odd thousand dollars in one year. I think we can have no better evidence of the benefits that may be derived from the bill now before the House than that very fact.

Furthermore, the Secretary of the Interior says these Territorial officers are the proper men to approve these leases. They are appointed by the President of the United States. They are just as much under his control as are the officers of the Interior Department; and if they do not perform their duties properly they are subject to removal by him. Therefore I can not see how any injustice can be done to anyone by the passage of this measure. On the contrary, there seems to me to be every reason for its passage, so that the profits derived from the lease of these lands may be held in trust for the benefit of the children of this future State. I shall, therefore, Mr. Speaker, vote for the passage of this bill, notwithstanding the veto of the President.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SAYERS. I should like to know from the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] whether, before this bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands of this House, there was any communication on the part of the committee with the Secretary of the Interior respecting the bill?

Mr. LACEY. The bill was not submitted to the Secretary of the Interior after its introduction. The committee relied upon the previous printed report of the Secretary of the Interior sent to Congress by the President recommending the passage of such a bill——

Mr. SAYERS. For the Territory of Arizona?

Mr. LACEY. For the Territories generally; and for the draft of the bill we relied upon the bill framed in the Land Office or approved in the Interior Department for the Territory of Oklahoma, the situation in the two Territories being substantially the same. In both cases the "cattle barons" and other unauthorized persons were in possession of the lands; in both cases no rent was being paid; in both cases no leases by the Territorial officers were provided for; and as to the statement of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office that they did not want to supervise these leases, we relied upon the statement to that effect in their printed reports of 1893.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman will remember that a few days since this House passed a bill affecting the State of California, and passed it upon the supposition that it was identical with a bill passed for the benefit of some other State.

Mr. LACEY. Montana.

Mr. SAYERS. The general impression at the time that bill passed was that it met the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. We found afterwards, upon investigation, that the conditions were entirely different, and that to execute the bill which we passed, and which carried an appropriation I think of only $20,000, would require, according to the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, at least $500,000.

Mr. Speaker, I know nothing at all of the conditions prevailing in Arizona, but I do submit that because we passed a similar bill in reference to Oklahoma it affords no reason whatever why a bill of similar character should be passed for Arizona, unless the conditions are absolutely the same. The facts can be obtained from the Interior Department.

Mr. LACEY. They are the same, I will state to the gentleman from Texas; and besides, we already had the assurance of the Secretary of the Interior, through the Delegate from Arizona, that the bill was entirely satisfactory to the Department.

As to this matter, the other day, during the consideration of the bill that my friend refers to, let me say to my friend from Texas that I rose——

Mr. SAYERS (interrupting). I wish the gentleman to understand that I make no charge against him whatever.

Mr. LACEY. I understand that; but you leave an impression, or a misconstruction of what was done—unintentionally, I am sure—as to what did take place. My friend is always fair.

Mr. SAYERS. I was only stating the impression that was made on this side of the House among gentlemen that that bill had received the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. But I make no charge against the gentleman as having created that impression.

Mr. LACEY. It was no doubt a well-founded impression, because the gentleman from California stated during the discussion that the bill had been so submitted. That, however, was a mistake on his part. He did not mislead the House intentionally, of course. It was a misapprehension of the facts. He was not a member of the committee, and only stated what he understood to be the circumstances. I immediately rose and called the attention of the House to the fact that the bill had not been submitted to the Secretary of the Interior, so if anybody misunderstood the fact it was no fault of ours.

In this case, however, we did not submit the bill to the Interior Department, but followed the published report of the Secretary which was submitted to Congress upon the subject.

Mr. SAYERS. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that I did not intend to cast the slightest reflection upon the gentleman from California, and have no doubt that he was entirely honest in his statement. I was merely endeavoring to show that a serious misapprehension had been created, though not intentionally, of course.

Mr. LACEY. Very well. I understand that when the President sends a message to the House and calls attention to the legislation he wants, or sends the report of the Secretary of the Interior to the House, which is referred to committees, the committee are not expected to reject or disregard that report, but, on the contrary, that they are expected to assume that the Administration consent to the legislation suggested by such recommendation.

I have already read from the report of the Secretary of the Interior for 1893, showing the reasons why he wanted to be relieved from the execution of these leases, and recommending that legislation should be enacted to give the governor of the Territory and the Territorial secretary the authority for making the leases, they being on the ground and understanding the facts better than the Department could at a distance. It is all the more important that this should be done now, because of the fact that these lands are occupied already without any compensation to anybody. We had a right, in view of the recommendation coming to us from the Department, to rely on the belief that the report of the Secretary of the Interior approved substantially this legislation. We examined it in committee and sought to enact it into a law. The committee reported the bill, which was passed by both Houses of Congress, and went to the President. We did not send this specific bill to the Department because the bill was a copy of the bill substantially framed in or approved by the Interior Department for another Territory, situated precisely as this is, with two Democratic officials to carry out the wishes of the Government. We saw no reason why we should not treat both Territories alike, and were brought face to face with the inquiry whether we would make fish of Arizona and fowl of Oklahoma.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman agree that the consideration of the veto shall lie over until Monday, so that the Secretary of the Interior may be communicated with as to the proper disposition of the bill?

Mr. LACEY. Well, it seems to me it would be a very indelicate thing on the part of the Secretary of the Interior to come forward and instruct Congress to enact a law in opposition to the veto message of the President.

Mr. SAYERS. We only wish to get the facts.

Mr. LACEY. And I think the Secretary of the Interior would hardly care to come before the House with the recommendation that this body should override the veto message of the President of the United States.

Mr. SAYERS. We only desire the facts.

Mr. LACEY. That is what I want.

Mr. SAYERS. And all I wish to know, and I suppose all that any other gentleman who has not been placed in possession of the facts wants to know, is the exact status of this matter; and that can be obtained from the Secretary of the Interior by a statement of the facts in the case. We can then see whether they are on all fours with the conditions prevailing in the Territory of Oklahoma. If so, then there may be some good reason why we should pass the bill over the veto.

Mr. LACEY. Now, let me ask my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] this question: Do you think it would be delicate or proper for this House to ask the Secretary of the Interior whether he thinks the House ought to override the veto of the President?

Mr. SAYERS. I do not propose to ask the Secretary of the Interior——

Mr. LACEY. Neither do I.

Mr. SAYERS (continuing). For his opinion, but I propose to ask the Secretary of the Interior for the facts within his knowledge, that will enable us to vote upon this measure intelligently.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. I simply desire to say to the gentleman from Texas that I have seen the approval of the Secretary of the Interior to this bill since it reached the President; also the approval of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to this very bill after it went to the President.

Mr. LACEY. They were laid in writing before the President, were they not, approving the bill?

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. LACEY. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE].

Mr. TURNER of Georgia rose.

Mr. MCRAE. If the gentleman from Georgia desires to speak, I will yield to him.

Mr. LACEY. How much time would the gentleman from Georgia like?

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I want a moment only.

Mr. LACEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I suppose the debate is proceeding in the time of the gentleman from Iowa, and I will not abuse his courtesy.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. From what I can learn of this bill by a hasty reading, it proposes to confer on the Territorial authorities the power to lease the school lands in the Territory of Arizona in accordance with the regulations prescribed by the Interior Department, except that the Secretary is to have no supervision of the leases, as those regulations otherwise require. It is said that a similar provision was inserted in a bill affecting the Territory of Oklahoma during the last Congress. It is quite possible, sir, that that provision may then have been approved and experience under its operation may have justified a change of opinion in regard to it. I see that the President in his message suggests that under this act the lands could be denuded of their timber, and in that way greatly damaged—lands the value of which chiefly depends upon the forests. He suggests this circumstance as a reason why the leases should be supervised by the Secretary of the Interior.

Something has been said about a reference of this matter to the Secretary of the Interior as it now stands. I think it may be safely assumed that the Executive has had the advice of the Secretary of the Interior on this subject and that his veto of the measure has been inspired by the information which he derived from that Department. In order to show the relation of the Executive to this matter, I ask that the veto message be read. It may be found on page 2280 of the RECORD, and is very brief.

Mr. SAYERS. There is no provision in this for protecting the timber?

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I have already stated that. It will be seen that the President complains that there is no protection for the timber on these lands under the provisions of this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without my approval House bill numbered 2769, entitled "An act to authorize the leasing of lands for educational purposes in Arizona."

This bill provides for the leasing of all the public lands reserved to the Territory of Arizona for the benefit of its universities and schools, "under such laws and regulations as may be hereafter prescribed by the legislature of said Territory."

If the proposed legislation granted no further authority than this, it would in terms at least recognize the safety and propriety of leaving the desirability of leasing these lands, and the limitations and safeguards regulating such leasing, to be determined by the local legislature chosen by the people to make their laws and protect their interests.

Instead of stopping here, however, the bill further provides that until such legislative action the governor, the secretary of the Territory, and the superintendent of public instruction shall constitute a board for the leasing of said lands under the rules and regulations heretofore prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. It is specifically declared that it shall not be necessary to submit said leases to the Secretary of the Interior for approval, and that no leases shall be made for a longer term than five years, nor for a term extending beyond the date of the admission of the Territory to statehood.

Under these provisions the lands reserved for university and school purposes, whose value largely depends upon their standing timber, and in which every citizen of the Territory has a deep interest, may be leased and denuded of their timber by officers none of whom have been chosen by the people, and without the sanction of any law or regulation made by their representatives in the local legislature. Even the measure of protection which would be afforded the citizens of the Territory by a submission to the Secretary of the Interior of the leases proposed, and thus giving him an opportunity to ascertain whether or not they comply with his regulations, is especially withheld.

It was hardly necessary to provide in this bill that these lands might be leased "under such laws and regulations as may be hereafter prescribed by the legislature of said Territory," if the action of the legislature was to be forestalled and rendered nugatory by the immediate and unrestrained action of the officers constituted "a board for the leasing of said lands" pending such legislative consideration. These are inconsistencies which are not satisfactorily accounted for by the suggestion that the time that would elapse before the legislature could consider the subject would be important.

The protests I have received from numerous and influential citizens of the Territory indicate considerable opposition to this bill among those interested in the preservation and proper management of these school lands.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 23, 1896.

Mr. LACEY. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE].

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote to pass the bill notwithstanding the objections of the President. Reference has been made to similar legislation in relation to Oklahoma during the Fifty-third Congress. The Delegate from that Territory introduced a bill, H. R. 3610, for which, under the direction of the Committee on Public Lands, I reported a substitute, H. R. 5065, which did not contain the provision that has been made the basis of the objection by the Executive in his veto. It passed the House as reported by me without opposition. The Senate Committee on Public Lands referred it to the Secretary of the Interior, and as has already been stated, he reported in writing to that committee that the first paragraph of the bill was right, but that there should be added to it as an amendment the following clause, which I shall now read:

All of said lands and all of the school lands in said Territory may be leased under such laws and regulations as may be hereafter prescribed by the legislature of said Territory; but until such legislative action the governor, secretary of the Territory, and superintendent of public instruction shall constitute a board for the leasing of said lands under the rules and regulations heretofore prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, for the respective purposes for which the said reservations were made, except that it shall not be necessary to submit said leases to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval; and all necessary expenses and costs incurred in the leasing, management, and protection of said lands and leases may be paid out of the proceeds derived from such leases.

So that provision which relieved the Secretary of the Interior of the duty of approving the leases was inserted in the Oklahoma bill at the request of the Interior Department, for the reason that the Department could not superintend and properly look after the leasing of the school lands in these Territories. I will state that now and for a long time the Interior Department has had authority to lease these lands. That authority is full and complete; but the Commissioner and Secretary are charged with great public duties here, and have not been able to give the matters attention. They can not overlook these many small tracts of land in different parts of sparsely settled Territories at a distance of over 2,000 miles without an appropriation that would enable them to send representatives into each Territory, and that has not been given them. They have done the best they could and have repeatedly called attention to the subject in their reports.

The result has been that the Territories have each lost from $50,000 to $100,000 per annum for several years past. The present able Secretary and Commissioner of the General Land Office, realizing that some rental should be realized for the use of these grazing lands, wisely, I think, suggested that this matter should be committed to the hands of the authorities nearest to the people—the local officials. I believed then that that was in accordance with the Democratic idea of home rule. I believe so now, and I think that it is best for all concerned to bring these matters as close to the people directly interested as possible. If the officials charged with the duty of leasing should abuse the trust or in any way fail, they are responsible, if elective, to the people who elected them, and if appointive, to the people who appointed them. In this case a majority of these officers are appointees of the present Executive, and I assume are honorable gentlemen.

This is the history in brief of the provision in the Oklahoma bill to which objection has been made. Having made the change for Oklahoma, I can see no reason why we should not do it for Arizona, unless it can now be agreed that she is to be admitted as a State very soon. If Arizona is to be kept out of the Union and against her wishes to be ruled by officers appointed and not of her own choosing, let those officers have at least the right to get all the rents they can for the education of the children of the Territory. The lands belong to the United States, but they have been reserved to be donated to the State when admitted, and we have full power over them. The objection urged by the President that the lands may be denuded of timber by the lessees requires some notice. The lands in Arizona are not generally valuable for timber, but for grazing; but the little timber that may be upon the school lands on the mountains and hillsides of Arizona should be fully protected; but I submit in all candor to the House that the greatest degree of protection will be secured by committing the matter to the officers of the Territory, rather than to the Interior Department. None of them can fully protect against thieves who will steal public timber under any system of leasing, as they do now without any leases. But, Mr. Speaker, every man who cuts a tree upon reserved school lands, in Arizona or in any other Territory of the United States, is subject to a fine of not exceeding $5,000 and imprisonment in the penitentiary not exceeding one year. Many steal without reference to the law. And whether the authority be given to the Secretary of the Interior or to the local officers makes but little difference in that respect, except that the difference, I believe, would be in favor of the local authorities, if honest; because I know that neither the Secretary of the Interior nor the Commissioner of the General Land Office can personally supervise these matters; and they have no fund out of which they could pay a sufficient number of agents to look after timber depredations. They can not protect other public lands.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield to me for one question?

Mr. McRAE. Certainly.

Mr. COX. I see that this board that is empowered to act is composed of the governor, the secretary of the Territory, and the superintendent of public instruction. Now, who appoints this board, with the exception of the governor?

Mr. McRAE. The President appoints the governor and the secretary of the Territory; as to the other I am not informed, but will ask the gentleman from Arizona to answer.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. The superintendent of public instruction is appointed by the governor.

Mr. COX. The balance of these are appointees of the President, and the governor appoints the superintendent?

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. McRAE. I am asked by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLACK] when the legislature of Arizona will convene. Will the gentleman from Arizona tell me?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LACEY. How much more time does my colleague desire?

Mr. McRAE. I only desire enough time to answer the question that has been asked me. Two minutes will do.

Mr. LACEY. I yield two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. McRAE. When does the legislature of Arizona next meet?

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. In next January.

Mr. McRAE. So, Mr. Speaker, authority is given by this act to this board to lease the school lands under regulations heretofore prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for the time specified in the bill unless it sooner becomes a State. Now, I assume, although I have not seen a copy of the Department regulations, that they will amply protect the Government and the Territory so far as the timber is concerned. I feel certain that the regulations would not permit the use of the timber on the lands. I hope no discrimination will be made against the Territory of Arizona in the matter of leasing its school lands or otherwise. The Territory has been badly treated by Congress in respect to statehood, but is certainly as good as Oklahoma. The revenue from these lands would reach between $75,000 and $100,000. That is the experience we have had concerning Oklahoma with reference to her school lands, which are not so large in area and perhaps not as rich in resources.

I have made this statement with, I trust, a proper regard for the reasons assigned by the President. I think he has been misled by people who do not have a proper regard for the interest of the Territory. I trust the bill will pass.

Mr. LACEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I desire to consume but very few moments upon this question. For the fourteen years that I have lived in Arizona it has been the continuous wish of our people that some revenue should accrue to the Territory from the use of the school lands. Under the United States statutes the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections of the public lands are reserved for school purposes until the Territory shall become a State; but until the time it does become a State no revenue whatever is derived from the use of those lands. Many people settle upon these sections of land before they are surveyed and find afterwards that they are on school lands. They are there, and they seek to remain there, because they are required to pay no taxes, and they contribute not one iota to the maintenance of the government which protects them.

Much of the land in Arizona is arid, much is mountainous, much is valuable for timber and also for farms. After it had been discovered that some of the sections 16 and 36 are valuable for agricultural purposes they are settled upon, for the reason that the settlers desire to avoid paying any revenue which contributes to the maintenance of schools. That is the very object. The Fifteenth legislature of Arizona unanimously memorialized Congress to pass a bill similar to this one. I have recommended it in official life there, and every governor since, within my knowledge, has recommended the same thing. No protest has ever come from anybody until this time; no protest has ever been presented to me or to any member of this House or of the Senate so far as my knowledge goes.

Now, in regard to having the leases submitted to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval, in the case of the Oklahoma bill the Commissioner of the General Land Office specifically recommended against that, as the House has heard in this discussion, and the Secretary specifically approved of the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

I wish to say a few words now in reply to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER], who possibly did not hear my positive statement that the Secretary of the Interior did approve this very bill. Subsequent to the passage of the bill I went to the White House and asked the private secretary of the President, Mr. Thurber, the condition of the bill. He said, "It has gone to the Interior Department, and you had better go down there." I went to the Interior Department and asked the Commissioner of the General Land Office, Judge Lamoreux, what had become of the bill. He said, "I signed it with my approval about twenty minutes ago, and it has gone to the Secretary." I went to the Secretary's office and saw his secretary, who had the bill in his possession, and while I was there he took it in to Secretary Smith, secured his approval, brought it back and showed it to me. And in my judgment Mr. Secretary Smith has been out of the city ever since that time.

In regard to the protests that have been sent to the President, it is very easy to understand that the people now occupying these lands and paying no taxes upon them desire to have that happy condition of things continued. It is also true that many corporations owned large pieces of land that come within this description and they desire to hold control, thinking that statehood may be delayed for some time. One corporation has 600 acres improved and under fence for speculative purposes and forbids its occupation by others.

The people who hold these lands in that way may be influential and may be able to get up protests to be sent to the President, but from $75,000 to $100,000 of revenue will flow into the school fund annually from the leasing of these lands and will to that extent relieve the burden of taxation upon other citizens of the Territory who are now compelled to make it up. In short, Mr. Speaker, I can conceive of no possible reason why this bill should not become a law, in view of past precedents, and I certainly believe that the President must have acted in this matter under a misapprehension.

Mr. STEELE. What about the timber lands?

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Along the line of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad 72 sections have been reserved for university purposes; some of it is good land and some of it is not, but the regulations now prohibit the denuding of these lands of timber, and it is not to be presumed that the governor and secretary of the Territory, who are appointed by Mr. Cleveland, are any more corrupt than the officers of Oklahoma Territory. They are residents of the Territory, they live there, and there is no possibility of their allowing the robbing of this land of its timber; but if it were possible, the value of the timber would be taken into consideration in connection with the leases.

Mr. LACEY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Speaker, I think the House can readily understand why the Department requested that certain Territorial officers should be given authority to look after these school lands in Oklahoma. There were executed there in one year 1,600 leases, and by the time those leases were sent to the Department, assuming that there were no laches whatever, it took in some cases eighteen months before a man could ascertain whether or not his lease had met the approval of the Department. This business went into the regular routine of the Department and was taken up in due course. It was at the suggestion of the Department of the Interior that the original Oklahoma bill was introduced, taking the leasing of these lands out of the hands of the Department. Although the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Interior are still in force in Oklahoma, we have the right to handle the matter ourselves. Arizona ought to have the same privilege. The Committee on Public Lands, in reporting the bill, believed the fact that Oklahoma had obtained $88,000 last year from the leasing of her school lands was a sufficient reason for authorizing the Territory of Arizona to lease its lands and thereby to obtain something for the support of its public schools.

To-day many of the lands there are occupied by men who do not pay a dollar of rent or taxes. The enactment of this bill will compel them either to pay rent for the benefit of the school fund or to move off the lands and allow them to be occupied by men who will pay rent and thereby aid the public-school funds. I think the bill should be passed, in justice to the people of Arizona. Undoubtedly somebody has deceived the President of the United States in regard to this question. He aims ordinarily to be fair, and I do not hesitate to say that I am confident somebody interested in some scheme has been able to so mix matters as to blind the mind of the President to the facts of this case and thereby secure his veto.

Mr. LACEY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BARNEY].

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Speaker, the consideration of this question divides itself properly under two heads, first, whether these lands should be leased for the benefit of the Territory of Arizona; and second, by whom should they be leased? As to whether the lands should be leased at all it appears to me there can be no question. The children of that Territory need the funds which will be derived from these leases, and there is every reason why they should have the benefit of those funds.

If the lands are to be leased at all it seems to me beyond controversy that there are no persons better qualified to perform this duty than those men who are upon the ground. We are to take into consideration the fact that this Government is only a trustee of those lands. In a few short years, when that Territory becomes a State, those lands will belong to the State for school purposes. And, I ask, can we not trust the beneficiary to lease those lands properly—to enter upon proper contracts—better than we can the trustee under such circumstances?

The principal objection which has been urged against this bill is that it will enable the lessees to cut off the timber and thus commit waste. Why, sir, it is a principle of the common law that a lessee has no right to commit waste; and if we assume that the lessees of this property will do this we might better assume that any thief can go upon the premises and commit waste; but there is a much greater probability of the latter result. I submit to the House that there is no greater danger that occupants under formal leases will denude these lands by committing waste than there is that squatters or thieves or other parties who have no right upon the premises will do so. In fact, I believe this bill will put these lands into the possession of actual settlers, whose interest it will be to protect them from waste. I submit that the bill is a proper one and should be passed, notwithstanding the President's veto.

Mr. LACEY. Before asking the previous question, I am glad to recognize that this matter has been approached on both sides of the House as a business proposition. The President undoubtedly has been misinformed as to the situation. This bill ought to pass; and I now move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and, in accordance with the provision of the Constitution, the House proceeded to vote by yeas and nays on the question, Will the House, on reconsideration, pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 199, nays 38, not voting 118; as follows:

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before that I desire to make a report from the Committee on Rules, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it shall be in order for the Committee on the Judiciary to offer, and for the House to consider in Committee of the Whole, as an amendment to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1897, the bill (H. R. 6654) entitled "A bill to abolish the fee system as to United States district attorneys and marshals and substitute salaries, and for other purposes."

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the Clerk read the report of the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to which was referred resolution No. 182, submit the following report to the House:
The committee recommend that the same do pass.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask the previous question, Mr. Speaker, on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the gentleman desire to occupy the floor in debate?

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman from Florida wishes to be heard.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then I will occupy the floor and make a few observations in regard to the rule and the necessity for its adoption.

The effect of the rule, Mr. Speaker, is this, that it makes in order, as an amendment to the pending appropriation bill, the bill for regulating the compensation of marshals, their deputies, United States attorneys and their assistants, and United States commissioners, so that it will not be subject to the point of order under the rules which make obnoxious to an appropriation bill anything carrying new legislation or changing existing law. That is the sum and substance and purpose of the rule, so that this bill to which reference is made in the resolution may be offered to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, as an amendment to the said bill, without being subject to a point of order.

Now, why do we ask that this bill be considered in connection with the appropriation bill? First, because this appropriation bill makes provision for the compensation of the officers that I have named; second, because there is a strong feeling among the members of this House and in the country in favor of this legislation, and we feel that this will be a method by which the House, if it wants to work this reform, will have the opportunity to do so.

The Committee on the Judiciary has labored hard and faithfully and tried to effect a remedy for what all agree is an existing evil in this regard. We have worked together without any partisanship entering into our labor, consulting freely with the Department of Justice, having the chief of that Department with us considering the bill in its details, and accepting many of his suggestions.

Again, by this method we can, by getting the bill into a conference, secure the reduction of the appropriations which will be forced under existing law. We believe that there can be a reduction made of at least $200,000, probably in the neighborhood of $216,000, from the appropriation now made for this purpose. I would like to call the attention of the House to a few figures in support of the necessity of this legislation. The following table shows the total appropriations by years for these various officials:

Appropriations, including deficiencies, made for marshals and deputies, district attorneys, clerks, and for commissioners of United States courts, fiscal years 1890 to 1896, inclusive.

Fiscal year.	Marshals and deputies.	District attorneys.	Clerks.	Commissioners.
1890	$990,328	$289,978	$243,355	$185,201
1891	1,250,201	327,895	273,970	207,363
1892	1,211,925	350,904	270,000	263,960
1893	1,478,159	351,288	291,130	296,072
1894	1,470,450	405,281	305,179	339,034
1895	1,618,573	422,461	353,513	363,036
1896	1,635,000	410,000	330,000	340,000

In a period of seven years, as will be seen by this table, there has been an increase in the appropriations for United States marshals and their deputies of $654,672; and for United States commissioners, in the same length of time, an increase of $154,799; while for United States attorneys the increase has been $120,022.

Now let me give briefly a table showing the increase of appropriations for the entire Federal system, commencing with 1885 and running through all the years to and including 1896, including all regular appropriations for this service as well as deficiencies:

Fiscal year.	Regular appropriation.	Deficiencies.	Total.
1885	$2,760,000	$450,050	$3,210,050
1886	2,960,000	560,266	3,520,266
1887	2,904,400	485,260	3,389,660
1888	2,849,400	1,024,728	3,874,128
1889	3,505,600	359,219	3,864,819
1890	3,575,600	1,156,269	4,731,869
1891	3,616,600	1,423,900	5,040,500
1892	3,739,100	1,391,123	5,130,223
1893	3,330,600	2,177,860	5,508,460
1894	3,345,000	2,794,239	6,139,239
1895	3,595,000	3,133,175	6,728,175
1896	3,455,600	3,006,000	6,461,600
1897 (estimated)			6,489,512

Now, note the difference between the appropriations for 1885 and 1896. In 1885 the total appropriations were $3,210,050 and in 1896 $6,461,600.

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. More than twice as much.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Will my friend yield for an inquiry?

Mr. HENDERSON. In a few moments.

You will see that the necessity for legislation is so palpable that no legislator can resist the appeal; and responding to what has been said on the floor of the House and to the current sentiment of the country and the House in this regard, the Committee on the Judiciary laid nearly everything else aside and addressed itself almost exclusively to this work. We propose, by the rule pending before you, to bring this proposition to be considered in connection with the appropriations for the Department of Justice carried by this appropriation bill. The matter will be placed before the House by the committee in this form, and the responsibility will then be with this body.

I would like to say further, when we reach the consideration of the bill where the Department of Justice is provided for and where this proposition will be in order as an amendment, we will ask the House for so much time as gentlemen may desire in the general debate, so that the bill may be considered in detail and all may understand it, after which it will be considered by the Committee of the Whole under the rules subject to the five-minute debate and be open to amendment by any gentlemen who desire to offer amendments to any of the provisions of the bill.

I now yield to my colleague from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], who wishes to ask a question.

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman has already anticipated my question.

Mr. HENDERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] for a question.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I want to ask if it would be allowable, in case the special order shall be agreed to and this matter comes up for consideration in the Committee of the Whole, to offer an amendment seeking to give a salary also to the clerks of these courts? I desire to offer such an amendment. I believe I can give good reasons why such provision should be made.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not know that such an amendment would be in order. That is a matter which will have to be determined when we reach it; but I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS], in that connection, however, in behalf of the subcommittee who gave this so much labor, that the reasons why the clerks were not included were, as I understand, these: First, because the clerks of the courts are in no way connected directly with working up litigation for the Federal courts, whereas the marshals, attorneys, and commissioners are at the fountain head of prosecutions, so to speak. The clerks are not. Secondly, because their work seems to be peculiarly fee work; and, thirdly, because when this legislation has been considered heretofore there seemed to be a very great pressure from the clerks against the legislation, and it was the view of the subcommittee to commence with a substantial reform and reach the clerks at some future time.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I want to make a suggestion to my friend, to show him how this will operate unless some provision is made for clerks. Take, for example, the southern district of Mississippi. There are four courts held twice a year in that southern district. There is but one clerk; but the law requires that this clerk shall keep constantly, at each one of the places where court is held, a deputy. Under the system which has prevailed, by which the fees of the clerks were increased, owing to the methods which you have so graphically portrayed, he was able to provide some compensation for these deputy clerks; but the very purpose which you seek is to prevent the bringing of multitudes of suits, criminal or otherwise, into these courts.

Now, let me say also that the necessary result of that will be that the compensation of the clerks will be very largely decreased, and I confess that in my State I do not believe it will be possible for the clerk, either of the northern or the southern district, to comply with the law and keep a deputy at each place where a term of court is held, because I do not believe his fees would permit him to render such compensation as would enable him to employ a suitable deputy. Now, these clerks are required to keep their offices open every day in the year, so that lawyers can have access to them, can get their papers filed, can take out their writs, and do whatever is necessary in the transaction of their court business, and, of course, you must have men with at least some intelligence and some fitness for the discharge of the duties of those places; but if you are going to cut down the fees of the clerks, as you will when you cut down the compensation of the marshals and district attorneys, it will not leave the clerk with sufficient revenues to enable him to do what the law requires him to do. So I will say to my friend that I propose to offer an amendment by which, in these districts where the clerks' fees do not reach a certain sum, the clerk shall be entitled, in addition to his fees, to an amount which will make his compensation some reasonable sum.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say frankly to the gentleman from Mississippi that I believe this will cut down the fees of the clerks, that is, the clerks of the United States district courts. I do not think the fees of the United States circuit court clerks will be materially affected by this bill, but those who have charge of criminal matters, the district court clerks, will undoubtedly be affected.

Mr. CATCHINGS. If you will let me interrupt you just at that point—because it will be more pertinent—the principal fees which the clerks in my State get in both districts come from the criminal cases.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no doubt about that; and that is what we are aiming at, I will say frankly.

Mr. CATCHINGS. And the compensation is so small that the clerk of the circuit court is also clerk of the district court.

Mr. HENDERSON. Now, I want to say this to the gentleman and the House, there were no batteries turned upon this legislation so forcefully as those that came from the clerks heretofore. Now that they have been omitted and they see the arm of the law raised to strike down this expense in the other offices, they are the ones that are beginning to crave salaries. I submit that it will be better to try this great reform that we now have before us, and if experience shows, as I believe it will, that the clerks also ought to be put on salaries, then in the near future we can do that.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I am not making these suggestions because of any personal concern in the welfare of either of these clerks of these courts. I know both gentlemen only slightly. My concern is as a practicing lawyer, in seeing that these courts have efficient clerks; and I know it can not be done if you do not give them sufficient compensation to be able to pay for their deputies.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think there will be no trouble about finding deputies; and if we find that it is not giving enough, we will be swift to make the repairs; but let us have this reform inaugurated.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I hope my friend will consent that I may have the privilege of offering an amendment and discussing it in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HENDERSON. The gentleman is an old member of the Committee on Rules and knows that I have no authority to make such an agreement.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I ask unanimous consent. It can be done by unanimous consent. In other words, in making this reform make it so that it will do no injustice in particular cases.

Mr. HENDERSON. Leave that to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I am afraid that I would not get much consideration unless I should interpose now.

Mr. HENDERSON. You know very well that I have no authority to give you what you desire.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the scope of the order, when this matter is considered in the Committee of the Whole, shall be extended so that such an amendment may be considered.

Mr. TRACEY. I object.

Mr. HENDERSON. I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, ordinarily I am very much opposed to general legislation on appropriation bills; but I recognize the fact that this is a pressing question, that has been agitated many years, and that if we are to have practical legislation upon it at this session it will have to be upon an appropriation bill. Now we have once or twice—once, I recollect—before passed a bill like this on an appropriation bill. It went to the Senate, and in the Senate it was stricken out, on the idea that it had no proper place on an appropriation bill.

Another reason why this matter should be considered upon an appropriation bill, Mr. Speaker, is that if it is adopted the amounts appropriated will be different from what they are now. If you pass this appropriation bill as reported by the committee, and subsequently pass a bill providing for the salaries of these officers, it would involve a change then of that law. You would have to have another bill, changing the appropriation law; and, with the understanding that gentlemen are to have full time to discuss this matter, both in general debate and in amendments, it seems to me the condition is such that this rule ought to be adopted. I will yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. COOPER], who dissents.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I know the general uselessness of opposing resolutions coming from the Committee on Rules, but I feel confident that the committee in reporting this resolution had no other feeling than simply to submit to the House an opportunity to put this fee bill upon the appropriation bill if the House so desired.

Now, I hope the House will give me its candid attention for a brief period to a few considerations why, in my judgment, we ought not to go into this legislation in this way and at this time. The Committee on the Judiciary reported only yesterday a voluminous bill affecting the practice and the fees of the United States courts, not only in governmental and in criminal but in civil cases. How many gentlemen are there in this House who have had an opportunity to give this bill any careful consideration? I have been trying to keep up with this proposed legislation. Through the courtesy of one member of the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], I have had such information as he could give, but until yesterday he could give me no definite information as to what the legislation was to be.

Now, since this bill has come in, I have been telegraphing to Florida to try to find out from my constituents how far its provisions would affect them should it become law, and their views upon it. I say that when there is a bill of such sweeping character brought in members ought to have time enough to be able to consult with their constituents as to the manner in which it will affect them. I did not simply wish to consult with the court officers, but I wanted an opportunity to submit this bill to some of the leading practitioners of my State, as it affects all the civil business of the United States courts. In my judgment—I have not had time to verify it, but my impression is—it may heavily increase the already too burdensome expense of civil litigation in the United States courts.

The bill is crudely drawn. It is vague in language. I do not believe it does even what the committee expects to do. They put marshals on salaries but leave the deputies on fees. What is that going to accomplish of retrenchment and reform? I do not know by what rule they have been governed or how far they have preserved the equality in the proportions of the salaries of the officers of the different districts in the United States. I have not had time to examine sufficiently into that matter, although I have endeavored to do so in the brief time I have had since the report of the committee by comparing the bill with the report of the Attorney-General. And now, gentlemen, I advise you, before you make this radical revision and adopt so sweeping an act of legislation, to consult with your constituents. I take it that every man in this House ought to want, and I believe does want, a chance at least to send this bill to his constituents at home to know what they think of its details; a chance at least to consult the court officers as to how far it will reduce their compensation, and whether they are satisfied with it or not; at least a chance to submit it to the lawyers who have to practice before the United States courts.

It does not simply affect criminal business; it affects civil business largely. It changes the system of United States commissioners. It makes changes in many respects, the scope of which not a man understands who is called on to vote upon this rule to attach this bill to the general appropriation bill and run it through before we can consult with our constituents, unless he be a member of the Judiciary Committee, and I have grave doubts about even the members of that committee, for they only got the bill reported yesterday, evidently very hurriedly, for the bill itself bears traces of hurried preparation and lack of careful consideration.

Now, I do not oppose the principle of putting these officers on salaries. I favor it. If it is properly done, if it is done with due consideration, fairly and justly, it is a wise substitute for the fee system. But I do say that a bill making such great changes as this proposes ought to stand upon its own merits. At least the committee ought to have brought it here in time for us to communicate with our constituents and find out their judgment in regard to it. The bill as submitted not only makes great changes which we can not in this way adequately consider or investigate, but it does not do what it proposes to do when it puts the marshals under salary and leaves their deputies to make their living out of fees. How much will be the substantial benefit of such a bill as that? But this is not the time to discuss the merits of the measure and I do not intend to go into such discussion, but am only opposing the adoption of the rule for its hasty consideration and its attachment to an appropriation bill. I hope the rule will not pass.

Mr. CRISP. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

The SPEAKER. How much time?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I shall occupy only a few minutes. While I shall make no strenuous opposition to the adoption of this rule, I think it is proper to state why I think this is not the best method of proceeding with the very important legislation we have before us. We have presented to us a bill of about 15 pages, reported by the Judiciary Committee as a substitute for 13 different bills on this subject sent to that committee. The bill involves radical changes both as to methods and the amounts of compensation to be paid to the officers that are embraced in it. I realize the importance of some legislation in this direction. But this bill was reported to the House only yesterday. It is probable that when I get an opportunity to look through the bill, which we have not yet had, I shall find, as other gentlemen have found, that it has much of merit. But after having refused under a general rule of the House to permit amendments upon appropriation bills even when they reduce expenditures, I do not believe that it is best for us to adopt this rule and force through upon an appropriation bill a measure of so great and far-reaching importance as this. That there is a necessity for reform in the method of paying these officers I have no doubt; but when we adopt this rule, to force upon an appropriation bill a measure increasing some salaries and decreasing others, it may put members of the House in this position, that they must either vote against a general appropriation bill or vote in an appropriation bill for that which they do not approve, put on as general legislative riders. It strikes me that the better course would be to bring in a rule making a special order for the consideration of this measure upon its merits.

There would have been a more plausible pretext for the action here proposed if we were in a short session which was to end the 4th of next month, or if we did not have very ample time in front of us, or if we had resolved on being a very busy body anyway. Believing that the course which I have suggested would have been a better one to pursue in this case, I have thought it not improper for me to so state. I want to consider the bill and pass a good law on the subject, but we are most likely to do the right thing when we let it be considered and stand on its merits. Whatever time I have left I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER].

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. COOPER] is entirely mistaken in his assumption that this bill has not received most careful consideration by the Committee on the Judiciary. It was very carefully considered by the Judiciary Committee of the last House, and a bill very similar was reported to the House by the unanimous recommendation of that committee. This bill proposes no change whatever, so far as the general public is concerned. It does not affect the bar at all. It does not change the methods of procedure in the courts, and there is only one class of people in the United States pecuniarily interested in its provisions.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. BOATNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Do not the provisions of the bill affecting fees apply to civil as well as to criminal business?

Mr. BOATNER. No; not as I understand them.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. In many instances civil cases are named.

Mr. BOATNER. It may affect them so far as civil cases before United States commissioners are concerned.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Or cases to which the United States is a party.

Mr. BOATNER. But in every instance the fees are reduced. They are not increased in any way. If any change at all is made it is in the direction of a reduction.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. I think the fees are increased.

Mr. BOATNER. Now, Mr. Speaker, this is a question which demands the attention of Congress. The conduct of business in the Federal courts, throughout the South especially, is in the interest of increasing the fees of officers. The salary system will take away from these officers any incentive to prolong terms of court, to increase the per diem, or to do anything that is not necessary to be done. The only persons that the gentleman from Florida need confer with are the district attorney and the marshal of his district, and I think that if he will examine the salaries accorded to them he will find that they are proportioned to the fees which those officers have earned for the past two years.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. What about the deputy marshals?

Mr. BOATNER. They are provided for on the salary plan, and the whole tenor of the bill is to pay the officers in all instances their salaries, but to take away from them any temptation, interest, or inducement to increase the expenses of the Federal courts unnecessarily.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. You make provision in this bill that in all cases, civil and criminal, public and private, a United States deputy marshal serving a process of any kind shall be paid living expenses and traveling expenses, and so on, in addition to mileage and fees.

Mr. BOATNER. The gentleman is certainly mistaken about that.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. I am not mistaken.

Mr. BOATNER. The gentleman is certainly mistaken.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. I have practiced in the United States courts myself; and if I am mistaken on this point it is because I have not had time to read the bill carefully. But I am confident I am not mistaken.

Mr. BOATNER. Well, if there is any such provision in the bill it has escaped the attention of every member of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Does the bill take away the fees of the deputy marshals and put those officers on salaries?

Mr. BOATNER. Not altogether.

Mr. MILES. How about the United States commissioners? How are they provided for? Are they put upon salaries?

Mr. BOATNER. No. They are allowed a certain amount per diem for sitting—$5 a day in each case.

Mr. MILES. Has not experience shown that it is very often the activity of these United States commissioners that causes a very great expenditure?

Mr. BOATNER. Certainly. That is thoroughly and entirely guarded against in the bill.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. In reference to section 7 of the bill, what duties are there contemplated?

Mr. BOATNER. I have not the bill before me and I can not answer the gentleman. I did not rise for the purpose of going into the details of this measure, and of course I can not now answer questions which may be asked about particular sections of the bill, which I have not gone over since it was reprinted. But I state the general proposition that the bill will carry a large reduction of expenses, if the conditions continue as they now are; that the United States will not pay out so much money; that by taking away from these officers the inducement to prolong terms of court and to initiate unnecessary and vexatious litigation the saving will be even larger than the direct saving by the reduction in the compensation of these officers.

Mr. DOCKERY. As I understand, this is simply a proposition submitted by the Committee on Rules that it may be in order in Committee of the Whole to consider this measure.

Mr. BOATNER. Of course.

Mr. DOCKERY. Therefore it seems to me hardly proper to go into the merits of the question at all at this time.

Mr. BOATNER. Under the terms of the proposed special rule this measure will come up in the same way practically as if it were an independent proposition, the only difference being that it will be considered as an amendment to an appropriation bill. Time for general debate will be allowed, as well as debate under the five-minute rule; and there will be opportunity to offer any amendment whatever which is germane to the bill. I can not perceive, Mr. Speaker, that there can be the slightest objection to considering this measure on the terms stated in the resolution. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution reported by the Committee on Rules.

The resolution was adopted.

On motion of Mr. HENDERSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ELECTION CONTEST—ALDRICH VS. ROBBINS.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, I present two reports from the Committee on Elections No. 1 in the case of William F. Aldrich against Gaston A. Robbins. Four members of the committee agree to one of the reports, making a much larger majority in favor of the contestant than two other members, who have agreed to another report, stating the majority as they believe the figures and the evidence warrant. I ask that these reports may be printed.

Mr. DINSMORE. I will ask the chairman of the committee when he expects to call up this matter in the House?

Mr. DANIELS. We should like to call it up for consideration certainly by the first of the week after next.

Mr. DINSMORE. The minority of the committee would like sufficient time to prepare their views, and before doing so we want to examine the two reports of the majority. I think a reasonable time to be allowed us for that purpose would be a week from to-day. I believe it was agreed between the chairman of the committee and myself that we might have until Monday week for the filing of our report.

Mr. DANIELS. We desire to give these gentlemen of the minority all the time that may be requisite for the preparation of the statement of their views, while at the same time we do not wish to delay the final hearing by the House any longer than may be absolutely necessary. I think the report of the minority might be brought in certainly by the end of next week.

Mr. DINSMORE. Of course it will be necessary to have the views of the minority printed; we should like to have time to have them printed and distributed among members before the matter is called up for argument and decision by the House. We should like to have until Monday week to file our views.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman proposes, as the Chair understands, that the views of the minority be filed at that time and then printed and circulated before the case comes up.

Mr. DINSMORE. The duties imposed on the members of the minority by their work on this committee and other committees are very onerous. We do not want any unnecessary delay in this matter; but on behalf of the minority of the Elections Committee No. 1, I ask that they be allowed sufficient time to prepare and file their views. They wish to do so at the earliest possible moment; but by reason of other business requiring a portion of our attention, we should like a reasonable latitude in this matter.

Mr. DANIELS. The entire matter has been fully discussed before the committee, and the reports have been read for the information of the committee generally. For that reason I have no doubt that the gentleman fully understands the nature of the reports and substantially the grounds on which they are based. So I think, if they have until next Friday, it ought to be ample time to file the report of the minority.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman ask consent that the minority be permitted to file their views within the time specified?

Mr. DANIELS. I make that request.

The SPEAKER. At any time before the expiration of the Friday night session?

Mr. DANIELS. Certainly.

Mr. DINSMORE. Does the chairman of the committee recede from the agreement entered into with me?

Mr. DANIELS. I conferred with other members of the committee, and they seem to think that Friday would be long enough.

Mr. DINSMORE. I wish to say in reference to the reports being read in committee that while I confess I have endeavored to become somewhat familiar with the theories on which the case has been decided by the majority of the committee, at the same time I have never heard the report of either faction read. It is true that I was not at the last meeting, but I am informed by one of my colleagues that the reports were not read at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from New York that the minority of the committee have until next Friday evening to file their views. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I now renew my motion, Mr. Speaker, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would ask my friend first to permit me to make a brief statement in regard to the fee bill, with reference to which action was taken a few moments ago. I wish to state that we can not possibly, in my judgment, reach that part of the appropriation bill where that will be offered as an amendment to-night. But at all events it will not be offered to-night, so that the members will have to-day and Sunday to look up all questions in reference to it—that is, those who do not go to church. [Laughter.]

I wish to say that I have reached an agreement with the gentleman in charge of the appropriation bill so that it will not be brought up before Monday for consideration.

The motion of Mr. McCALL of Tennessee was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the services of skilled draftsmen, civil engineers, computers, accountants, assistants to the photographer, copyists, and such other services as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary and specially order, may be employed in the office of the Supervising Architect exclusively to carry into effect the various appropriations for public buildings, to be paid for from and equitably charged against such appropriations: Provided, That the expenditures on this account for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, shall not exceed $250,000; and that the Secretary of the Treasury shall each year in the annual estimates report to Congress the number of persons so employed and the amount paid to each.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I would like to ask, for the purpose of proposing an amendment if necessary, whether this is the paragraph providing for additional architects for the various public buildings?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. This is the provision, and we have increased the appropriation $50,000 for that purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. That is all I desired to know, and if there has been an increase in that regard I shall not offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Comptroller of the Treasury: For Comptroller of the Treasury, $5,500; Assistant Comptroller of the Treasury, $5,000; chief clerk, $2,700; chief law clerk, $2,700; four law clerks revising accounts and briefing opinions, one at $2,100 and three at $2,000 each; two confidential clerks of class 4, including one for the Assistant Comptroller; five clerks of class 3; two clerks of class 1; two messengers; and one assistant messenger; in all, $40,400.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 29, in line 9, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Auditor for Interior Department: For Auditor, $4,000; Deputy Auditor, $2,500; law clerk, $2,000; three chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; eight clerks of class 4; thirteen clerks of class 3; thirty-three clerks of class 2; thirty clerks of class 1; eleven clerks, at $1,000 each; six clerks, at $900 each; one clerk, $840; one assistant messenger; ten laborers; and one female laborer, $480; in all, $156,940.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 31, in lines 15 and 16, strike out "thirteen clerks of class 3, thirty-three clerks of class 2," and insert "nineteen clerks of class 3, thirty-nine clerks of class 2."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Mint at Carson, Nev.: For superintendent, $3,000; assayer, and melter and refiner, at $2,500 each; chief clerk, $1,800; bookkeeper, cashier, assistant assayer, assistant melter and refiner, and weigh clerk, at $1,500 each; in all, $17,300.

For wages of workmen, $15,000.

For incidental and contingent expenses, including wastage of operative officers, and loss on sale of sweeps, $7,500.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend this section by providing that the salary of the cashier shall be $2,000 instead of $1,500, and the salary of the bookkeeper $1,800 instead of $1,500. In other words, I move to restore the salaries which have hitherto been paid.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest to my friend in charge of the bill that we have passed the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. In what line does the amendment come in?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Beginning in line 18, on page 51.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman reduce his amendment to writing?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will withdraw the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Assay office at Boise, Idaho: For assayer, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $2,000; one clerk, $1,200; in all, $3,200.

For wages of workmen, $7,500.

For incidental and contingent expenses, $2,500.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the words "two thousand five hundred," in lines 1 and 2, page 55, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "three thousand nine hundred."

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I will state the reason for that amendment. It is for the purpose of securing a cement walk around the block of ground in Boise City, Idaho, where this United States assay office is located. Many years ago the city of Boise gave the United States a block of ground for the purpose of locating an assay office thereon. This block of ground is one of the most beautiful blocks we have in that city. It has been planted with shrubbery, trees, and flowers, and is cared for as Government property ought to be cared for. Recently that city voted bonds, by a two-thirds vote, for the purpose of building cement sidewalks over a large area, including this block. These walks are about to be constructed. This beautiful block, belonging to the Government of the United States, will soon be surrounded by cement walks, and, unless it is likewise improved, will be an eyesore in the midst of what would otherwise be a very attractive section of the city. This recommendation has been made by the United States assayer in charge there, and I will now send this letter to the Clerk's desk and have it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE UNITED STATES ASSAY OFFICE AT BOISE CITY,
Office of Assayer in Charge, December 12, 1895.

DEAR SIR: I beg to call your attention to the appropriation for this office for the ensuing year, and request that you use your influence in behalf of its passage by Congress.

The volume of business now handled here taxes the capacity of our working force and appliances to the utmost. The increase during the coming year will be considerable, and it will take the full amount of my estimate to conduct the office to the best advantage for the mining community, as well as to do justice to the office force. You are well aware of the need of a walk around the balance of this block, I have included in my estimate for the purpose of completing the walk the sum of $1,440. This is the actual amount needed to build the walk and curbing, figured on the basis of what has already been constructed.

I will thank you to cooperate with our Senators in these matters, and use your best efforts for us in this direction.

Very respectfully,

F. F. CHURCH,
Assayer in Charge.

Hon. EDGAR WILSON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Now, I will say that the business of this assay office is not decreasing, but the receipts have been advancing year after year. Last year there was taken in at this office over $1,200,000 in gold, an increase of more than $300,000 over the previous fiscal year, amounting to about 33⅓ per cent. The Government has constructed a cement walk on one side of this block heretofore, but there are three sides yet unimproved. Based on the cost of improving this one side, the remainder will cost $1,440. That amount has been recommended by the assayer in charge, and his recommendation has been concurred in by the Director of the Mint, but for some reason or other in the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury that item was not carried. I have seen the Director of the Mint this morning, and he tells me that he is in favor of this appropriation. He has visited this assay office and knows the necessity for this improvement and therefore recommends it.

Mr. CANNON. What is this—a street improvement?

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. It is a sidewalk around a block belonging to the Government of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. In the street?

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. No; a sidewalk.

Mr. CANNON. Where is the sidewalk?

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Like the sidewalks of this or any other city.

Mr. CANNON. A part of the street, is it not?

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. No, it is not a part of the street. The Government has already built a sidewalk on one side of this block.

Mr. CANNON. Is it off the street or on the street? That is what I am trying to get at.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. They are like the sidewalks in the city of Washington.

Mr. CANNON. The sidewalks in the city of Washington are a part of the streets.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Technically they may be. I do not know about that. Everybody in this House knows what a sidewalk is as distinguished from the street.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly, and I want to say to my friend that all the members of this House who have public buildings in their districts understand that these improvements are not paid for by the United States, but, as the sites are free from taxation, are paid for by the cities in which the buildings are located. It is for the city to make the improvement if it is to be made. I find it is so in my town, and so generally. I only wanted to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that if we make a departure here, why of course we will have to make it all along the line.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Now, I will say, in answer to the gentleman——

Mr. CANNON. I am glad the gentleman submits his remarks, and I will yield him five minutes more if he desires.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. I will say, in answer to that, that the Government has already established a precedent here by constructing the sidewalk on one side—that is, one-fourth of the total sidewalk around the block. That is a matter of record, and it is recommended by the Director of the Mint in this case. Now, there is no way by which the city can do this, because the property owners are required to build the sidewalks, but the Government of the United States is the property owner in this instance, and ought to improve its property as the individual owners are required to do with theirs.

As a further reason why this improvement is necessary and advisable, I may be permitted to state that Boise City is one of the thriving towns of the far West and destined to rapid advancement in the near future. It is the capital of the State, and so designated in the constitution for a period of twenty years. The census of 1890 showed a population of 2,311; a recent municipal census taken shows a population of 7,124. More than 115 new buildings were erected during the year 1895, and many others are now in process of construction.

The largest financial institutions of the State are located there and an extensive wholesale and retail business is transacted by the merchants.

Boise is located in the celebrated Boise Valley. The climate is delightful in summer and never severe, the winter climate being milder than that of Washington. The most productive fruit lands of the Pacific Coast region are located near there, and a vast gold-bearing mineral belt forms a half circle to the east, north, and northwest of the city, while the far-famed Owyhee mines are to the southwest. Recent discoveries in these gold fields have proven their richness, and already many paying properties have been located and are being developed.

The Director of the Mint assures me that the increase in the receipts of the assay office for the past year is being kept up, and that there is every indication that the office will take in during the fiscal year 1896 more than sixteen hundred thousand dollars in gold. While the receipts of the assay offices at Carson City, St. Louis, and Charlotte have materially decreased, those at Boise City and Helena have experienced an increase hitherto unprecedented.

The low price of silver and lead has caused our miners to seek for the yellow metal so much worshiped by our Eastern friends. Idaho is rich in her varied resources, and if the avarice of the world will force a decrease in our primary money by the demonetization of silver, the citizens of Idaho will turn their attention to the discovery of gold. Having been forced to do this, the result of their industry has demonstrated the richness of her resources in this respect. Every indication points to the fact that she will astonish the civilized world in her gold production in the near future. The center of this production, the point most directly benefited as a result of it, is Boise City.

The agricultural and horticultural resources of the area of country immediately surrounding it are great enough to necessitate the building of a city there. When these are supplemented by almost inexhaustible mineral deposits, the successful future of this thriving little city is not open to conjecture. It has doubled its population in the last two years when some of these resources were almost unknown. With their rapid development now going on, it is fair to assume that a city of at least 50,000 inhabitants will be created there within the next decade.

For these reasons the House ought not to exhibit a parsimonious spirit in appropriations of this character.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say only a few words in reference to this amendment. The committee has allowed the amount of the estimate they had before them, and in addition, if this item should be increased to $100,000, not one dime of it could be used for the purpose for which the gentleman seeks to use it.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. It has been so used.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I understand this fund can not be diverted from the purposes for which it is appropriated. This is "for incidental and contingent expenses," and no officer of the Government has a right to use it for pavement or any other such purpose.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. It has been used in that way for this identical building.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. If it was done, it was done in violation of law.

Mr. DOCKERY. Clearly.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. It was done under authority of the Director of the Mint.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Possibly so; but if it was done, it was done in violation of law. Where money is appropriated for a specific purpose it can not be diverted to any other purpose.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. What are "incidental expenses"?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Why, it is for running the mint at Boise, in Idaho. Now, this is "for incidental and contingent expenses," and it can not be appropriated for building sidewalks.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. You provide in another section for the payment of the help.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. This is for incidental expenses, covering things that do not fall within wages of the workmen who are doing labor there; but it would extend to buying stuff to keep the place in order, for coal, ice, and such matters.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. And you have got to build a sidewalk to make it respectable.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Why, then, you must offer an amendment so as to cover that point.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. It has been done under it.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. If it has been done under it, it has been in violation of law.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. I do not think so.

Mr. DOCKERY. Clearly so. I do not think the Comptroller would pass an account of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 28, noes 32.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Territory of New Mexico: For governor, $2,600; chief justice and four associate judges, at $3,000 each; secretary, $1,800; and interpreter and translator in the executive office, $500; $19,900.

For contingent expenses of the Territory, to be expended by the governor, $500.

For legislative expenses, namely: For rent, light, fuel, ice, stationery, record files, record casings, printing, postage, clerks, messenger and porter, and incidentals in secretary's office; compensation of members and officers of the legislative assembly, mileage, printing, stationery, record books, rent, furniture, and incidentals for legislative assembly, $26,000.

Mr. CATRON. I offer an amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting at the end of line 9, page 58, the following:

"Provided, That the next session of the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico shall commence on the first Monday in May, 1897, and each succeeding session thereof shall commence on the first Monday in May of every odd-numbered year thereafter.

"That when the members of the legislative assemblies shall have met at the capital of said Territory to hold a session of the legislative assembly, the council shall be organized by the election of a president pro tempore by the members of that body present holding certificates of election issued to them by the proper canvassing boards of the respective counties, in the manner provided by the laws of said Territory, provided a majority of all the members required by law to constitute the council be present.

"Thereupon some one of said members present, holding such certificate of election, shall administer the oath of office to such president pro tempore, and the said president pro tempore shall thereupon administer the oath of office to the remainder of the members of the council present, after which said council shall be organized by the election of the permanent officers of the council provided for by the laws of the United States only.

"That the house of representatives shall be organized by the election of a speaker pro tempore by the members of that body present holding certificates of election issued to them by the proper canvassing boards of the respective counties in the manner provided by the laws of said Territory, provided a majority of all the members required to constitute the house of representatives be present; thereupon some one of said members present, holding such certificate of election, shall administer the oath of office to such speaker pro tempore, and the said speaker pro tempore shall thereupon administer the oath of office to the remainder of the members of the house of representatives present, after which said house of representatives shall be organized by the election of the permanent officers of the house of representatives provided for by the laws of the United States only.

"Provided further, That no other officer of either house of said legislative assembly shall be elected or appointed or paid out of any moneys appropriated by the Congress of the United States or by the legislative assembly of said Territory than such as may be provided for by the laws of the United States."

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. CATRON. Mr. Chairman, I will explain this amendment briefly. The amendment involves three propositions: First, to fix the time of the meeting of the next legislative assembly on the 1st day of May. This is rendered necessary, because the legislature, as it meets now, meets during Christmas week, and a large portion of the time of the legislature is lost on account of that fact. It has been held that the legislative assembly can not change this, because the act of Congress which authorizes the meeting fixed this time for the year 1897, and provides it should be held every two years thereafter. It is provided by the laws of New Mexico that the legislature shall meet on the last Monday of December. The election takes place in November, and there is no opportunity given under the law as it stands to get up a contested election case, to have the testimony taken and the case heard and disposed of. The returns have to be made up to the secretary of the Territory within fifteen days after the election; thirty days are given in which to file a notice of contest; eight days to reply, and thirty days more to commence taking testimony, and it is to be concluded in sixty days, so that every legislature is concluded before any testimony can be concluded.

The next proposition is to provide how that assembly shall be organized. That is made necessary by the act of Congress, which provides that the secretary of the Territory, who is to make up the list, is alone authorized to administer the oath of office to the members of the Territorial legislature. In doing that he fixes up the rolls to suit himself and may disregard, as he did at the last legislative assembly, the certificates of election that were given by the proper canvassing boards in the various counties. He makes up the rolls to suit himself; he swears in the members whom he puts on the list, and he absolutely ignores the certificates of the various members when it suits him. He swore in one person on a telegram received by him on the very day and at the very moment that he was proceeding to swear the members, received by him from a board of county commissioners which had become functus officio, yet actually met at that identical moment and decided that another man was entitled to the seat, he thereby ignoring the member holding the certificate regularly issued and presented to him. In that way he absolutely set aside the entire will of the people in that county and admitted another person to the seat of a member legally elected.

The next proposition is to provide that no other officer of the Territorial legislature shall be paid, either by the United States or by the Territory, than those provided for by the Congress of the United States.

There is a law of the United States which provides that "no law of any Territorial legislature shall be made or enforced by which the governor or secretary of the Territory or the members or officers of any Territorial legislature are paid any compensation other than that provided by the laws of the United States." It has been held up to the last legislature that that United States statute prohibited the Territorial legislature from making appropriations for any other officers than those provided for by the acts of Congress; but the last legislature, by resolution of the two houses, authorized the employment of about 50 additional employees for each house, and provided by an appropriation out of the Territorial treasury, amounting to about $13,000, to pay such employees. The district court in the county where the legislature met issued an injunction against the auditor, prohibiting him from issuing treasury warrants to pay this money; but upon an appeal taken to the supreme court (the same legislature having passed a law authorizing the supreme court to convene for the purpose of passing upon this question) the court overruled the action of the lower court. It was, however, the opinion of nearly every member of the bar of the Territory that the United States law I have cited limited the legislature to the employees provided for by the laws of the United States and that they had no power to make this additional appropriation. Now, these amendments apply to the Territory of New Mexico only, and they are what those people desire and what they have requested me to ask Congress to give them.

Mr. DOCKERY. This is the first time I have heard this proposition, and while I am not inclined to interpose a point of order against it, I ask unanimous consent that this paragraph, with the pending point of order, go over until the conclusion of the bill, as I would like an opportunity to examine the question.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Will that be satisfactory to the gentleman from New Mexico?

Mr. CATRON. Oh, yes. Of course I wish the matter to be examined properly, and do not desire to hurry it along unduly.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman will understand, I hope, that my request is not prompted by any hostility to his proposition.

Mr. CATRON. Certainly. I am perfectly content with the arrangement the gentleman suggests.

There being no objection, it was ordered as requested by Mr. DOCKERY.

The Clerk read as follows:

Territory of Oklahoma: For governor, $2,600; chief justice and four associate judges, at $3,000 each; and secretary, $1,800; $19,400.

For contingent expenses of the Territory, to be expended by the governor, $500.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 16, page 58, strike out "five hundred" and insert "one thousand"; so that the paragraph will read: "For contingent expenses," etc., "$1,000."

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Chairman, the House, ever since I have been a member of it, has always allowed the governor of Oklahoma a thousand dollars for contingent expenses. That sum is absolutely necessary for the proper conduct of the business of his office. I have been in his office when he has received as many as 300 letters a day. The Territorial legislature appropriated $800 in scrip for him to employ a secretary. This appropriation is all the money that he has to carry on the business of his office, pay the expenses, pay a stenographer, who is absolutely necessary to the conduct of the business. Any business man engaged in the same line of work would be allowed by any corporation that employed him a great deal larger sum than I have asked for here. The present governor, for whom I have always asked this appropriation, which the House has always granted, is not of my political faith, but I believe in treating him as I would treat any other business man engaged in transacting the business of the people. You propose to limit him here to $500. He has to spend over $1,000, and you therefore ask him to go down into his own pocket and pay the balance out of his salary, which is less than that provided by existing law, because the salary of the governor is fixed by law at $3,000 and you allow only $2,600. I do not ask you to raise the governor's salary, but I do ask you to allow him sufficient money to enable him to transact the business of his office to the satisfaction of the people. I trust there will be no opposition from the committee to this proposition. The House has always voted $1,000 for this purpose and I trust that they will do it now, even if the committee should object.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I suppose my friend from Oklahoma is going upon the idea that when the House has done this Territory one favor it must continue to do it favors always. I understand him to say that the governor of his Territory has always been voted a thousand dollars for contingent expenses. In that the Territory has been more fortunate than any other Territory in this country, because it is the uniform rule of the House to appropriate only $500 for the contingent expenses of the Territorial governor's offices, and that rule has been adhered to except in the case of Oklahoma. Heretofore the governor of Oklahoma has been receiving $1,000, according to the gentleman, for this purpose, and in that way the gentleman representing that Territory has become rather spoiled, I suppose, so he wants that amount continued. I can not see why it is that the governor of Oklahoma should require $1,000 for this purpose, while in all the other Territories only $500 has been allowed, and it does occur to me that if the people of Oklahoma would simmer down a little and get into a higher state of civilization they would not require so much more money for the contingent expenses of their governor than is required by the other Territories. [Laughter.] I think the committee has acted uniformly and justly and has given to all the Territories the same amount of money for this purpose, and I do not think we ought to increase the amount in the case of Oklahoma. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Chairman, all I desire to say is that if the State of Tennessee, or the district represented by the gentleman in charge of this bill, had been in the chaotic condition which he undertakes to ascribe to Oklahoma, and had arrived at the stage of civilization and intelligence which Oklahoma has reached, this House ought to be willing to make an appropriation for it. I make the statement, without fear of contradiction, that the governor of Oklahoma has more business to attend to than the governors of all the other Territories combined. In making this appropriation of a thousand dollars you are not discriminating against the other Territories; you are allowing them for expenses in proportion to the amount of business their governors have to transact, and if you do not make this appropriation for the governor of Oklahoma you are simply requiring him to go down into his pocket and spend out of his small salary, which, as I have said, is less than the law allows him, the money that is required to transact the business of the people.

The question being taken on the amendment, the Chairman declared the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee asked for a division.

On a division the amendment was adopted—ayes 70, noes 10.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Office of the Secretary: For compensation of the Secretary of the Interior, $8,000; First Assistant Secretary, $4,500; Assistant Secretary, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,500, and $250 additional as superintendent of the Patent Office building; 9 members of a board of pension appeals, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, at $2,000 each; special land inspector connected with the administration of the public land service, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior and to be subject to his direction, $2,500; clerk in charge of documents, $2,000; custodian, who shall give bond in such sum as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, $2,000; six clerks, chiefs of division, one of whom shall be disbursing clerk, at $2,000 each; four clerks, at $2,000 each; private secretary to the Secretary of the Interior, $2,000; eleven clerks of class 4; nine clerks of class 3; bookkeeper for custodian, $1,200; thirteen clerks of class 2; twenty-four clerks of class 1, two of whom shall be stenographers or typewriters; returns office clerk, $1,200; female clerk to be designated by the President to sign land patents, $1,200; two clerks, at $1,000 each; one clerk, $900; seven copyists; telephone operator, $900; three messengers; six assistant messengers; fourteen laborers; two skilled mechanics, one at $900 and one at $720; two carpenters, at $900 each; one laborer, $600; one packer, $660; conductor of elevator, $720; four charwomen; captain of the watch, $1,000; forty watchmen; additional to two watchmen acting as lieutenants of watchmen, at $120 each; engineer, $1,200; assistant engineer, $1,000; and seven firemen; in all, $220,070.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 75, line 6, after the word "dollars," in said line, amend by adding the following:

"But the said Secretary of the Interior shall, before receiving his said compensation or any portion thereof, make proof by affidavit before any person legally competent to administer oaths that he has fully and faithfully administered and executed the laws of the United States pertaining to the said Department of the Interior."

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I make a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New Jersey on the point of order.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this proposition is perfectly in order. It does not propose to alter present legislation; it simply institutes the means by which the Secretary of the Interior shall secure his compensation. Sir, we see to-day this state of facts: The Secretary of the Interior, together with his extinguished coadjutor, selects the laws of the United States which they shall respectively enforce, while they stubbornly, persistently, and contumaciously refuse to execute or even to pay any attention to the other laws enacted by Congress. I say it is our duty to withhold their compensation until they faithfully and conscientiously comply with the laws of Congress.

This amendment does not propose the enactment of new legislation; it simply provides the manner by which these officers may procure their salaries. Receipts for salaries are not provided by law, although required. This further requirement is of the same character.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mine inspectors: For salaries of three mine inspectors, authorized by the act approved March 3, 1891, for the protection of the lives of miners in the Territories, at $2,000 per annum each, $6,000.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in the pending paragraph the word "three," in line 1, and insert the word "two," and in line 5 strike out "six" and insert "four"; so as to read:

"For salaries of two mine inspectors authorized by the act approved March 3, 1891, for the protection of the lives of miners in the Territories, at $2,000 per annum each, $4,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence at a rate not exceeding $3 per day each, while absent from their homes on duty, and for actual necessary traveling expenses of said inspectors, $5,000.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I move the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out at the end of the pending paragraph the words "five thousand dollars" and insert "$3,350."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem, when absent from home and traveling on duty outside the District of Columbia, for special examiners or other persons employed in the Bureau of Pensions, detailed for the purpose of making special investigations pertaining to said Bureau, in lieu of expenses for subsistence, not exceeding $3 per day, and for actual and necessary expenses for transportation and assistance and any other necessary expenses, including telegrams, $500,000: Provided, That two special examiners, or clerks, detailed and acting as chief and assistant chief of the division of special examiners, may be allowed from this appropriation, in addition to their salaries and in lieu of per diem and all expenses for subsistence, a sum sufficient to make their annual compensation $2,000 and $1,800, respectively, and whenever it may be necessary for either of them to travel on official business outside the District of Columbia by special direction of the Commissioner, he shall receive the same allowance in lieu of subsistence and for transportation as is herein provided for special examiners and detailed clerks engaged in field service; and the Secretary of the Interior shall so apportion the sum herein appropriated as to prevent a deficiency therein.

Mr. GIBSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the whole paragraph beginning with line 8, on page 81, and ending with line 5, on page 82.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I can not get the consent of my heart to vote $695,000 to pay special pension examiners. The original object of a special examination was all right; and if we always had honest, impartial, patriotic men for special examiners I would be willing to let the appropriation stand. But I regret to say that there has now arisen a new Pharaoh in Egypt who does not know Joseph. Other rulers are in the land, and the disposition now is not to help the old soldier or his widow, but to put every possible obstacle in their way; and the special pension examiners are now employed in the business of showing all pension claimants how not to do anything. They constitute a very important part of the stupendous machinery now devised to do the maximum amount of grinding and make the minimum amount of meal. We have heard of "the mills of the gods" that grind exceeding slow, but grind exceeding fine. This special examination mill of the Pension Bureau not only grinds exceeding slow, but grinds exceeding coarse. In fact, they grind out but little more than noise.

A POLICY OF DELAY.

Indeed, these special pension examiners have inaugurated a policy of very demonstrative make-believe, a big show of pretense and sham, much thunder but no lightning, a great deal of smoke but no fire, many blossoms but no fruit, a profusion of promises but an awful dearth of performances. The claimants call for an egg, but are given a stone; they ask for a fish, but are given a serpent.

These pension examiners seem never to think of the great fact that these old soldiers and the husbands of these old widows are the men whose blood and toil and health and life are the price, more precious than the gold of California or the diamonds of Golconda, paid the god of war for the salvation of our country, and that had it not been for these patriotic heroes there would now be no Government to pay them a big salary to travel over the country and make a display of their fine garments and wonderful wisdom.

POOR MEN DID THE FIGHTING.

These pension examiners never seem to realize the tremendous debt of gratitude they owe, and we all owe, to the Union soldiers.

In their estimation every soldier is a fraud, and every soldier's widow an impostor and a cheat, provided always they are poor. If the soldier is rich, wears fine clothes, and lives in a fine house, and moves in the best society, presto! change; all is very different. This sort of a soldier at once becomes a hero, and the pension examiner becomes a driveling sycophant. So, if the widow is a lady of fashion, dresses in silk, and has two or three daughters to grace a handsomely furnished parlor, then she becomes at once transfigured into the widow of a patriot and mighty man of valor, and her pension claim is forthwith reported on favorably.

The men who fight battles and win victories do not go dressed in purple and fine linen, but wear the garb of honest toil and their hands are rough, and it may be their faces unshaven and their hair uncut; but you will find—

> The gloomy outside, like a rusty chest,
> Contains the shining treasure of a soul
> Resolved and brave.

These pension examiners should remember that the men who saved the life of their country did not all come out of the palaces of the rich or the parlors of the fashionable. A vast majority of them came out of the fields, the workshops, the homes of the humble, and the cabins of the poor. But, alas! some of these pension examiners remember nothing but their self-importance. Some of them talk and act as though they themselves were the royal bestowers of every pension granted, and that, like the Lord, they give and they take away, and blessed are their names. [Laughter.]

FRAUDS ON PENSIONERS ENCOURAGED.

And when one of them has defrauded an old soldier or a soldier's widow out of their honest dues he says, "Behold how much I have saved!" and his superior officers pat him on the back and say, "Well done, good and faithful servant, you have cheated one soldier, now go on and cheat as many more as you can; and the more you cheat the bigger we will make your salary."

It is safe to say that for every two dollars saved by these special examiners one of them represents the lifeblood of a faithful soldier or a soldier's widow. I have heard of "blood money" before, but this is the first time in the history of any country that I ever heard of its Government boasting of the lifeblood it had drawn from the very hearts of the men who saved the life of that country.

Many of the pension examiners now in the field are men who are disloyal at heart, who secretly hate the men who saved the Union, especially if they are poor men, and, above all, hate Southern Union men. And I am sorry to say that some pension examiners born and raised in the North fail to do the Southern Union men that full measure of justice they so richly deserve. Their doctrine seems to be that no good thing can come out of Nazareth, and that there are no real Union men south of the Ohio, and if there are any that they are entitled to no consideration.

PRETENSE OF AIDING CLAIMANTS.

The Commissioner of Pensions says that he sends out these special examiners to aid the claimants in making their proof. What a horrible irony! Talk of sending out wolves to protect lambs, or eagles to protect doves. I have been told of many cases where these special examiners have falsely, corruptly, and maliciously reported that claimants had made fatal admissions, and in this way have robbed them of their rights.

And how can we expect it to be otherwise when these special examiners are rewarded for every robbery they perpetrate and every crime they commit against the Union soldier or soldier's widow? They hang their heads like sheep-killing dogs when they fail to defeat a pension, and flap their wings and crow for joy when they have succeeded in depriving some old soldier or soldier's widow of the pension their country has declared is their just and deserved reward.

I know some of them have practiced hypocrisy and pretended to be the friend of the soldier and the soldier's widow, but they soon began to realize that the people regarded them as wolves in sheep's clothing, and now many of them openly admit that their chief business is to cut the old soldiers and their widows out of their pension rights, and this business they are prosecuting with a zeal akin to that of a bloodhound on the trail of his victim.

PENSION EXAMINERS BECOME PROSECUTORS.

Almost every pension examiner becomes both a prosecutor and a persecutor; and, like most prosecuting officers, regards every man and woman as guilty until they prove themselves innocent beyond a reasonable doubt; and, as a result, the most unfavorable construction is put upon all the evidence made by the claimant, and every inference and presumption is one of guilt. The inquisitors of the Spanish persecution were often not more heartless or more relentless or more diabolical in their efforts to convict the victims of their suspicion than are many of these pension examiners in their efforts to rob old soldiers and old soldiers' widows of their right to that pension which their country has promised them and which all patriotic people desire them to have.

I have heard of cases where the zeal displayed by pension examiners in trying to deprive a soldier or soldier's widow of a pension could not have been exceeded by that of the supposed fiends of pandemonium in their efforts to rob the Christian of his religion or the saint of his charity.

Many of these special pension examiners imagine that it is one of their high prerogatives to guard and protect the Treasury of the United States from what they are pleased to term "pension raiders." Some of them dub themselves "watchdogs of the Treasury," and begin to bark as soon as they see an old soldier or a soldier's widow. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to good, honest, faithful watchdogs, but deliver me from so many watch pups who do nothing but bark, and only bark for fear some other dog will get a part of their meat. [Laughter.]

THE WRONGS DONE CLAIMANTS.

Some of these special examiners, when charged with their criminal and disloyal acts of atrocity and iniquity, have the effrontery to pretend that they are the friends of the soldier and the soldier's widow. May the good genius of my country forever protect the old soldiers and their widows from such friendship. Cæsar had such a friend in Brutus, Washington had such a friend in Benedict Arnold, and Christ had such a friend in Judas Iscariot.

It is safe to say that thousands of brave old soldiers who have been robbed of their pensions by these pension examiners, aided and abetted by their superiors in the Pension Bureau, thousands of as noble and patriotic soldiers as ever fought under our country's flag, thousands of these men thus infamously robbed of their rights, have died of slow starvation amid their half-starved children; and the pension examiners who robbed them of their just rights, in the sight of God and in the sight of all honest and patriotic men, are as much the murderers of these old soldiers as though they had given them a slow poison and thus caused their premature death; and I do not envy the heart of the pension examiner who rejoices, gloats over the monstrous fact that he has robbed an old soldier or a soldier's widow of that pension he or she is justly entitled to under the laws of their country.

HOW PENSIONERS ARE ROBBED.

Mr. Chairman, it is as dishonest, as wicked, as corrupt, to cheat a soldier or a soldier's widow out of a pension as it is to cheat you out of your money or your houses or lands; and if I were about to employ a man to handle my money I would no more risk one of these pension examiners I have been describing than I would select wolves to guard my sheep, or foxes to take care of my poultry, or the imps of Satan to teach my children. And yet these are the men who have the power given them to say whether our brave soldiers and their widows and children are entitled to pensions! And, Mr. Chairman, I am asked to vote $695,000 out of the public Treasury to enable these men to continue their career of outrage and infamy. I will never do it; never, never, never! I regard the vast majority of these special examiners as the implacable enemies of the old soldiers and their widows, and I will never vote a cent to pay men to persecute them and defraud them of their rights. [Applause.]

Many of these pension examiners pride themselves on the fact that they have succeeded in cutting this old soldier or that old soldier's widow out of a pension, and boast of their success and gloat over it as though they had done some honorable deed, whereas their deed is commended by none but traitors and cowards. The crimes committed by some of these pension examiners will haunt them as long as they live, provided their consciences ever become sensitive enough to be affected by the cathode rays of the truth. Then will—

> The foul misdeeds of former times
> Wring with remorse their guilty breasts,
> And ghosts of unforgiven crimes
> Murder their rest.

OUTRAGES BY PENSION EXAMINERS.

When Moses sent the spies into the Promised Land, all but two of them brought back awful reports of the Anakim and Zamzummim that were in the land. And so these special examiners who are sent as spies among the old soldiers and soldiers' widows bring back dreadful news of the Anakim soldiers and the Zamzummim widows who are proposing to bankrupt the Treasury and debauch the Government. [Laughter.]

Out of every twelve spies sent out by the Pension Bureau, there are only about two Calebs and Joshuas—only two who report the real truth and do justice. And I hope these false special examiners will remember the fate of the false spies; and it would be well for them not to forget what happened to Ananias.

Such being the character of so many of these pension examiners, who are going up and down the earth and to and fro in it like their great exemplar who robbed old Job of the pension given him by the Lord, and tried to rob him of his integrity, such being the character and mission of so many of these pension examiners, I can not get the consent of my heart to vote another dollar, or another cent, to pay another one of them for another day. I would greatly prefer to have a few undeserved pensions granted than to have the brave men and good widows of our country insulted and outraged by a lot of self-important and imperious upstarts who imagine that they are the people and that wisdom will die with them. [Laughter.]

These pension examiners seem to feed on Cæsarian food, whereby they have grown so great that the average Union soldier or soldier's widow looks to them like a mere worm of the earth, fit for nothing but to be trod on and crushed into the ground. They are like the officeholders so well described by Shakespeare when he wrote:

Man, proud man,
Drest in a little brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assured,
His glassy essence, like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven,
As make the angels weep.

EXAMINERS IN EAST TENNESSEE.

Mr. Chairman, you ought to see one of these special pension examiners down in East Tennessee. In the first place he goes down there believing that there are very few Union men in the South, and that very few of these men were in the Union Army, and that most of these rendered little or no service. And when they go down into the mountain land I represent and see one of my constituents clad in homespun, perhaps wearing a hunting shirt and moccasins, and his wife and daughters wearing clothing woven and made by their own hand, these pension examiners forget that the men who fought the battle of Kings Mountain, who drove Lord Cornwallis out of North Carolina, who fought under Marion and Sumter in the swamps of South Carolina, and who defeated the bravest soldiers of England at the battle of New Orleans were clad in hunting shirts and moccasins, and that braver soldiers or better men can be found nowhere on God's green earth.

Accustomed to see men clad exclusively in store clothes, and judging men entirely by their garb, himself arrayed in a dude costume that would have excited the envy of Solomon in all his glory, the average pension examiner at once writes down all these homespun people as frauds, unworthy of consideration, and having no rights he is bound to respect.

And yet, when you go to the real worth of men the garb counts for nothing and the fashion has no weight. The soldiers of East Tennessee have made a record that the historian will love to dwell on.

Within the oyster's shell uncouth
The purest pearl may bide;
Trust me, you'll find a heart of truth
Within their rough outside.

Yes, and a heart that is as loyal to the flag as the needle is to the north star.

These proud, supercilious pension examiners are no more to be compared to my mountain constituents than a jaybird to a turkey gobbler.

And what is true in East Tennessee, I am satisfied, is more or less true of the whole country. Poor men and poor women receive poor treatment from these special examiners. I have often noted, and others have often noted, that claimants who are rich or influential soon have their pensions allowed even when not meritorious, whereas claimants who are poor, needy, and friendless are delayed and delayed, no matter how deserving they may be or how strong their proof.

THE COMING CHANGE.

I know there are a few special examiners whose hearts feel kindly toward Union soldiers and their widows, and who take pleasure in aiding them to obtain that justice they so well deserve and yet which has been so long delayed. But they are few in number and are growing fewer every day, because they know it is unpopular with their superiors for them to act fairly toward the old soldiers and their widows. I would like to see these few noble exceptions retained in office, but I am satisfied they will all soon be called in or silenced.

I know my constituents are opposed to any special pension examiners; at least to such as we now have. When we Republicans come into power next year I shall favor a weeding out of the soldier-haters in the Pension Bureau and putting in there men who honor the old soldiers who saved the life of our country and respect and reverence their widows as mothers in Israel. Not another dollar to pay pension examiners will I ever willingly vote until they have all repented of their sins and been baptized anew in the fountain of patriotism and have proved their change of heart by their change of conduct. [Applause.]

(During the delivery of the foregoing remarks, when Mr. GIBSON'S five minutes had expired, unanimous consent was granted, on motion of Mr. SHERMAN, that he be granted five minutes additional.)

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. GIBSON, it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an additional force of 150 special examiners for one year, at a salary of $1,300 each, $195,000; and no person so appointed shall be employed in the State from which he is appointed; and any of those now employed in the Pension Office or as special examiners may be reappointed if they be found to be qualified.

Mr. GIBSON. I move to amend by striking out the paragraph just read.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of office for the surveyor-general [of Colorado], fuel, books, pay of messenger, stationery, and other incidental expenses, $2,500.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I offer the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, page 90, strike out "$2,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,500."

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, in connection with this amendment I wish to have read at the Clerk's desk a letter from the surveyor-general of the State of Colorado which I received on the day before yesterday.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF UNITED STATES SURVEYOR-GENERAL,
DISTRICT OF COLORADO,
Denver, February 24, 1896.

SIR: In connection with the annual appropriation, under the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, for the contingent expense of this office for the next fiscal year, I respectfully represent that owing to the wonderful increase in mineral surveying it will require about $4,000, certainly not less than $3,500, to meet the requirements. I now have 60 people employed and could employ 25 more to a good advantage if space and office furniture would admit. As it is, every desk and chair is occupied.

I am writing a similar letter to Senator TELLER, and trust that you will both look after this matter, in order that I may be able to purchase more furniture and tools with which to work, and thus give our people at least reasonable service in the matter of the approval of mineral surveys.

The appropriation for contingent expenses for the present fiscal year was $2,500. The office rent, tools, stationery, furniture, binding, and every other incidental expense have to be paid from that fund.

The deposit fee of $30 for each mineral location is used exclusively for the payment of salaries in connection with mineral surveys. It would therefore be necessary to have an increased appropriation this year, or the patrons of the office will be required to wait from six months to one year for the approval of their surveys after filing the notes thereof.

The salaries of the clerks in this office now amount to about $200 per diem, while the deposits made for mineral surveys amount to about $500 per diem, and you can readily perceive that it will only require a short time to place the office in a very awkward position in the matter of preparing surveys for approval within a reasonable time, and thus satisfy the patrons who have deposited the money to pay for this work.

Very respectfully,
THOS. D. ROBINSON,
Surveyor-General.

Hon. JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is for the purpose of increasing the fund set apart for the contingent expenses of the surveyor-general's office at Denver from $2,500, the amount fixed in the bill, to $3,500 for the coming year.

That increase is necessitated by the fact that there is a very rapid development of the mineral lands in that region, and the surveyor-general has indicated in the letter I had read from the desk that if the contingent fund is not increased and a sufficient amount given to carry on the work of the office to enable the office force to be increased and have facilities for doing the work the people having the surveys made will not get them approved for six months or a year afterwards.

It will appear upon an examination of the matter that this is a paying office, returning to the Government $500 a day, while the expenses of the office are only about $200 a day. In view of that fact it seems to me when this office is returning so large an amount to the Government every day that the small increase of the current expense of $1,000 asked for by this amendment should be granted without any hesitancy.

The object of the increase, as I have said, is to expedite the issuing and the approving of the patents and the issuing and approving of the surveys, and certainly it can not be claimed that the proposition is other than right and proper. These people who have the surveys of these mineral lands made should certainly not be required to undergo a delay of six months or a year in order to get the same approved. The amount is a small one that I ask, and although the surveyor-general asked $4,000 increase in the letter that I have had read, I have only proposed in the amendment the small increase of $1,000.

I am sure that on reflection there will be found no objection to the matter, and I trust the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the gentleman from Colorado, his purpose in asking this additional appropriation is to enable the parties who do the work which is required to be done in that office to have more room, owing, as he states, to the increased surveys of mineral land in that region.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is for the purpose of allowing the men to have facilities to do the work. This small appropriation is asked to enable them to provide the additional improvements that are absolutely necessary in order to expedite the work.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. Then, I understand that the purpose of the appropriation is to provide more cushioned chairs, more sofas, and things of that kind for the accommodation and convenience of the men employed in that office.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The letter explains fully the purpose of the appropriation.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. If the gentleman had proposed to increase the force that is employed for that purpose, in order to keep up with the current work, that would be a proposition that would seem to have, in view of his statement, enough merit to warrant the consideration of the House. But I do not think we ought to vote for an increase of appropriation for the convenience of the men employed there. I do not see how that would expedite the work. There is nothing to show that the work could be advanced in that manner.

The only way, in my judgment, that the work could be advanced would be to have additional men employed in the office, and thus keep up with the current work. But the increase of appropriation asked for, of $1,000, is not to increase the force, but to make it more comfortable for the force already employed.

I do not think it ought to be done; and I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let me suggest a compromise between the gentleman from Colorado and the gentlemen in charge of the bill. The gentleman from Colorado asks for an appropriation of $1,000 additional, making the amount $3,500. Now, I suggest that an amendment be adopted increasing the amount from $2,500 to $3,000. I offer that amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado.

The amendment was adopted.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire that five-hundred-dollar increase to go to the credit of the very efficient Representative from that State, for it is due to his diligence that it was accorded by the House, and I want the RECORD to show the fact. It is true that the gentleman desired a larger amount, but I felt inclined, as a member of the committee, to concede this increase, inasmuch as he has made a very strong presentation of the facts in the case.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of the Territory of Utah, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office $3,500; in all, $5,500.

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 14 strike out the word "Territory" and insert "State." Also, in lines 15 and 16 strike out "three thousand five hundred dollars" and insert "five thousand dollars," and in line 16, after the word "all," strike out "five thousand five hundred" and insert "seven thousand."

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. Mr. Chairman, the amount recommended for clerk hire in the office of the surveyor-general for Utah is inadequate for the needs of that office. This amendment, if adopted, will increase the appropriation from thirty-five hundred to five thousand dollars.

The efficiency of that office, so far as dispatch of work is concerned, depends upon the ability of the clerical force employed to dispose of the work as it comes into the office. At present it is impossible to meet the demands made upon the force employed. The patents applied for, especially of mineral lands, are increasing from year to year. Under the order of the Secretary of the Interior staying action in cases of application for patents to lands within the railroad land grants, the applications for patents to agricultural lands must be for those now belonging to the public domain. This increases the work of this office.

The Secretary of the Interior recommends that $7,000 be appropriated for this purpose. I believe that this amount would be well within the actual needs of this office, but I am asking for only $5,000. I ask, gentlemen of the committee, that the amendment be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Utah.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Office Postmaster-General: For compensation of the Postmaster-General, $8,000; chief clerk, Post-Office Department, who shall also be superintendent of the Post-Office Department buildings, $2,500; stenographer, $1,800; stenographer, $1,600; appointment clerk, $1,800; one clerk of class 4; two clerks of class 3; one clerk of class 2; one clerk, $1,000; one curator of museum, $1,000; one messenger; one assistant messenger; page, $360; in all, $26,020.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have a letter from the Postmaster-General that I desire to have printed in the RECORD in respect to this part of the bill.

The letter is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 25, 1896.

SIR: In response to the request of your committee, made through the chief clerk of this Department, for my reasons for the proposed transfer of the duties of the superintendent of the Post-Office Department buildings from the disbursing clerk to the chief clerk, I desire to state that the main reason is to make the purchasing officer separate and distinct from the auditing and paying officer. By the proposed plan it is believed that the chief clerk and disbursing clerk will, to a much greater extent than now, be a check upon each other.

Another reason for the change is that the duties and responsibilities of the disbursing clerk will be increased by the proposed change in the system of paying the employees of the mail bag repair shop, who are now paid by the Washington City postmaster. As these employees belong to the Bureau of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, I am clearly of opinion that their salaries should be paid by the disbursing officer of this Department. This change will be made so soon as the necessary details can be arranged.

Very respectfully,

WM. L. WILSON,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. H. H. BINGHAM,
Chairman Subcommittee Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read to and including line 14 on page 100.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has reached the point in the bill appropriating for the Department of Justice.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, we wish to complete the reading of the bill this afternoon, if possible, with the understanding that we pass over that portion of the bill that provides for district attorneys and United States marshals, with leave to return to it in connection with the amendments proposed to be offered by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the paragraph in the bill relating to the Department of Justice be passed over?

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. Not the whole of the bill relating to the Department of Justice. I will indicate the sections when we reach them.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Office of the Attorney-General: For compensation of the Attorney-General, $8,000; Solicitor General, $7,000; four Assistant Attorneys-General, at $5,000 each; Assistant Attorney-General of the Post-Office Department, $4,000; Solicitor of Internal Revenue, $4,500; Solicitor for the Department of State, $3,500; two assistant attorneys, at $3,000 each; three assistant attorneys, at $2,500 each; assistant attorney, $2,000; law clerk and examiner of titles, $2,700; chief clerk and ex officio superintendent of the building, $2,500; stenographic clerk, $1,800; three stenographic clerks, at $1,600 each; two law clerks, at $2,000 each; seven clerks of class 4; attorney in charge of pardons, $2,400; additional for disbursing and appointment clerk, $500; additional for clerk in charge of accounts, $200; seven clerks of class 3; nine clerks of class 2; eleven clerks of class 1; telegraph operator and stenographer, $1,200; nine copyists; one messenger; five assistant messengers; four laborers; three watchmen; engineer, $1,200; two conductors of the elevator, at $720 each; eight charwomen; superintendent of building, $250; and three firemen; in all, $156,510.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 101, line 6, strike out the word "seven" and insert in lieu thereof the word "six"; and in lines 9 and 10 strike out the words "additional for clerk in charge of accounts, two hundred," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Chief of division of accounts, two thousand."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Circuit courts: For twenty-two circuit judges, at $6,000 each, $132,000.
For nine clerks of circuit courts of appeals, at $3,000 each, $27,000.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 104, at the end of line 19, insert the following:

"Provided, That each circuit court of appeals shall be entitled to retain and have expended, under the direction of the Attorney-General, for law books for its use, one-half of the surplus fees of its clerk's office accrued therein for the fiscal year 1897."

Mr. DINGLEY. I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. BROWN. I desire simply to say that when these circuit courts of appeals were established no provision was made for furnishing the courts with libraries. No provision has been made since, except in the appropriation bills for 1895 and 1896, in which provisions were included similar to that now proposed to be included in this bill for 1897. It must be apparent to every lawyer in the House and every member who is acquainted with these courts that it is absolutely necessary for the proper dispatch of business that they should be furnished with libraries, and this seems to be the only means by which they may be furnished with the proper books.

Mr. DINGLEY. I simply desire to call the attention of my friend to the fact that this method of providing a library or making any expenditure is exceedingly unwise, because it allows the court to use the fees without any return respecting them, for a purpose concerning which they may make no report. The proper way would be to make a distinct appropriation providing a library, and then the fees should be covered into the Treasury. This is a very vicious method, always, in which to make any expenditure. There is no objection to making a direct appropriation for a library wherever it is needed, but it ought to be done in a direct way, instead of simply giving the right to use fees of which no report is made, and the amount of which we know nothing about. I merely suggest to my friend that if it is desirable to do something here for a library, we ought to do it by direct appropriation and not in this way.

Mr. BROWN. I will say to the gentleman from Maine that reports are made at the end of every year by the clerks of these courts of appeals, and I have been furnished with a statement of the amount of fees turned in by each of the clerks, showing the gross amount of the fees. From that is deducted the clerk hire and the incidental expenses of the court. One-half, then, of the net fees is turned in by the clerk to the Treasury and one-half is retained by the clerk, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General for the purchase of books.

Mr. DINGLEY. I will ask my friend if he does not think the appropriate way would be to make a direct appropriation from the Treasury for the purchase of anything that may be wanted, and then have the fees covered into the Treasury, where they may be properly accounted for?

Mr. BROWN. I think so; but this method has been pursued heretofore in the bills for 1895 and 1896, and the courts say if they can be allowed this appropriation this year they will make no further demand of this kind.

Mr. DINGLEY. That same statement was made on this floor last year. When I made objection it was stated if I only allowed it last year they would never ask it again. This is the third time, and it is bound to be chronic if we allow it to come in here.

Mr. BROWN. The gentleman will admit the necessity for proper libraries for these courts?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes.

Mr. BROWN. Every effort has been made heretofore to obtain proper libraries in the way indicated by the gentleman from Maine, and it has not been possible to get the appropriation.

Mr. DINGLEY. But we know as to an appropriation to the object it is entirely proper.

Mr. BROWN. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. DINGLEY. I am not going to make objection if the committee in charge of this bill see fit to allow business to be done in this way, although I did give notice last year that I would object to any repetition, because it was said then, "If you will only allow it this time we will never have it again." The practice, as my friend must see, is a bad one. All fees should be covered into the Treasury and a special appropriation should be made, and then we can get an accounting. But I am not going to make any point of order. If the committee choose to allow it to go this way, let them have the responsibility.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let it go.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commissioner Yellowstone Park: For salary of commissioner provided for in the act to protect the birds and animals in Yellowstone National Park and to punish crimes in said park, approved May 7, 1894, $1,000.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent to pass the next two sections without reading, and we will recur to them afterwards for consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to pass these two sections without reading, and that they be returned to. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 107, after line 8, insert:

"That section 843 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

"'SEC. 843. The allowances for personal compensation of district attorneys, clerks, and marshals shall be made for each fiscal year, and from the fees and emoluments of that fiscal year, and not otherwise.

"'That the compensation of district attorneys, clerks, and marshals for the half year ending June 30, 1896, shall be allowed and settled upon the basis of the returns for that half year.

"'That hereafter all United States marshals shall be allowed ninety days after the 30th of June and ninety days after the 31st of December in which to make their returns of fees and emoluments under the provision of section 833 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which is hereby amended accordingly.'"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask for information, whether the two preceding sections were passed over by unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. They were.

Mr. HARTMAN. This is not amendatory to either of those two sections, is it?

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. It is not.

Mr. HARTMAN. I could not understand from the reading of the Clerk whether it was or not, and I am anxious that they shall not be passed without an opportunity to offer amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. They are reserved.

Mr. HARTMAN. That is all right, then, if they are reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall, on the first Monday of January in each year, make report to Congress of such officers and administrative departments and offices of the Government as were, respectively, at any time during the last preceding fiscal year delinquent in rendering or transmitting accounts to the proper offices in Washington and the cause therefor, and in each case indicating whether the delinquency was waived, together with such officers, including postmasters and officers of the Post-Office Department, as were found upon final settlement of their accounts to have been indebted to the Government, and who, at the date of making report, had failed to pay the same into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 109, line 16, after the word "government," insert the words "with the amounts of such indebtedness in each case."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. Also the following amendment. It is a committee amendment which I offer:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 109, after line 18, insert the following:

"SEC. 5. That section 3621 of the Revised Statutes is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 3621. Every person who shall have moneys of the United States in his hands or possession, and disbursing officers having moneys in their possession not required for current expenditure, shall pay the same to the Treasurer, an assistant treasurer, or some public depositary of the United States, without delay, and in all cases within thirty days of their receipt. And the Treasurer, the assistant treasurer, or the public depositary shall issue duplicate receipts for the moneys paid, transmitting forthwith the original to the Secretary of the Treasury and delivering the duplicate to the depositor: Provided, That postal revenues and debts due to the Post-Office Department shall be paid into the Treasury in the manner now required by law.'"

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire, in this connection, Mr. Chairman, to submit, for the RECORD, a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury approving this section. I also desire to state, in the same connection, that it has been considered by the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service and also by the Committee on Appropriations, both of whom report it favorably.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 14, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to recommend that section 3621 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3621. Every person who shall have moneys of the United States in his hands or possession, other than moneys arising from postal revenues and debts due to the Post-Office Department, shall pay the same to the Treasurer, an assistant treasurer, or some public depositary of the United States, without delay, and in all cases within thirty days of their receipt. And the Treasurer, the assistant treasurer, or the public depositary shall issue duplicate receipts for the moneys so paid, transmitting forthwith the original to the Secretary of the Treasury and delivering the duplicate to the depositor."

The principal change effected by the proposed amendment is to require that deposits of public moneys shall in all cases be made within thirty days of their receipt, and that the original receipt issued therefor shall be transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury by the officer receiving the deposit instead of the depositor.

Respectfully, yours, J. G. CARLISLE, Secretary.

Hon. A. M. DOCKERY,
House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LINNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend the pending bill as follows, to come in before subsection 5, page 109, or as a new section:

"SEC. —. That the compensation of any clerk or private secretary of any member of the House of Representatives or Delegate from the Territories provided for in this act for services rendered when Congress is not in session, shall be paid out of the salary of the Member or Delegate by whom such clerk or private secretary is employed."

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is new legislation, and also that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LINNEY. Will not the Chair hear me on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. LINNEY. I will do so. The bill as it now stands provides for certain clerks or private secretaries——

The CHAIRMAN. But the point is that the paragraph relating to that subject was passed some time since, and that the paragraph now under consideration has no relation to it.

Mr. LINNEY. The subject is dealt with in two places in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. But both those parts of the bill have been passed some time since.

Mr. LINNEY. That is true. Then the Chair rules the amendment out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules it out of order.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit, to be printed in the RECORD, an amendment which I propose to offer to the fee bill.

There was no objection.

The amendment is as follows:

SEC. 18. The Attorney-General shall, in his annual report to Congress each year, include a statement in detail showing for the preceding fiscal year the number of assistant district attorneys employed, the salaries of each; the number of clerical assistants employed for each district attorney, the salaries of each; the amount expended for necessary subsistence, and actual and necessary traveling expenses of each district attorney and his assistants; the number of office deputies and clerical assistants employed for each marshal, the salaries paid to each; the amount expended for necessary subsistence and actual and necessary traveling expenses of each marshal and his office deputies, and the number of field deputy marshals employed by each marshal and the amount of fees earned by and the compensation paid to each of them out of such fees.

On motion of Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee, by unanimous consent, the numbering of section 5 of the bill was changed to section 6.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. With the understanding that we shall recur on Monday to the section relating to district attorneys and marshals, in connection with the bill to be offered as an amendment regulating the salaries of those officers, I now move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls attention to the fact that the paragraph in relation to New Mexico is also reserved.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Certainly; that had slipped my mind.

Mr. DOCKERY. That paragraph goes over.

Mr. CANNON. Is the gentleman from Missouri ready to dispose of the New Mexico paragraph?

Mr. DOCKERY. I said to the gentleman from New Mexico that I would examine it between now and Monday. So far as I can tell now, I do not propose to object to the amendment.

The motion of Mr. McCALL of Tennessee was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the bill H. R. 6248 and had come to no resolution thereon.

NEW RIVER.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged matter to the House. I send the bill to the desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of an act passed August 17, 1894, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That it shall not be lawful to place, discharge, or deposit, by any process or in any manner, ballast, refuse, dirt, ashes, cinders, mud, sand, dredgings, sludge, acid, or any other matter of any kind other than that flowing from streets, sewers, and passing therefrom in a liquid state in the waters of any harbor or river of the United States for the improvement of which money has been appropriated by Congress, elsewhere than within the limits defined and permitted by the Secretary of War; neither shall it be lawful for any person or persons to move, destroy, or injure in any manner whatever any sea wall, bulkhead, jetty, dike, levee, wharf, pier, or other work built by the United States, in whole or in any part, for the preservation and improvement of any of its navigable waters, or to prevent floods, or as boundary marks, tide gauges, surveying stations, buoys, or other established marks. Any and every such act is made a misdemeanor, and every person knowingly engaged in or who shall knowingly aid, abet, authorize, or instigate a violation of this section shall, upon conviction, be punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, such fine to be not less than $250 nor more than $2,500, and the imprisonment to be not less than thirty days nor more than one year, either or both united, as the judge before whom conviction is obtained shall decide, one-half of said fine to be paid to the person or persons giving information which shall lead to conviction of this misdemeanor. But this section shall not apply to New River or its tributaries in the State of Virginia."

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, that was made a part of the last river and harbor bill, and the sole purpose of this is to except New River from the operation of the general law, it being a mountain torrent and not a navigable stream.

Mr. TUCKER. Why do you except New River?

Mr. HOOKER. Because it is not a navigable river.

Mr. HULING. Mr. Speaker, I object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. HOOKER. It is not necessary to object. This is a privileged matter.

Mr. TUCKER. Let it go over until Monday.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, since I presented the matter to the House, I have been requested by the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. WALKER, who is interested in it, to ask consent that it go over until Monday.

Mr. HULING. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this is not a bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors.

Mr. HOOKER. It amends the river and harbor law as it stands.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Is the bill before the House?

Mr. HOOKER. I so understand it.

The SPEAKER. It is before the House subject to the point of order. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from New York on that point. Is it his idea that this is privileged as an amendment to a bill that would have been privileged?

Mr. HOOKER. Yes, sir; this is an amendment to the regular general river and harbor law.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I think it would be a very bad practice to consider a bill of this kind as privileged. If that rule were established an amendment might be brought in here starting an entirely new improvement. It seems to me that it is only the regular river and harbor bill that can be considered as privileged.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced by myself and referred to the committee, and I will explain the matter as well as I can, though I did not know that it would come before the House at this time. In 1894 there was a clause tacked on to the river and harbor bill providing that no refuse matter, washings from ore mines, or things of that sort, should be placed in any stream where the Government had expended money, but it also provided that the Secretary of War might, in his discretion, exempt any stream from the operation of that law.

Now, there is a creek—hardly a river, but a stream which runs through that section of Virginia, on which the Government in some evil hour spent about $20,000, to no purpose in the world—a stream which is not navigable and can never be made navigable, and the improvement of which was abandoned by the Government long ago. Along the line of that river there are very extensive mining operations. It is an iron country. There has been invested there, in furnaces and iron plants, over $2,000,000. The ores have to be washed, and the tailings have to be dumped into the river, for such is the nature of the country and the nature of the ores that they can not be washed in any other way. Now, it is well understood there that to prevent this washing will stop these furnaces, destroy the value of those plants, and throw out of employment between four and five thousand people.

The Secretary of War has had this matter investigated thoroughly, and the Chief of Engineers, General Craighill, has reported that the stream is not navigable; that the Government has no control over it; and therefore the Secretary of War has exempted it from the operation of that law. So far so good. While the Secretary of War allows that order to remain in force it is a complete protection. But the gentlemen who have their capital invested in those industries—for besides the iron ores there are large zinc and lead interests there—do not know at what time some influence may be brought to bear to secure a revocation of that order; they do not know but that if a new Secretary of War should come in they may again have trouble.

Now, I wish to say that there is nobody in that section complaining. There was some complaint from West Virginia because the water as it flowed into that State was discolored to some extent. But that is a matter which can easily be remedied by the State laws. Those who may feel themselves aggrieved have a sufficient remedy in the laws of both States to prevent the pollution of the water.

The question is, whether the Government shall take upon itself to direct that these people be indicted. It is only a month or two months ago that the district attorney gave notice that he intended to indict every one of these gentlemen; that they must stop washing their ores in that stream in twenty days.

Now, it is proposed simply by this amendatory bill that we repeal with respect to this stream a law which ought never to have been enacted. The Government has nothing to do with this stream in the mountains of Virginia. It is not a navigable stream. The Government has no control over it. That is the express report of the Secretary of War and of the Chief Engineer.

In view of these facts I have introduced this amendatory bill. I hope it will be the pleasure of the House to pass it, because it is a vital matter to a very large number of people engaged in a very important and lucrative business in my section of the country.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask unanimous consent, as it is now late, that this matter stand over until Monday, subject to the point of order raised by the gentleman from West Virginia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. OTEY. I wish to ask whether anybody will be heard on the question at that time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will very likely want to hear somebody on the point of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. OTEY. This stream runs right through my district. I do not want to raise any factious objection in this matter, but there are a great many people in my district who object to this amendatory bill, and they do so on what they deem to be very serious grounds. I should like to be heard on this question.

Mr. HOOKER. Certainly; every opportunity will be afforded for discussion.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to know whether the bill goes over strictly and entirely on the point of order raised by the gentleman from West Virginia as to whether the bill has been properly reported from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The SPEAKER. Whether it is a privileged bill?

Mr. SWANSON. First, whether it is a privileged bill, and second, whether the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has the right to report it. Has that point been raised, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand that that point has been raised. Is it raised? Does the gentleman raise it?

Mr. SWANSON. No, sir. I did not know whether it had been raised. I wanted to ascertain what point of order was pending.

The SPEAKER. Of course that point can be raised at any time before the other point of order has been decided. The point which has been made takes in all objections there may be in the form of points of order. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HOOKER].

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I move that the House adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the motion to adjourn, by unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. OTJEN, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BRUMM, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. BOATNER, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. MILLER of West Virginia, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. REYBURN, for ten days, on account of sickness in his family.

The motion of Mr. McCALL of Tennessee that the House adjourn was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, ordered to be printed as a document, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Memorial of the National Association for the Promotion of Arbitration.

This association most earnestly and respectfully petition your honorable bodies to cease making appropriations for war ships and seacoast defenses, for the increase of the Army and Navy, and for the organization of the militia of the United States at a time when we are at peace with all the world, living under a Constitution which pledges us to neutrality, and when no nation threatens or even dares to attack us, and at a period in the history of civilized nations when mental and moral force should take the precedence of brute force, which, after all, has never permanently settled any great moral or political question.

As a nation we believe that we are safer without all of these threatening appliances of war, which only excite our neighbors to spend their money for similar appliances, the money for which is ground out of the poor by our system of taxation; money which, if wisely expended in the improvement of waterways, of good roads, for institutions of learning, or for the extension of our commercial relations would make the great masses of the people happier and better, while their improved condition would lessen crime and save the Government a large annual outlay now being expended in the support of penal institutions.

We know that at this time there is a widespread and growing interest in international arbitration and in the establishment of an international arbitration court for the settlement between nations, without resort to war, of all difficulties that may arise, which experience has shown is the wiser, cheaper, and better way.

That Great Britain has not only accepted our invitation to join with the United States in a permanent international treaty of arbitration, but that at the last session of the Fifty-third Congress one of the honored members of the British Parliament, Mr. William Randal Cremer, came to this country, bringing with him a memorial signed by 354 members of the British Parliament, addressed to the President and Congress, asking them to prepare and ratify the treaty which they had proposed to Great Britain. This proposed treaty was the outcome, in part, of the Pan-American Congress, signed by the United States on April 4, 1890, the Sherman joint resolution, and the invitation sent out by President Harrison, which was accepted by a unanimous vote of the British House of Commons June 16, 1893.

We know, also, that the Swiss National Council, in 1892, and the Danish Parliament during the same year, accepted similar invitations from the United States; that the French House of Deputies, the treaty-making power of the French Republic, on July 8, 1895, by unanimous vote, instructed their Government to make overtures to the United States for the purpose of forming with them a permanent treaty of arbitration.

To-day the great masses of the peoples of the world want peace, and we are confident that if peace were fully assured that not only would there be no use for war ships, but that the financial condition of the country would be improved and our depleted Treasury would be replenished. The Fifty-third Congress voted $20,000,000 for war ships without a speck of war on the horizon, and now we have the Lodge bill and the report of the Secretary of War, calling for a still greater expenditure of the people's money.

For our association, and for those whom we represent, and in the name of the American people, we protest against any increase of expenditure by the United States Congress for military or naval purposes.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with a statement of the gross earnings, operating expenses, and net earnings of the Union Pacific, the Central Branch of the Union Pacific, the Kansas Pacific, and the Sioux City and Pacific railroad companies from their organization to the end of the year A. D. 1894 by years, and the total thereof.

ALLEGED IMPRISONMENT OF AMERICAN CITIZENS BY SPAIN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], coming over from a previous day. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CALL on the 27th ultimo, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That the President of the United States be requested to demand of the Government of Spain a statement as to the truth of the charges made in a letter published in the newspapers purporting to be from Mr. Gomez, late editor of the La Lucha, a newspaper published in Habana, that he had been tortured while confined in a dungeon in the bare ground for two months in Ceuta, the penal colony of Spain, to extort from him evidence against Julius Sanguilly, a naturalized citizen of the United States, and subsequently killing the said Gomez; also to insist on a full report of the evidence and all the proceedings in the alleged civil trial of Julius Sanguilly, in which it is charged that the said Sanguilly was condemned to imprisonment for life at Ceuta on suspicion only and without evidence; also to demand of Spain that all American citizens who shall be captured by the Spanish forces shall be treated as prisoners of war and be accorded humane treatment, and to inform the Spanish Government that the United States will insist on this demand.

Mr. CALL. I ask that the Secretary may read the extract I have marked in a recent telegraphic dispatch from Habana, as published in the Times of this city.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

TORTURED IN SPANISH DUNGEONS.

Cubans here were not surprised when they heard that Juan Gualberto Gomez, ex-editor of La Lucha, arrested here last February and sent to Ceuta, Africa, for life imprisonment for political reasons, was dead.

Indeed, it is barely a month since Gomez's wife, who was then in Habana, received a letter from him, written in blood, telling her that she would soon be a widow; that he was in double chains in a foul, unlighted dungeon, compelled to sleep upon the damp earth; that his only food was a pint of bean soup twice daily, and that he was being gradually tortured to death by inquisitorial instruments frequently applied by his jailers in their efforts to wrench from him confessions implicating Julio Sanguilly in the conspiracy which developed into the Cuban revolution, or force him to state the location of arms and munitions hidden by Antonio Maceo and himself in Matanzas Province several years ago. In closing his letter to his wife Gomez said: "However great my torture, neither will I make false charges against Sanguilly, who is innocent, nor divulge Maceo's secret. I will die first, commending thee, my poor wife, to the charitable sympathy of my countrymen and the protection of God."

The dead Cuban, though a negro, was of unusual intelligence and of the highest education. He was an orator as well as journalist. He resided four years in Madrid as private secretary to Labra, the Spanish liberal leader and national senator, who had many admirers upon the peninsula, as well as in his native land. He was the principal agent of Martí and the Cuban junta of New York in Habana just previous to the breaking out of the present revolution, and when arrested was leaving the city for the woods with documents in his possession which were afterwards used to convict him.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, for seventeen years I have introduced at every session of Congress a resolution for measures to be taken by the United States to obtain independence for the people of Cuba and a government of their own choice. These resolutions have been referred to committees and no further action had in regard to them. At this session of Congress I introduced a joint resolution for immediate action by Congress recognizing the Republic of Cuba as an independent government. This finally resulted in the report of a resolution of sympathy and indignation and a request to the President to offer Spain the offices of the United States for the settlement of the war, declaring the opinion of Congress that there is a state of public war existing in Cuba, and further expressing the opinion that Cuba ought to be free and independent.

This action of Congress is very much less forcible than the condition demands and than the several resolutions proposed by me demands.

The condition of affairs in Cuba requires decisive action by Congress for the protection of the rights of American citizens and for the preservation of the rules of war between civilized peoples, to the end that our people who may engage in this war, although subject to the power and authority of Spain when captured or when within her jurisdiction, shall have the treatment of prisoners of war, and not be subjected to cruel and unusual punishment, and that the Government shall demand a fair trial and proper treatment for General Sanguilly and all others who have a right to our protection.

Gen. Julius Sanguilly, the citizen of the United States referred to in this extract, it is charged by people who are familiar with the facts of the case, has been tried and sentenced to imprisonment for life without any evidence whatever, but upon suspicion alone.

Mr. HILL. What is the charge?

Mr. CALL. He is charged with participating in the rebellion. He is not charged with having been taken with arms, but with being an accomplice in the organization of the rebellion now existing in Cuba against the Government of Spain. Certainly he is properly subject to be tried under the laws of Spain, and, if convicted upon reasonable evidence, subject to her laws.

Mr. ALLEN. His case is not covered by the treaty?

Mr. CALL. We have a treaty with Spain which prescribes that persons, citizens of the United States, taken in arms shall be subject to punishment, and summary punishment, but we have no treaty with Spain which authorizes them to take an American citizen residing peaceably in Habana, try him without evidence, upon mere suspicion, convict, and sentence him for life.

This statement of Gomez, who is now dead, if it be true that he was tortured to extort from him a false confession of Sanguilly's complicity in the rebellion, presents a case which demands inquiry on the part of the United States, and, if true, certainly demands that this Government should protect its citizens against practices unknown to the law of nations and unknown to civilized people anywhere.

Mr. President, it has been my fortune ever since I took my seat in the Senate of the United States, immediately succeeding the revolution in Cuba in the years 1878 and 1879, to have seen numbers of Cubans who had been compelled to leave their native country and find a home in the United States. They were generally men of education, men prominent in the business of the island, in its commerce, and men largely engaged in agriculture and commerce, who had been educated in the United States. I understand that General Sanguilly was one of those Cubans. He resided here for some years and became a citizen of the United States, and was a resident in Cuba after amnesty was proclaimed and pardon extended to him. I am informed that he was not a participant in the present rebellion, although he was a general commanding in the Cuban forces in the last revolution, but that so far from having taken any active part in the present rebellion, he was one of the conservative people advising against it. However that may be, it is certainly true that citizens of the United States who incur the penalties of Spanish law, even by taking an active part in the rebellion, are entitled to the privileges of prisoners of war. They can not lawfully be butchered and shot to death without trial and without evidence; neither can they be treated with cruelty other than that kind of confinement which belongs to prisoners of war under the code of civilized nations.

But every day young men who have gone from this country and taken part with the insurgent forces are being shot to death without trial, if the newspaper statements are correct; and in my judgment it is the duty of the Senate to do something more than the resolution which was passed on Friday last, and which is nothing except that it indicates a public opinion in this country far in advance of the action of the Senate, far in advance of anything that has been done by either House of Congress. It indicates an almost unanimous public opinion upon tne part of our people that the rights of civilized war shall be insisted upon by the United States, and that our people who are there shall be protected in all the rights belonging to prisoners of war under the modified and humane code of modern times.

This man, Gen. Julius Sanguilly, now sentenced to life imprisonment at Ceuta, with his case standing on appeal to the tribunals at Madrid, was a citizen of the United States, and it is the testimony regarding this unfortunate man Gomez—who, although a colored man, stood high as a man of integrity, as a man of intelligence, and as a man of education—that he was tortured to death in a dungeon for two months because he would not testify that Sanguilly, who was innocent, was guilty of some offense against the Spanish Government.

Mr. President, I do not propose to indorse this statement as true, but I do say that it is sufficiently probable from all the circumstances which are daily reported in the press to require that the Government should take some action to see that the citizens of the United States shall at least have a fair trial and shall not be sentenced for life upon mere suspicion, and that they shall not be shot wherever captured without any kind of inquiry or trial.

I hope the resolution will pass, although I suppose it will be at present referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was about to move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

CORN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK OF PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. QUAY. The bill (S. 277) for the relief of the Corn Exchange National Bank of Philadelphia, Pa., was reported adversely from the Committee on Claims, and at my request it was placed upon the Calendar. I move that the bill be recommitted to the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JAMESTOWN, N. Y.

Mr. QUAY. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to call up the bill (S. 1962) for the erection of a public building at the city of Jamestown, N. Y. It is a very brief bill, and, I think, will create no discussion. If it does, I will withdraw it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to purchase, acquire by condemnation, or otherwise provide a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable, commodious, and substantial building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices, in the city of Jamestown, N. Y., the cost of the site and the building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, complete, not to exceed $150,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. VEST, Mr. HALE, and others addressed the Chair.

Mr. HALE. I was going to move to take up——

Mr. VEST. I have some morning business to present.

Mr. HALE. Let me make a proposal first. I suggest that at the conclusion of the morning business the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the Calendar, taking up and considering unobjected cases. There is nothing now to interfere with that course that I know of, and if that can be done I shall not make the motion which I intended to make.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the Calendar under Rule VIII is now in order.

Mr. HALE. Then I ask unanimous consent that we may proceed with it, taking up unobjected cases under the five-minute rule, and in that way, perhaps, in the next two or three hours we can clear off most of the Calendar and reach cases Senators desire to have considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the rule, the Chair will state. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3537) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5359) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HULL, Mr. MARSH, and Mr. WASHINGTON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the President of the United States having returned to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, the bill (H. R. 2769) to authorize the leasing of lands for educational purposes in Arizona, with his objections thereto, the House had proceeded in pursuance of the Constitution to reconsider the same, and it was resolved that the bill do pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. QUAY. I ask that the Army appropriation bill, which has just been returned from the other House, be laid before the Senate in order that the Senate may agree to a conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5359) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and requesting a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. QUAY, Mr. HALE, and Mr. FAULKNER were appointed.

ARIZONA SCHOOL LANDS—VETO MESSAGE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the message from the President of the United States, which has just been communicated in the message of the House of Representatives. The message of the President will be read.

The message was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without my approval House bill numbered 2769, entitled "An act to authorize the leasing of lands for educational purposes in Arizona."

This bill provides for the leasing of all the public lands reserved to the Territory of Arizona for the benefit of its universities and schools, "under such laws and regulations as may be hereafter prescribed by the legislature of said Territory."

If the proposed legislation granted no further authority than this, it would in terms at least recognize the safety and propriety of leaving the desirability of leasing these lands, and the limitations and safeguards regulating such leasing, to be determined by the local legislature chosen by the people to make their laws and protect their interests.

Instead of stopping here, however, the bill further provides that until such legislative action the governor, the secretary of the Territory, and the superintendent of public instruction shall constitute a board for the leasing of said lands under the rules and regulations heretofore prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. It is specifically declared that it shall not be necessary to submit said leases to the Secretary of the Interior for approval, and that no leases shall be made for a longer term than five years, nor for a term extending beyond the date of the admission of the Territory to statehood.

Under these provisions the lands reserved for university and school purposes, whose value largely depends upon their standing timber, and in which every citizen of the Territory has a deep interest, may be leased and denuded of their timber by officers none of whom have been chosen by the people, and without the sanction of any law or regulation made by their representatives in the local legislature. Even the measure of protection which would be afforded the citizens of the Territory by a submission to the Secretary of the Interior of the leases proposed, and thus giving him an opportunity to ascertain whether or not they comply with his regulations, is especially withheld.

It was hardly necessary to provide in this bill that these lands might be leased "under such laws and regulations as may be hereafter prescribed by the legislature of said Territory," if the action of the legislature was to be forestalled and rendered nugatory by the immediate and unrestrained action of the officers constituted "a board for the leasing of said lands" pending such legislative consideration. These are inconsistencies which are not satisfactorily accounted for by the suggestion that the time that would elapse before the legislature could consider the subject would be important.

The protests I have received from numerous and influential citizens of the Territory indicate considerable opposition to this bill among those interested in the preservation and proper management of these school lands.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 28, 1896.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the action of the House of Representatives.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 29, 1896.

The President of the United States having returned to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, the bill H. R. 2769, "An act to authorize the leasing of lands for educational purposes in Arizona," with his objections thereto, the House proceeded, in pursuance of the Constitution, to reconsider the same; and

Resolved, That the said bill pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to the same.

Attest: A. McDOWELL, Clerk,
By WM. J. BROWNING, Chief Clerk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, several members of the Committee on Public Lands have come to me and suggested that the bill, with the veto message, should be referred to that committee. I understand it is a privileged question, and can be brought up at any time. Therefore, I move that the veto message of the President, together with the bill, be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. When the message came from the House of Representatives I believe I had the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HALE. I was making a proposition which goes beyond the ordinary rule, that is, that the Calendar shall be taken up under the five-minute rule for the consideration of unobjected cases only. Under the rule, without unanimous consent, one objection takes a bill over to be considered under another rule, but any Senator can move to take it up. If, however, we have a unanimous-consent agreement that we will only proceed with unobjected cases, then we shall not be confronted with such a motion as that. That is my proposition.

Mr. VILAS. I hope the Senator from Maine will give me leave, before that proposition is considered, to have taken up and disposed of a bill which has already been once before the Senate and has been read at length, the objections to which have now been removed.

Mr. HALE. Then I will make the proposition at the end of the consideration of the bill referred to by the Senator. This proposition of mine will apply then.

Mr. BERRY. Until 2 o'clock, Mr. President. I do not wish the agreement to extend beyond 2 o'clock. I gave notice Friday last that at 2 o'clock to-day I desired to make a motion to take up a bill which at that hour I proposed to move to proceed to the consideration of. I agree to the adoption of the rule suggested by the Senator from Maine, to extend until 2 o'clock.

Mr. HALE. I can not, of course, interfere with the Senator after that time. I ask that, at the conclusion of the bill suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, the agreement I have stated be made.

Mr. GEAR. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that he make the motion in regard to the bill referred to by him at present, when he is on the floor.

ADJUSTMENT OF CLAIMS WITH ARKANSAS.

Mr. BERRY. I desire, if I can have unanimous consent, that the bill (S. 502) to approve a compromise and settlement between the United States and the State of Arkansas may be made the unfinished business at 2 o'clock. If I can get that consent now it will answer my purpose as well as to make the motion at that hour.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. GEAR. On Friday, when the Senator from Arkansas made a similar request, I objected. I think, in view of the fact that this is a claim of a sovereign State, that I perhaps made a mistake. I am perfectly willing that the bill in question shall go to the Calendar and be a standing order, to be laid aside from day to day, provided that action or debate shall not be had on the bill until, say, about the 15th or the 16th of the current month. Would that be satisfactory to the Senator?

Mr. BERRY. I will agree to that if that arrangement can be made, so that the bill will be the unfinished business. Several Senators have stated to me that they desired to examine the subject, and were not ready to proceed. I have no desire to proceed with the bill until every Senator thoroughly understands it, and has had an opportunity to do so. If I can get unanimous consent that it shall be made the unfinished business, then I will agree that it be postponed until the 16th day of March, which, I believe, is the time the Senator from Iowa suggested.

Mr. GEAR. I trust that agreement may be made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. VILAS. I should like to inquire of the Chair in what condition will that leave the Calendar as a matter of parliamentary practice? Is that bill always to stand in the way, or can any motion be made to proceed to the consideration of another bill?

Mr. BERRY. It will be the unfinished business, and postponed until the 16th day of March. I understand any Senator can move to take up any other bill in the meantime.

Mr. VILAS. Without displacing the bill of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BERRY. Without displacing that order for that day. I hope that will be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HALE. The Senator's proposition is to make the bill the special order for the 16th of the month.

Mr. VILAS. If the Chair understands the rule to be as the Senator from Arkansas states it, I entirely agree. All I wanted was to understand the matter, and not have it stand in the way of other bills.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is perfectly competent for the Senate to fix a special day for a particular bill. It is done very often.

Mr. ALLISON. By unanimous consent.

Mr. GEAR. It can be done by special order.

Mr. SHERMAN. It can be done by special order. The bill might be made the special order for the day named at 2 o'clock.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that he ask unanimous consent that the bill be made the unfinished business for the 16th day of March. Otherwise, if made the unfinished business now, and I should have occasion to move to proceed to the consideration of some other bill to-morrow, and that motion should carry, it would displace the Senator's bill from its position.

Mr. BERRY. That is exactly the suggestion I intended to make. I may not have stated it so clearly and so precisely as the Senator from Tennessee, but my purpose is that on the 16th day of March, at 2 o'clock, the bill to which I have referred shall be the unfinished business.

Mr. SHERMAN. The special order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GEAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate, That the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior be, and they are hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate as soon as may be either the original or full, true, and correct copies of the sworn statements of the 65 persons in the State of Arkansas, made between August 4, 1894, and February 22, 1895, as to the value of the public lands in their respective counties, which affidavits were alleged to accompany the report of Burton T. Doyle, representing the Secretary of the Treasury, and George C. Ross, representing the Secretary of the Interior, under the act of Congress approved August 4, 1894, an act entitled "An act to authorize a compromise and settlement with the State of Arkansas," referred to in Senate Executive Document 91, Fifty-third Congress, third session, and to report by whom or at whose instance or cost said affidavits were so made and procured, and also copy of all the exhibits and tables referred to in said Senate Executive Document.

Second. To transmit to the Senate copy of all instructions issued between August 4, 1894, and February 22, 1895, to said named representatives in reference to any of the matters contemplated by said act, and whether said representatives were then in the paid service of the United States, and if so, when, where, how, and in what Department employed, and whether they, or either of them, visited said State between said dates in connection with any of the matters contemplated by said act and reported or referred to in said Senate Executive Document, and the total cost, if any, incurred in any of said premises, and by whom the same were defrayed, if paid.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. HALE. I modify my proposition, as the proposition of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] has been agreed to, and make it this: That after the disposition of the bill indicated by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Calendar under the five-minute rule, to consider unobjected cases only, to continue through the day, unless an appropriation bill is ready to be taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

TRANSPORTATION OF OBSCENE LITERATURE, ETC.

Mr. VILAS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1675) to prevent the carrying of obscene literature and articles designed for indecent and immoral use from one State or Territory into another State or Territory. This bill was read at length in the Senate, and some objection being suggested by the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], the further consideration of it was deferred. The result has been a conference, and an amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado, which amendment will be accepted, and thereupon, I presume, the bill will meet the assent of the Senate without objection. The bill has had careful consideration by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1675) to prevent the carrying of obscene literature and articles designed for indecent and immoral use from one State or Territory into another State or Territory.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I move to amend the bill by striking out all after the word "shall," in line 20, and inserting in lieu thereof what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the bill by striking out all after the word "shall," in line 20, as follows:

After such carriage take from such express company or other common carrier, with knowledge of the character thereof, and any officer, servant, agent, or employee of any express company or other common carrier who shall knowingly receive for carriage from one State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia to any other such State, Territory, or District any such matter as aforesaid, shall, for each offense, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned at hard labor not more than five years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

And inserting in lieu thereof:

Or who shall take from such express company or other common carrier, with intent to sell, distribute, or circulate, any matter or thing herein forbidden to be deposited for carriage, shall, for each offense, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned at hard labor not more than five years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXCHANGE BETWEEN GOLD AND SILVER STANDARD COUNTRIES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Calendar, under the agreement heretofore made, is now in order.

Mr. HALE. Let us begin with the first case on the Calendar and go through in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That course will be pursued.

The first business on the Calendar was a resolution submitted by Mr. STEWART December 12, 1895, directing the Committee on Finance to inquire what effect the difference of exchange between gold-standard countries and silver-standard countries has upon the agricultural and manufacturing industries of the United States, etc.

Mr. VILAS. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] is not present.

Mr. HALE. That resolution will give rise to debate, and as the Senator from Nevada is not present, I suggest that it had better go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

CORPORATE INFLUENCE IN POLITICAL AFFAIRS.

The next business on the Calendar was the resolution submitted by Mr. CALL December 17, 1895, providing for the investigation of organized efforts of corporations to control the election of members of Congress.

Mr. ALLISON. I object to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution being objected to, will go over.

CONGRESSIONAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (S. 238) to prohibit officers of the Government from refusing to pay moneys appropriated by act of Congress.

Mr. VILAS. There is no use of reading that bill at length. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], who reported it, is not present, and I am inclined to think it will lead to discussion, in which he would certainly wish to participate. I think it had better go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

PORTRAIT OF MRS. DOLLY MADISON.

The bill (S. 420) for the purchase of the oil portrait of Mrs. Dolly Madison, by E. F. Andrews, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator reporting that bill is absent. Let it be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be passed over. The next bill will be called.

ISSUANCE OF INTEREST-BEARING BONDS.

The bill (S. 1341) to prohibit the further issuance of interest-bearing bonds without the consent of Congress was announced as next in order.

Mr. PLATT. That subject is already before the Finance Committee.

Mr. ALLISON. The bill had better be referred to that committee.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not think there ought to be an objection to this bill, but clearly there is some. Therefore, I give notice now that I shall make the motion on next Wednesday, after the finishing of the routine morning business, to take up the bill for discussion and action.

Mr. SHERMAN. If any action is to be taken upon the bill it had better be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HARRIS. I quite agree with the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. I make that motion.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from North Carolina objects to its consideration.

Mr. HALE. That carries it over.

Mr. BUTLER. That motion, it seems to me, would be in order when I ask that the bill be taken up next Wednesday morning. The bill is so short, having but three lines in it, that every Senator, I think, can understand it by that time. It is certainly too plain for any doubt as to what it means.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will go over under the rule.

Mr. BUTLER subsequently said: My attention has been called to the fact that on next Wednesday the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] has given notice that he will call up the case of Mr. Du Pont. I do not wish to conflict with that, and therefore I give notice that on Wednesday a week, so as to give full time for that matter, after the routine morning business I shall call the bill up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so noted.

MAP OF THE UNITED STATES.

The joint resolution (S. R. 29) to print, with certain additions, the last map of the United States published by the Interior Department, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALLISON. That is adversely reported.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] has some interest in that joint resolution.

Mr. CALL. Let the joint resolution go over. I desire to make some remarks on it when it will be in order to do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over.

ADDITIONAL MEN FOR THE NAVY.

The bill (S. 1404) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to enlist additional men for service in the United States Navy, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HALE. That bill has been read in full once. I do not ask that it be read again, but I have an amendment to offer to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine will be stated.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to hear the bill read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read.

Mr. HALE. It has been read once; but if any Senator desires it to be read again, I have no objection.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. HALE. I send to the desk an amendment, to be inserted in line 5 of section 4 of the bill.

The provision of the present bill is altogether too wide. The Secretary of the Navy should have no authority to make contracts except for naval purposes. Other contracts are always made by the War Department.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 4, line 5, it is proposed to strike out the words "troops, or for other purposes" and insert "officers or men or freight for naval purposes"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That whenever in the judgment of the President an exigency exists rendering such action necessary, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to charter, for temporary service, any private vessel or vessels which may be required for the transportation of officers or men or freight for naval purposes at such rates of compensation and upon such terms and conditions as may be deemed proper for the protection of the public interest.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not gather the exact purport of the bill from the reading, which I did not follow very closely. I see the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to appoint such additional officers as he may see fit, under certain circumstances. Are those officers to retire with the exigency, or will they continue to be officers of the Navy? I do not see anything in relation to that.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator will see from the clause providing for such officers that they shall "serve only during the continuance of the exigency under which their services are required."

Mr. ALLISON. They shall serve only for that time, but if they are once officers of the Navy, they will remain there under existing law, it seems to me.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is not intended.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to it. I only wanted to know the effect of the bill.

Mr. CALL. I should be very glad to be informed by some one whether there is any necessity for this additional force at present; is it because of lack of seamen for vessels now in commission, or ready to be placed in commission, or is this proposed increase of force in reference to future possibilities?

Mr. HALE. The bill has a double purpose. It provides, first, for a thousand additional men, which are needed for ships ready to go into commission. It provides, further, as a matter of exigency, that, should any occasion arise, the Secretary of the Navy may summon the Naval Reserve, and enlist them or other men as needed temporarily. The officers are to be commissioned only up to the grade of lieutenant temporarily. The officers so commissioned undoubtedly will be officers of these organizations as they come in. I do not think, notwithstanding all that has been done and said here, and the disposition, perhaps, to arouse a war feeling, that there will be any war; but I do think, in view of what has been done or may be done, that it is wise to give this restricted power to the Secretary of the Navy, to be used whenever the President believes the exigency has arisen. The thousand men will be enlisted, and ought to be, and that will be a permanent addition. All the rest is conjectural and depends on what may occur.

Mr. COCKRELL. Ought not the second section to read "the President is authorized"? The third section gives the President of the United States authority to appoint and commission such additional officers not above the rank of second lieutenant, and it seems to me that it would be better to provide in the second section for the President to do that.

Mr. HALE. All of the process of enlistment is done by the Secretary, and he can not move an inch until the President directs him. But the President, of course, as the Senator knows, does not deal with the details of enlistment or taking into the service. That is done by the head of the Department. But it all depends upon the assumption of the emergency by the President and his directions to the Secretary.

Mr. COCKRELL. I see it is further provided that the President may decide the question as to an emergency.

Mr. HALE. It is all entirely with the President, and it ought to be.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from Maine state what is the number of the Naval Reserve?

Mr. HALE. In all the States together it is something less than 5,000. It is not a large number.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand the bill gives the President very little more power than he has now as to the militia for army purposes. It gives the President, in case of exigency, certain power over the Naval Reserve of some of the seacoast States for enlistment, equivalent to that which he now has over the land militia of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. Is the enlistment confined to the Naval Reserve or may the President go outside of it under the bill?

Mr. HALE. He may go outside.

Mr. ALLISON. So the number to be enlisted is unlimited.

Mr. HALE. That depends upon the emergency and the direction of the President, undoubtedly. First the Naval Reserve; then more if it is needed.

Mr. CHANDLER. This is equivalent to calling out the naval militia in an exigency, exactly as the militia on land can be called out in an exigency. I do not understand that the proposition differs in any particular from the existing law as to the Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FINANCIAL POLICY.

The resolution submitted by Mr. MILLS January 14, 1896, relative to United States legal-tender notes outstanding, coinage of the silver bullion now in the Treasury, etc., was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. MILLS. I should like to have a vote on the resolution.

Mr. PLATT. We can not agree to the resolution under the five-minute rule, and I therefore object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being interposed, the resolution goes over.

TITLES, PATENTS OF NOBILITY, ETC.

The bill (S. 654) to prevent citizens of the United States from soliciting or receiving and accepting titles, patents of nobility, or degrees of honor from foreign nations, and for other purposes, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over, being objected to.

ADJUSTMENT OF CLAIMS WITH ARKANSAS.

The bill (S. 502) to approve a compromise and settlement between the United States and the State of Arkansas was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. An order has been made with reference to that bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been made the special order for 2 o'clock on the 16th of March.

ENFORCEMENT OF THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

The concurrent resolution reported by Mr. DAVIS from the Committee on Foreign Relations, relative to the assertion and enforcement of the Monroe doctrine, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. HALE and Mr. GRAY. Let that go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

ESTATE OF JOHN R. BIGELOW.

The bill (S. 100) for the relief of the estate of John R. Bigelow was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments. The first amendment was, in line 10, after the word "Alexandria," to strike out:

Also the sum of $1,900, being the amount paid by said Bigelow to the United States for the property, he having been deprived of the same, whereby said land was wholly lost to said Bigelow; all.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 16, after the words "second session," to insert:

And that this sum be paid to her in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States on account of the purchase of the Clermont property in July, 1864, by John R. Bigelow and Westel Willoughby and its subsequent occupation by the United States.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Eunice P. Bigelow, administratrix of the estate of John R. Bigelow, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $284.66, as rent of a tract of land, with the buildings thereon, known as Clermont, in Fairfax County, Va., 3 miles from Alexandria, as found and set forth by the Court of Claims in its findings of fact reported in House Miscellaneous Document No. 19, Fifty-second Congress, second session, and that this sum be paid to her in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States on account of the purchase of the Clermont property in July, 1864, by John R. Bigelow and Westel Willoughby and its subsequent occupation by the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELECTRICALLY PROPELLED VESSELS, ETC.

The bill (S. 1646) providing for certain requirements for vessels propelled by gas, fluid, naphtha, or electric motors was announced as the next business on the Calendar.

Mr. QUAY. Let that bill go over.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will not send the bill over. I have sent word to the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], and he will come in soon. I think the bill ought to be passed.

Mr. QUAY. I may withdraw my objection before adjournment. I have not seen the bill in the form in which it is reported.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let the bill be passed over without prejudice, and I will try to call it up later.

Mr. QUAY. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. QUAY subsequently said: I desire to withdraw the objection I made to the consideration of the bill (S. 1646) providing for certain requirements for vessels propelled by gas, fluid, naphtha, or electric motors.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes that all vessels of above 15 tons burden, carrying freight or passengers for hire, propelled by gas, fluid, naphtha, or electric motors, shall be made subject to all the provisions of section 4426 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the inspection of hulls and boilers and requiring engineers and pilots. All vessels so propelled, without regard to tonnage or use, shall be subject to the provisions of section 4412 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the regulation of steam vessels in passing each other; and to so much of sections 4233 and 4234 of the Revised Statutes, relating to lights, fog signals, steering and sailing rules, as the Board of Supervising Inspectors shall, by their regulations, deem applicable and practicable for their safe navigation.

Mr. COCKRELL. I believe the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] reported this bill from the Committee on Commerce, but the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], I think, had a proposition similar to the one embodied in the pending bill.

Mr. PERKINS. This is a substitute prepared by the Committee on Commerce, and it answers the object I had in view in my bill.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator's bill was the measure to which such a large number of objections were made. Senators received letters in relation to it. This bill obviates all those objections.

Mr. VEST. The pending bill is all right.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES LINSKEY.

The bill (S. 680) for the relief of James Linskey from the operation of the act restricting the ownership of real estate in the Territories and the District of Columbia to American citizens was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PASSED ASSISTANT SURGEONS IN THE NAVY.

The bill (S. 1296) to commission passed assistant surgeons in the United States Navy, and to provide for their examination preliminary to their promotion to the grade of surgeon, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that passed assistant surgeons now borne upon the Navy Register shall be commissioned as such by the President, the commissions to bear the dates upon which the passed assistant surgeons, respectively, received their appointments as such. Hereafter assistant surgeons are to be regularly promoted and commissioned as passed assistant surgeons, and passed assistant surgeons as surgeons, subject to such examinations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy. But no examination of passed assistant surgeons is to be ordered until the expiration of six months from the passage of the proposed act, during which time promotions shall be made as now provided by law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SERVICE PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS OF THE LATE WAR.

The bill (S. 241) to grant service pensions to surviving soldiers of the war of the rebellion, with additional amounts to prisoners of war, and to repeal section 2 of the pension act of June 27, 1890, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri desire that the bill shall be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. HARRIS. Let it go over under Rule IX, because it will give rise to a good deal of debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over under Rule IX.

SILVER COINAGE AND COIN REDEMPTION.

The concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. PUGH January 15, 1896, relative to the payment of bonds of the United States issued under certain acts at the option of the Government in standard silver dollars, etc., was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. LODGE. Let the concurrent resolution be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The same order will be made with reference to the concurrent resolution.

JAMES M. WILBUR.

The bill (S. 758) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust and settle the account of James M. Wilbur with the United States and to pay said Wilbur such sum of money as he may be justly and equitably entitled to, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GEORGE. I have paid some attention to the reading of the bill, and I should like to have an explanation of it. It seems to provide for paying Mr. Wilbur what may be found due for furnishing tiling of a heavier weight, he being a contractor, than he was required by the contract to furnish.

I should like to know upon what principle when a man, having made a contract with the Government to furnish tiling of the kind decided by the Government to be proper, of his own motion furnishes tiling of a heavier weight, he is entitled to the difference.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The demand was made by the officers representing the Government that the tiling should be of a different weight and measurement than that called for by the contract. That is the fact. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that this case has been up frequently, and a bill was passed at one time, three or four years ago, and vetoed by the President, the President pointing out certain defects, as he thought, in the bill. The veto was not of a character, as I remember it, which went to the justice of the claim at all, but objection was made to the form of the bill. The veto message came here during the last Congress or the Congress before. The matter was taken up and very carefully considered by the Committee on Claims and another bill drawn with a view of avoiding the objection suggested by the President. That bill was unanimously agreed to by the Committee on Claims and was passed by the Senate. It failed, however, to go through the other House, I think. This is the same bill, introduced again at this session. It has been agreed to unanimously by the Committee on Claims.

It seems to me the bill is very carefully drawn. Of course it assumes that there was some extra work; it assumes that there was some material furnished of a character as to weight and measurement different from that required by the contract. There has been an investigation heretofore by a commission appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury under the direction of the Senate committee. It was a commission of experts composed of Solomon J. Fague and Archibald Given. They made a report that a certain amount was due.

It is provided that the Secretary of the Treasury, if the bill should become a law, shall make a settlement with Mr. Wilbur on the basis of that report, if he deems that report proper. If he does not deem it proper, then he is authorized by the bill to appoint a commission of three persons who are to investigate the whole business anew, and report what amount, if any, under all the circumstances, is justly and equitably due the claimant for any loss he has sustained by furnishing a different kind of material than the contract called for in the first place, and also for any additional work. That is the purport of the bill. It seems to me the bill is well guarded, and that there is no opportunity for any injustice to be done to the Government. I am satisfied from an examination of this case on two or three different occasions that some amount is justly and equitably due Mr. Wilbur.

Mr. KYLE. Did the contractor make the changes with the approval and at the suggestion of the Government officers?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. KYLE. Then I see no reason why the bill should not be passed.

Mr. GEORGE. Some years ago, when I was a member of the Committee on Claims, I remember that this claim was referred to me as a subcommittee to investigate its justice. Of course my memory is not now accurate as to details, but I remember that after a very careful examination of the case I concluded and so reported to the committee, and on it they acted, as I now remember, that there was no just claim on the part of Mr. Wilbur to demand anything more.

The case may have changed somewhat since. I am aware that claims do change as they grow older. The case as it appeared to me was simply this: Mr. Wilbur was a contractor to do certain work upon the post-office building, I think, in New York; some building there. He had a contract to furnish tiling of a certain weight and kind, and on his own motion tiling of another weight and kind, probably better (I think it was proven that the tiling which he furnished was better than the tiling he contracted to supply), was furnished. On that state of facts I reached the conclusion, and it seems to me to be a correct one, that when a contract has been made in pursuance with the law a contractor is not to be permitted to vary the contract and, although he may vary it beneficially, make a claim for the extra benefit to the United States arising from the variation.

That is the way the case appeared to me about ten or twelve years ago, and nothing has been said by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] which changes my opinion on that subject. If the law requires contracts to be made after advertisement and everybody has a right to bid, and a man bids to furnish material of a certain weight and character, and then after he gets the contract, after he excludes all bidders, then, without competition with other parties, furnishes material of a different weight and character and asks for compensation, I think he is not entitled to be paid therefor.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I will only say in reply that this bill has heretofore passed the Senate unanimously, and I see no good reason why it should not pass again.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIEUT. S. S. JORDAN AND CAPT. E. C. CARTER.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 65) to authorize Lieut. Sidney S. Jordan, Fifth United States Artillery, and Capt. Edward C. Carter, assistant surgeon, United States Army, to accept medals from the British Government, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WAR IN CUBA.

The resolution submitted by Mr. CALL January 16, 1896, and reported adversely by Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, calling for dispatches of United States consuls relating to the war now carried on in Cuba, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. CALL. The resolution may be stricken from the Calendar, as the report has been made and printed for the use of the Committee on Foreign Relations and has been before the Senate for some time.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be indefinitely postponed at the request of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

REAR-ADMIRAL W. A. KIRKLAND.

The bill (S. 1676) authorizing Rear-Admiral W. A. Kirkland to accept a gold box presented to him by the Emperor of Germany was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SETTLERS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

The bill (S. 36) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands," was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. BERRY. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over without prejudice.

NAVAL TRAINING STATION, SAN FRANCISCO HARBOR.

The bill (S. 744) providing for a naval training station on the Island of Yerba Buena (or Goat Island), in the harbor of San Francisco, Cal., and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish a training station for naval apprentices on the Island of Yerba Buena (or Goat Island), in the harbor of San Francisco, Cal.; and said Secretary is authorized to designate two officers of the Navy, and the Secretary of War is authorized to designate one officer of the Army, said three officers to constitute a board, who shall select and assign so much of said island as may be necessary for the purpose of establishing said naval training station; and the site so selected, when approved by the President, shall be, by virtue of this act, transferred to the Navy Department for the purposes of said naval training station.

SEC. 2. That all apprentices of the Navy, whether at a training station or on board an apprentice training ship, shall be additional to the number of enlisted persons allowed by law for the Navy.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] whether the Government owns Goat Island?

Mr. PERKINS. The Government owns the island.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the size of the island?

Mr. PERKINS. It is nearly a mile square and contains something less than 500 acres. It is unoccupied for any purpose now except as a station for the Light-House Bureau. The report of the Secretary of the Navy earnestly recommends the passage of the bill. I will state that there is no training station or place on the Pacific Coast where boys can enlist as apprentices. As Senators know, the coast of California alone extends as far as the coast line from Maine to Georgia. There are over 3,000 miles of coast from the lowest portion of California to the northern boundary of Alaska. It is not only important that this station should be established so that we may train up our boys and enlist them in the Navy, but it is a measure in which our people on the coast are very much interested. There is no possible objection to the bill, and I hope it will be passed.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I hope so sincerely. I join cordially with the Senator from California in expressing the hope that the bill may pass without delay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEAM REVENUE CUTTER.

The bill (S. 1478) providing for the construction and equipment of a steam revenue cutter for service on the Atlantic Coast of the United States, with headquarters at the port of New York, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $250,000 for the construction and equipment of a steam revenue cutter of the first class for service on the Atlantic Coast of the United States, with headquarters at the port of New York.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DRY DOCK AT KEY WEST, FLA.

The bill (S. 1243) for the construction of a dry dock at Key West, Fla., was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been reported adversely, it will go over under Rule IX.

ORIN R. M'DANIEL.

The bill (S. 541) for the relief of Orin R. McDaniel was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Orin R. McDaniel, late an enrolled soldier of Company H, Sixty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, upon the records of that company as enrolled December 26, 1863, and discharged February 14, 1864, for disability, and to grant him an honorable discharge accordingly, as of date February 14, 1864, for disability.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSTRUCTION OF RAILROAD BRIDGES.

The bill (S. 213) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Missouri River between its mouth and the mouth of the Dakota or James River; and across the Mississippi River between the mouth of the Minnesota River, in the State of Minnesota, and South Port, in the State of Louisiana; and across the Illinois and Des Plaines rivers between the mouth of the Illinois and the city of Joliet, in the State of Illinois; and to prescribe the character, location, and dimensions of the same, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 10, to strike out "South Port" and insert "Donaldsonville."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 18, line 3, to strike out "South Port" and insert "Donaldsonville."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 18, line 8, to strike out "South Port" and insert "Donaldsonville."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 20, line 28, after the word "War," to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be held or construed to repeal or modify any of the provisions of law now existing in reference to the protection of the navigation of rivers, or to exempt the bridges built under the provisions of this act from the provisions of existing law: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be held to modify, repeal, or affect any franchise, charter, or privilege heretofore granted under or by virtue of any existing law authorizing the construction of any bridge within the limits included in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. There is an amendment to the bill that I do not recognize. I do not know how the word "Donaldsonville" came to be in the bill. I should like to hear an an explanation of that amendment.

Mr. VEST. I do not understand the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I say there is an amendment proposed to the bill that I do not recognize. It is the word "Donaldsonville" inserted in the bill instead of "South Port."

Mr. VEST. That is an amendment in regard to the limitations on the Lower Mississippi.

Mr. NELSON. That was not the limitation we agreed upon in committee.

Mr. VEST. It is the limitation.

Mr. NELSON. That would limit it as to certain territory, and we agreed on a limitation other than that; that the bridges here authorized to be constructed should not interfere with existing charters.

Mr. VEST. Of course, and that is the way I understand the amendment to read. The amendment is just as it was reported from the committee. If the Senator will read it again he will see.

Mr. FRYE. It strikes out "South Port" and inserts "Donaldsonville," that is all.

Mr. VEST. That is all.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to have the bill laid aside temporarily.

Mr. VEST. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will not delay the passage of the bill. A similar bill has heretofore passed the Senate twice and is now upon its passage the third time.

Mr. NELSON. I do not want to delay the passage of the bill, but does not the amendment inserting "Donaldsonville" have the effect to leave a certain zone exempt from the operations of the bill, from New Orleans up to Donaldsonville?

Mr. VEST. No, sir; I do not understand that it leaves it exempt. It provides that the bill shall not change any charter or any right to build a bridge under certain limitations heretofore granted. I did not think the amendment was necessary when the bill was considered in the committee, but a majority of the committee thought so, and I acceded to the wish of the majority.

Mr. NELSON. I do not think that the amendment inserting "Donaldsonville" ought to be in the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be stricken out, then.

Mr. NELSON. If I understand the effect of the amendment in the bill, it is to leave a certain territory there which is now occupied by one particular railroad company with a right to bridge the river so that no other company can build a bridge below Donaldsonville. Is not that the effect of the amendment?

Mr. VEST. No, sir; I do not understand that to be the effect of it. The meaning of the amendment, as the committee understood it, was simply that the company which is now constructing a bridge there should not be deprived of the privilege heretofore granted to that company.

Mr. NELSON. That is right. That is the amendment as I understood it, but I do not know why the term "Donaldsonville" was placed in the bill. That is a point quite a distance above New Orleans, at the mouth of Bayou Lafourche, in Louisiana.

Mr. VEST. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. I do not understand why the bill is limited to that point instead of extending clear down to New Orleans.

Mr. VEST. It was changed at the instance of some member of the committee in order to do exactly what I have stated. The chairman of the committee has a copy of the bill in his hands. I have it not before me, or I could explain it more fully.

Mr. FRYE. I was going to ask the Senator whether that change was not made to save the rights of a charter which already exists for building a bridge in the neighborhood of New Orleans?

Mr. VEST. So I stated.

Mr. FRYE. That exception has been made. It was made in the last bill and the bill before because there was a charter already granting authority to build a bridge above New Orleans and near that city.

Mr. NELSON. But that is not the amendment we agreed on in committee. We agreed on a general amendment that the bill should not interfere with rights already granted. The trouble with this amendment is that it makes a territorial limitation, instead of being a general amendment.

Mr. FRYE. But it leaves it entirely open for anyone who desires to build a bridge to apply to Congress for permission.

Mr. NELSON. Not below Donaldsonville.

Mr. FRYE. Yes; below Donaldsonville. It is still open, I understand, to apply for a special act.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly; it would require a special act to bridge the river below Donaldsonville.

Mr. FRYE. Below Donaldsonville it would require a special act: that is all.

Mr. NELSON. That is not what we agreed on in committee.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will look at the amendment on page 16 he will find that there is no difficulty as to the point he makes. That amendment simply provides—

That nothing in this act shall be held or construed to repeal or modify any of the provisions of law now existing in reference to the protection of the navigation of rivers, or to exempt the bridges built under the provisions of this act from the provisions of existing law: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be held to modify, repeal, or affect any franchise, charter, or privilege heretofore granted under or by virtue of any existing law authorizing the construction of any bridge within the limits included in this act.

Mr. BERRY. If I remember aright, the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], who is not in the Chamber at present, was especially desirous in the committee that other companies should not be prohibited from building down below Donaldsonville, and that as the bill was agreed on in committee, while it was not proposed to interfere with a charter already granted, others should have the privilege under the bill of building, if they desired to do so.

Mr. VEST. They have that privilege. We do not take away that privilege.

Mr. BERRY. I understood the Senator from Maine to say just now that it would require a special act to authorize it. I do not think the Senator from Louisiana understood it that way.

Mr. NELSON. I have the amendment located, and it was not the amendment we agreed on in committee. Section 18 in the original bill limited the bill between the mouth of the Ohio River and South Port, La. The question was raised as to the object of limiting it within that territory, and it was said for the purpose of protecting a right that had already been given to bridge the river, and the point was that it was unnecessary to limit it territorially, that we could put in a clause at the end of the bill by which existing charters should be protected. As the amendment is now framed in the bill, there is a zone below Donaldsonville that we exempt as sacred under the bill which should be covered by the bill. We simply aim by the amendment to protect existing rights to build bridges.

Mr. VEST. That is right.

Mr. NELSON. But not to cut off the operation of this proposed act as to any territory in the future. This would make as sacred a zone below Donaldsonville on the Mississippi River, which was not intended by the committee.

Mr. VEST. I have not the slightest objection to striking it out.

Mr. NELSON. Unless the amendment is left out, I shall have to ask that the bill be allowed to go over.

Mr. VEST. I have not the slightest objection to making the amendment conform to the understanding of the committee. I think it does now, but if the Senator from Minnesota wants to have it changed, let the change be made.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment, in section 18, striking out "South Port" and inserting "Donaldsonville" be disagreed to.

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRYE. And wherever else it occurs.

Mr. COCKRELL. It occurs only twice, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is under the impression that it occurs three times. It first occurs in section 1.

Mr. FRYE. Let the amendment substituting "Donaldsonville" for "South Port" wherever it occurs be disagreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, there are three of those amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the vote by which the amendments were agreed to will be reconsidered.

Mr. VEST. Wherever the words "South Port" occur in the original bill let them be put back and the word "Donaldsonville" be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The three amendments where "South Port" has been stricken out and "Donaldsonville" inserted will be considered as disagreed to, if there be no objection. The Chair hears no objection. The other amendment of the committee is agreed to. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next bill on the Calendar will be announced.

Mr. CAFFERY. Before proceeding to the consideration of another bill, I simply desire to say that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] is entirely correct in his statement with regard to the amendment. I was not in the Chamber at the time the bill was brought up. The amendment included all from the mouth of the Ohio River to Donaldsonville, South Port having been stricken out of the original bill, so as to give the privilege of the construction of bridges across the Mississippi River within this territory. I indorse fully all the remarks which were made in regard to that amendment.

RAILROAD BRIDGE AT LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

The bill (S. 1353) to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act to authorize the building of a railroad bridge at Little Rock, Ark.," approved March 2, 1891, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL CEMETERY NEAR PENSACOLA, FLA.

The bill (S. 295) making an appropriation for the improvement of the road to the national cemetery near Pensacola, Fla., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill proposes to appropriate $10,000 for shelling or otherwise improving the roadway from Pensacola, Fla., to the national cemetery near that city, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL CEMETERY AT FORT DONALDSON, TENN.

The bill (S. 174) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Dover, Tenn., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $11,500 for the purpose of constructing, under the direction of the Secretary of War, a macadamized road, or a road partly of gravel and partly of stone, from the river landing or its vicinity, in the town of Dover, Tenn., to the national cemetery near old Fort Donaldson, the right of way to be not less than 50 feet in width, first being secured to the United States to any part of the ground over which the road shall run.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE], who reported the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs, that possibly it might be well to say "Fort Donaldson Cemetery, near Dover." The title as it stands would convey a very indefinite idea to a stranger. It says "to construct a road to the national cemetery at Dover, Tenn." It should be to Fort Donaldson Cemetery.

Mr. BATE. It is shown very distinctly in the body of the bill that it is for the construction of a road from Dover, Tenn., to the national cemetery near old Fort Donaldson, which is a part of the battlefield of Fort Donaldson.

Mr. HAWLEY. Who knows that it means Fort Donaldson Cemetery?

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill itself says "to the national cemetery near old Fort Donaldson."

Mr. HAWLEY. I am quite well aware of that, but people look to the title of a bill, and expect it to convey an idea of the contents. I merely made the suggestion.

Mr. BATE. I will consent that the title be amended as suggested by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest that the title be amended so as to read, "A bill to construct a road to the national cemetery at Dover, near Fort Donaldson, Tenn."

Mr. BATE. That is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title will be amended as suggested by the Senator from Connecticut, in the absence of objection.

JOHN H. SKINNER.

The bill (S. 340) to amend the military record of John H. Skinner was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to place on the muster rolls of Company G, Eleventh Kentucky Cavalry, the name of John H. Skinner, and give him only pay and allowances as supernumerary second lieutenant from March 31, 1863, to November 1, 1863, or such portion of the time as he actually performed the duties of supernumerary second lieutenant.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. LOUIS AND OKLAHOMA CITY RAILROAD COMPANY.

The bill (S. 1445) to authorize the St. Louis and Oklahoma City Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian and Oklahoma Territories, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, that is a bill which was reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs for a right of way in the Indian Territory. Since it was reported the House of Representatives has passed a similar bill, House bill 1691, which has been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. It is like the Senate bill, except there are one or two changes which are in the nature of better safeguards. I move that the Committee on Indian Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1691) to authorize the St. Louis and Oklahoma City Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian and Oklahoma Territories, and for other purposes, and that it be substituted for the Senate bill which has been reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Senate bill will be indefinitely postponed and the House bill relating to the same subject will be now considered, in the absence of objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1691) to authorize the St. Louis and Oklahoma City Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian and Oklahoma Territories, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN O'KEANE.

The bill (S. 167) for the relief of John O'Keane, of the State of Washington, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, in line 5, after the words "sum of," to strike out "forty-five" and insert "twenty-five"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John O'Keane, of the State of Washington, the sum of $25, as salary due him for services as a farmer in charge of Tulalip Indian Agency, Washington Territory, for the month of October, 1882, and not heretofore paid to him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

The bill (S. 1701) to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know what is the difference between the proposition of the bill and existing law?

Mr. FRYE. The existing law simply retired those who were incapacitated at the time it was enacted. The Secretary of the Treasury says that in a very short time, unless this bill shall become a law, he will be in the same situation he was then, with men at the head of the service who can not be retired and their places filled. This makes provision for regular retirement as the officers become 64 years old or become incapacitated.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the difference in pay?

Mr. FRYE. The difference in pay is that in the sundry civil appropriation act we retired on half pay and in this bill we propose to retire at the retiring pay of three-fourths—waiting orders. These men were all on waiting orders, as the Senator remembers, before we retired them heretofore.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill practically places them on an equality with the army and navy officers?

Mr. FRYE. Except that they do not have the same salaries, the Senator will remember, by about 25 per cent.

Mr. SEWELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine if the provision in this bill is 25 per cent of the present provision of longevity or 20 per cent?

Mr. FRYE. No; 25 per cent. It is the same as it is in the Navy.

Mr. SEWELL. Very well.

Mr. CALL. I should like to know why the officers of this service should not have the same salaries as those of the Navy?

Mr. FRYE. Because the law never provided the same salaries for them, and they are content with this.

Mr. CALL. That is not a very good reason,

Mr. FRYE. No, it is not a very good reason; but they are content, and they are the hardest worked men in the country.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESERVATION OF HERDS AND FLOCKS.

The next business in order was the resolution submitted by Mr. WARREN January 20, 1896, directing the attention of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to the late unprecedented shrinkage in numbers and values of farm animals throughout the United States, as shown by the last published reports of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. BERRY. That resolution has not been referred to a committee, as I understand?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been referred to a committee.

Mr. FAULKNER and Mr. HARRIS. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over without prejudice.

MARGARET KENNEDY.

The bill (S. 753) for the relief of Margaret Kennedy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the payment to Margaret Kennedy, the widow and sole executrix of John Kennedy, deceased, of $3,000, less any sum heretofore paid her in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the relief of Margaret Kennedy," approved October 19, 1888; but the amount herein provided is to be in full compensation for all claim or demand on her part as the executrix of John Kennedy, deceased, or of the claim or demand of the heirs or representatives of John Kennedy by reason of timber, fences, fruit trees, and other property taken and used by the Army of the United States during the late war of the rebellion from the farm of John Kennedy in the District of Columbia, being the farm on which Fort Sedgwick was erected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMODORE LOUIS C. SARTORI.

The bill (S. 641) to promote Commodore Louis C. Sartori, now on the retired list of the Navy, to be a rear-admiral on said list, in accordance with his original position on the Navy Register, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, to strike out section 2 and insert as a substitute therefor the following:

SEC. 2. That upon promotion, as authorized by this act, he shall be allowed the pay of a rear-admiral on account of age, in conformity with the act of Congress approved March 3, 1873, but no additional back pay shall be allowed

Mr. CHANDLER. The word "additional" should be left out. It rather weakens than strengthens the clause. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "additional."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 4 of the amendment, after the word "no," it is proposed to strike out "additional"; so as to read:

But no back pay shall be allowed, etc.

Mr. COCKRELL. What kind of pay does the bill now carry—longevity only?

Mr. CHANDLER. It only gives the commodore, now 80 years of age, the retired pay of a rear-admiral for the future, for so long as he lives after the passage of this act.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does it not give it to him from the time he was entitled to be promoted?

Mr. GIBSON. No.

Mr. CHANDLER. It does not. That was struck out of the bill. The section stricken out prohibits that; and he is only to receive compensation from the date of the passage of the act.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then why not strike out the words "but no additional back pay shall be allowed," and simply say "to take effect from and after the passage of this act"?

Mr. CHANDLER. It says "upon promotion." The Senator will see that it is as clear as it can be made; only I thought the word "additional" weakened instead of strengthened the provision:

That upon promotion—

That is, from commodore to rear-admiral—

as authorized by this act, he shall be allowed the pay of a rear-admiral on account of age, in conformity with the act of Congress approved March 3, 1873, but no back pay shall be allowed.

That is as clear as it can be made.

Mr. COCKRELL. It now reads:

He shall be allowed the pay of a rear-admiral on account of age, in conformity with the act of Congress approved March 3, 1873.

If that law gives him any back pay, he would get it from the date of that law, because he is to be allowed pay in conformity and in pursuance of that law.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is only the retired pay of a rear-admiral. I have not the act before me, but I think I can not be mistaken. I will state to the Senator that that only gives him three-quarters pay of an admiral, the retired pay, "but no back pay shall be allowed."

I am sure it is right, and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] will correct me if I am wrong.

Mr. GIBSON. The Senator's statement is entirely correct, Mr. President.

Mr. COCKRELL. But the amendment does not convey the idea that he shall not receive any pay prior to the taking effect of this act.

Mr. GIBSON. That is exactly the intention of the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Missouri may add:

Or any increased compensation whatever prior to the date of this act.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; and add:

But no back pay or compensation of any kind shall be allowed prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let it read:

But no back pay shall be allowed, nor any additional compensation whatever prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "pay," in line 5 of the new section 2 as reported by the committee, it is proposed to insert:

Nor any additional compensation whatever for any time prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. HALE. Now, let the whole section be read as proposed to be amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 2. That upon promotion, as authorized by this act, he shall be allowed the pay of a rear-admiral on account of age, in conformity with the act of Congress approved March 3, 1873, but no back pay nor any additional compensation whatever for any time prior to the passage of this act shall be allowed.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMODORE OSCAR C. BADGER.

The bill (S. 642) for the relief of Commodore Oscar C. Badger was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the President to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Commodore Oscar C. Badger, now on the retired list of the Navy, a rear-admiral on the retired list, to take effect on and from the 12th day of August, A. D. 1885.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN C. DULL.

The bill (S. 716) to correct the naval history of John C. Dull was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to correct the naval history of John C. Dull, a landsman on the United States ship Ætna during the war with Mexico, so as to relieve him of the charge of desertion, and to give to Dull an honorable discharge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHT-HOUSE TENDER FOR GULF COAST OF FLORIDA.

The bill (S. 656) appropriating $125,000 for the construction of a light-house tender for the Gulf coast of Florida was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 3, to strike out "one hundred and twenty-five" and insert "seventy-five"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That $75,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the construction of a light-house tender for the Gulf coast of Florida, to be constructed under plans made by the Light-House Board, and to be in all respects seaworthy and suited to the service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill appropriating $75,000 for the construction of a light-house tender for the Gulf coast of Florida."

REVENUE CUTTER FOR SERVICE IN GULF OF MEXICO.

The bill (S. 1347) for the construction of a steam revenue cutter for service in the Gulf of Mexico and tributary waters was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to have constructed, at a cost of not exceeding $150,000, a steam revenue cutter of the first class, for service in the Gulf of Mexico and tributary waters.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARREST OF AMERICAN CITIZENS IN CUBA.

The resolution submitted by Mr. CALL January 21, 1896, relative to the arrest of Mark E. Rodriguez and Luis Someillan and son, citizens of the United States, in Cuba, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The resolution was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment, in line 8, after the word "Habana," to strike out "and if no just cause for such arrests exists, to demand their immediate release"; so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to report to the Senate respecting the arrest and forcible removal of Mark E. Rodriguez, a citizen of the United States, on board the United States mail steamer Olivette, in the harbor of Habana, on Wednesday, the 15th instant; also respecting the arrest of Luis Someillan and his son, citizens of the United States, in the city of Habana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

P. S. CORBETT.

The bill (S. 6) for the relief of P. S. Corbett was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to add at the end thereof the following proviso:

Provided, That no allowance shall be made except for money actually expended and services actually rendered in good faith.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the accounts of P. S. Corbett, formerly United States marshal of the State of Nevada, be readjusted by the Treasury Department, and that the services rendered and expenses incurred by said Corbett in his various attempts to arrest George E. Spencer, and for attempting to arrest persons charged with selling liquor to Indians, be allowed under the head of "Extraordinary expense account"; and also that the said Corbett be credited with full mileage, as provided in section 837 of the Revised Statutes of the United States applicable to the marshals of Oregon and Nevada, from the place of arrest to the place of commitment: Provided, That no allowance shall be made except for money actually expended and services actually rendered in good faith.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS ON ACCOUNT OF PIUTE INDIAN INSURRECTION.

The bill (S. 5) referring to the Treasury Department the claims of sundry persons for examination, adjustment, and report to Congress was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that the claims of persons whose property was taken or who rendered services, furnished money or supplies to the volunteer forces under the command of Col. John C. Hays or under the command of Maj. William Ormsby during the insurrection of the Piute Indians in 1860, within the territorial limits of the present State of Nevada, shall be referred to the Treasury Department for examination, adjustment, and report.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF PACIFIC COAST STATES.

The bill (S. 1650) to reimburse the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada for moneys by them expended in the suppression of the rebellion was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate the sums hereinafter mentioned to reimburse and to be paid to the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada for moneys by them expended in aid of the United States in the war of rebellion, to wit:

To the State of California, $3,951,915.42.

To the State of Oregon, $335,152.88.

To the State of Nevada, $404,040.70.

Mr. ALLISON. I think this bill ought to be explained by somebody who knows about it or that the report at least should be read.

Mr. STEWART. I think I can give in five minutes all the explanation that will be necessary.

Previous to the breaking out of the war the compensation paid to army and navy officers, army officers particularly, as they are referred to entirely, was larger on the Pacific Coast and in that region than in the East. In the latter part of 1861, after the war broke out, the law making the difference in compensation was repealed. The people in the West, of course, were familiar with the compensation which had been paid, and there was great difficulty in supplying volunteers as rapidly as required. The States were called upon by the executive officers and the army officers and urged to furnish soldiers immediately for emergencies which existed. The overland route was cut off, and they wanted to move an army east to open communication between the Pacific and the Atlantic. The States made the appropriation, borrowing the money to pay for it, which just about equalized the compensation with what it had been before. It was done in a case of necessity.

The claims have been examined by the board of war claims examiners; the items of account have all been verified, and the simple question is whether the Government will pay these claims for obligations which the States incurred in anticipation that the Government would pay them, with an assurance from the officers that they would be paid from time to time as the Government appropriated the money. No claim has been presented for money paid out on the Pacific Coast, outside of this, notwithstanding there was a great deal of money expended. This money was expended directly in making up the difference in compensation. I do not now recollect the exact amount, but there have been some thirty or forty million dollars appropriated to the other States, and I think these claims stand on as high a ground and that the equities are the same.

That is the opinion of those who have examined the matter. There have been many reports in favor of the claims, several reports being made by the Committee on Military Affairs. Two reports, I think, have come from the Committee on Claims. A similar bill once passed the Senate. Similar bills have been favorably reported in the other House several times. It is a tedious matter to examine, but the result of all examinations has led to one conclusion, and I hope the bill may be passed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not quite understand the Senator from Nevada. Of course the sum that is to be paid to California is very large, some $3,000,000, which amount was paid out by that State, I understand, for military expenses in the war for the Union. Am I correct?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. Of course then it is to be assumed that these were bona fide military expenditures of the State of California, and as such the State should have been reimbursed. Why was it not reimbursed? Why do we have here thirty years after the war a claim of this kind which the Senator from Nevada understands to be very just? What is the peculiarity of the claim that has prevented its adjustment long before this?

Mr. STEWART. There is no peculiarity in the claim except as I shall state. Those States were called upon to furnish troops, as were the other States, and instead of furnishing a given number of soldiers, fitting them out, they contributed to make up the difference between the compensation as it stood after 1861 and what it was previous to that time. Previous to that time the compensation there was higher than in the East. That was the objection to enlistment. The people thought the repeal of that law was unfair, and it became necessary, in order to fill up the regiments and to get soldiers promptly, to put back the compensation to the customary figure.

The States did it. The Government has reimbursed all the States which raised regiments and paid the troops. Instead of raising regiments and paying the soldiers, these States did that which was much more effective—they made up the difference in compensation. The money thus expended was much more effective than it would have been if used in any other way. The amount of money that those States furnished would not have put nearly so many soldiers in the field nor would it have accomplished so good a purpose as it did directed in the way it was. That is the way it was done. It has got to be an old claim, having been put over, just as it may be put over again. It has been up here for ten or fifteen years. We have been trying to get it passed all the while. The claims have been examined thoroughly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. There has been a recent thorough examination of the whole matter by the Department.

Mr. STEWART. The Department has examined it, and the board of war claims spent a year on it, examining it in detail, and they recommend it, recognizing its equity. The War Department recommends it and reports favorably on it. The report is here.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let us understand the point.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] will allow me, I will state that at the last session of Congress a similar bill was passed in the Senate as an amendment to an appropriation bill, but in conference it was eliminated, and I suppose the Senator from New Hampshire, who gives very patient consideration to everything, has perhaps familiarized himself with the rather voluminous report on the subject.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Such a bill was also passed in the Congress before. It has passed the Senate several times.

Mr. CHANDLER. Of course it is something of an argument in favor of a measure that it has once passed the Senate or twice passed the Senate or three times passed the Senate. Still possibly some measure might be proposed here that had passed before which might not be meritorious. I wish to get at the exact point in the case.

Do I understand that the United States has already paid for the compensation of the officers and men of the California, Oregon, and Nevada troops up to the amount of the pay which was allowed such officers and men by the United States law, and that this is a proposition to reimburse California, Nevada, and Oregon for extra compensation to officers and men paid by those States, so that the officers and men of those States received larger pay than troops elsewhere did? Is this extra compensation?

Mr. STEWART. It may be viewed in that light to some extent. That is the main body of the claim, it is true; but the condition out in that country was such that it became necessary to do it. The States were advised and urged to do it, and they did it in good faith. It was very effective. It was not like extra compensation here, because, taking for example Nevada, wages were very high.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, are we supposed to be proceeding under the five-minute rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is proceeding under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] is through——

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from New Hampshire is not through, but he will hear the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. HARRIS. The remark that I would make would cut off further discussion.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I beg the Senator from Tennessee kindly to withhold his remark.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall not interfere with the Senator from New Hampshire while he holds the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will ask the Senator from Nevada a question by way of illustration. Where other officers in the Union Army got $100 a month, California paid her officers $200——

Mr. STEWART. Oh, no.

Mr. CHANDLER. Where another soldier got $12 California paid $24, and now we are proposing to reimburse California for this extra payment to her troops. Is that the case?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; but not to that extent. At that time wages in those States were three times as high as they were in the Atlantic States.

Mr. TELLER. And the expenses of living also.

Mr. STEWART. And living expenses and everything else were three times as high. The repeal of the law providing for the difference in compensation was regarded as a great calamity, and the States were appealed to patriotically to help out the Union by making the appropriations. They did so under the urgent call of the officers who were located in that country.

Mr. CHANDLER. How many States are in this condition?

Mr. STEWART. Three States.

Mr. CHANDLER. Oregon, California, and Nevada?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator know of any other State which paid its officers and soldiers such extra pay?

Mr. STEWART. It does not apply to any others.

Mr. HARRIS. This bill proposes to appropriate several million dollars upon what seems to me a very questionable principle. I do not think we can satisfactorily discuss and consider and understand it under the five-minute rule. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

WILLIAM E. WOODBRIDGE.

The bill (S. 1469) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of William E. Woodbridge for compensation for the use by the United States of his invention relating to projectiles, for which letters patent were ordered to issue to him March 25, 1852, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Patents with an amendment, in line 28, after the word "effect," to insert the words "including right of appeal"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of William E. Woodbridge for compensation for the use of his alleged invention relating to projectiles for rifled cannon, for which letters patent were ordered to issue March 25, 1852, by the United States Government, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims of the United States, which court is hereby vested with jurisdiction in the premises, and whose duty it shall be to hear and determine, according to its usual rules of procedure—

First. Whether the said Woodbridge was the original and first inventor of the said invention and entitled to a patent therefor.

Second. To what extent the said invention has been used by the United States Government, and what amount of compensation, if any, the said Woodbridge ought to receive in equity and justice from the United States Government for the past use of said invention. And in considering and determining the compensation to be made, if any, the said court shall, if it find that the said Woodbridge was the first and original inventor of said invention, and entitled to a patent at the time of its order to issue, namely, March 25, 1852, proceed and be guided in all respects as though the aforesaid letters patent had been actually issued for the term of seventeen years from the date of the aforesaid order to issue; the court to render judgment, irrespective of lapse of time, in favor of the claimant, with the same effect, including right of appeal, as judgments generally of said court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

M. D. CROW.

The bill (S. 516) for the relief of M. D. Crow was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to credit the account of M. D. Crow, late postmaster at Pueblo, in the State of Colorado, with $1,032.62, being the amount necessarily expended by him in conducting the business of that post-office at Pueblo, Colo., from the 1st day of April, 1885, to June 30, 1889, in excess of the amount allowed him by the Post-Office Department.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH SCHWARZ.

The bill (S. 1570) for the relief of Joseph Schwarz was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator repoting that bill is absent, and it needs explanation. I ask that it may go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

FLAG OF ELEVENTH NEW HAMPSHIRE VOLUNTEERS.

The joint resolution (S. R. 24) for the return to the State of New Hampshire of the flag of the Eleventh Regiment of New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARKING OF VESSELS.

The bill (S. 1424) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 4178, Revised Statutes, in relation to the marking of vessels' names at bow and stern, and also to provide for marking the draft," approved February 21, 1891, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in section 1, line 24, to strike out "1894" and insert "1896"; so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, however, That the names on each bow may be marked within the year 1896.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM PIERCE.

The bill (S. 560) granting an honorable discharge to William Pierce was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to correct the military record of, and grant an honorable discharge to, William Pierce, late a private in Company F, Seventh Maine Volunteers, to date June 28, 1865, the date of muster out of his regiment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INVESTIGATION OF MAIL-BAG REPAIR DIVISION.

The resolution proposing to direct the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to investigate certain charges made against the mail-bag repair division of the Post-Office Department, submitted by Mr. KYLE January 28, 1896, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. FAULKNER. Let that be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over at the request of the Senator from West Virginia.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The bill (H. R. 2749) to temporarily increase revenue to meet the expenses of Government and provide against a deficiency was announced as next in order.

Mr. HILL. That bill might lead to some debate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust the bill will not go over. It ought to be passed.

Mr. HILL. It might lead to some debate; that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the request of the Senator from New York the bill will go over, under Rule IX.

SALARY OF POSTMASTER AT WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. 1480) to amend an act entitled "An act to adjust the salaries of postmasters," approved March 3, 1883, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PLATT. I see that the Senator who reported the bill is not present. Perhaps the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] can explain it. The bill says:

The first adjustment (under this act) to take effect simultaneously with the reduction of the rates of postage.

Exactly what that means I do not understand. Does it mean a general reduction, or a reduction on letters?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The bill affects only the postmaster at the city of Washington. The amount of business transacted by the post-office at Washington exceeds that of almost any city in the Union, by reason of the enormous mass of free mail matter which it distributes. The postal receipts are not quite up to those of some of the cities for which the largest allowance is made. The employment of clerks is much greater than in any other city except three or four of the principal cities of the United States. The postmaster is compelled to perform more duties than most postmasters who receive the maximum salary, but, as I have stated, because of the free matter distributed from the city of Washington his office is not classed among the highest. The bill has the indorsement of the Post-Office Department, and is a fitting and a proper act.

Mr. PLATT. It is all right if it applies only to Washington.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is all; it applies only to the city of Washington.

Mr. WILSON. Will the Senator from Colorado please state what other postmasters outside of New York receive the maximum salary of $6,000?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I can not state from memory. My impression is that the list includes New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Buffalo, Cleveland, Baltimore, Chicago, Detroit, and Brooklyn. There are twenty or thirty.

Mr. WILSON. I did not think there was so large a number.

Mr. WOLCOTT. My impression is that there are twenty or thirty.

Mr. WILSON. I thought there were only four or five.

Mr. WOLCOTT. There are more than that number. New York is still higher.

Mr. CALL. I should like to know what is the effect of this bill on the salaries of postmasters.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The effect of the bill is to give the postmaster of the city of Washington $1,000 a year more than he is now getting.

Mr. PLATT. Giving him $6,000 instead of $5,000.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is all.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEN. ALEXANDER STEWART WEBB.

The bill (S. 1106) to place Lieut. Col. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Alexander Stewart Webb on the retired list of the United States Army was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 3, before the word "hereby," to insert "he"; so as to read:

That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 3, to strike out the remainder of the bill, in the following words:

Authorized to appoint, for gallant and distinguished conduct at Gettysburg, Bristoe Station, the Wilderness, and Spottsylvania, Alexander Stewart Webb, late brigadier-general of volunteers and brevet major-general United States Army, a lieutenant-colonel in the Army of the United States, and to place the said Lieut. Col. Alexander Stewart Webb on the retired list of the United States Army, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Alexander Stewart Webb, late a brigadier-general of volunteers and lieutenant-colonel and brevet major-general, United States Army, a lieutenant-colonel, and to place him on the retired list of the Army with that rank and pay, the retired list being thereby increased in number to that extent; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are suspended for this purpose only: Provided, That from and after the passage of this act no pension shall be paid to the said Alexander S. Webb.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

QUIN NE MO SE.

The bill (S. 1704) for the relief of Quin ne mo se, an Indian, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. CHILTON. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over at the request of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the Senator from Texas will withdraw his objection to the bill.

Mr. CHILTON. I am not willing that the bill shall pass unless the Senator will consent to an amendment.

Mr. WILSON. What is the nature of the amendment?

Mr. CHILTON. That any sale made by the Indian shall be with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WILSON. When the bill was before the Committee on Indian Affairs for consideration this matter was pretty thoroughly discussed, and at that time the Senator from Texas desired to amend it by inserting the clause, "subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior." The amount involved is only 160 acres of land, which was taken up by Quin ne mo se, an Indian, in 1885. At that time there were no white settlers around the land, but ultimately they came in and entirely surrounded him. They gave no opportunity for him to send his children to school, so he abandoned the land and moved onto the Cœur d'Alene Indian Reservation, where he could have an opportunity to educate his children. He is very old and he can sell his land and derive some benefit from the money during the remainder of his life. He is probably nearly 80 years old. The land is of no advantage to him now, and it is worth probably $1,800 or $2,000. I should like to see the bill passed merely for the benefit of this Indian. Of course under the objection of the Senator from Texas it can not be done.

Mr. CHILTON. I will state to the Senate that as I understand it, the universal rule in granting to Indians the right to make absolute sale of their lands is to require the consent of some executive officer. It has been usual to require the consent of the President. That was the early practice of the Government. In late years, I believe, the consent of the Secretary of the Interior has been provided for in such cases.

I have no disposition to dispute the facts stated by the Senator from Washington. I have no knowledge whatever which would enable me to deny them. I have no doubt that they are correct; but my attention has not been called to any previous act of Congress where an Indian has been given the unrestrained right to sell his land without any qualification whatever. I believe part of the city of Chicago now stands on Indian land, and the act which authorized the sale of that land provided for the consent of the Chief Executive of the United States. I have looked somewhat industriously into this matter. I do not mean to say that I have looked at all similar acts, but I have not found one in which Indians have been authorized to sell their lands without requiring the consent of some officer of the Government. There may be such a case, but I have not found it.

So it seems to me entirely proper that the usual rule should be followed in this case. If a fair price is obtained for the land the Secretary of the Interior will no doubt consent to the sale. Therefore it seems to me a desirable qualification of the generality of the language which is used in this proposed act to require the consent of the Secretary of the Interior so that the Indian may be protected in securing a fair price for his land. That is all I ask. There should be no objection to it. I see no reason why anyone should object to such a qualification.

Mr. WILSON. No one objects. The matter was discussed in committee, if I may be permitted so to state. I have not the slightest objection; but it seemed to me to go through all the details which would necessarily have to be gone through by the Secretary of the Interior for 160 acres of land was entirely unnecessary. I am perfectly willing that the Senator from Texas shall offer his amendment, but to object to the consideration of a measure of this character without offering an amendment seems to me hardly a courteous thing under the circumstances. If the Senator will offer the amendment I will soon designate whether I have any objection to it or not.

Mr. CHILTON. So far as any question of courtesy is concerned, I do not think the Senator from Washington is qualified to give me any lessons in that respect. I will simply say that I have not offered the amendment at this time because I understood this morning that we were to devote the day to the consideration of unobjected cases. If the Senator will let the bill pass over, in ten or fifteen minutes, if he desires, I will prepare an amendment and offer it at once.

Mr. WILSON. Of course if the Senator offers the amendment it will then be time enough for me either to agree to it or object. The Senator from Texas knows that well enough. When he objected to the bill there was no amendment of that character offered.

Mr. CHILTON. I contented myself with a mere objection because I supposed other Senators had bills on the Calendar which were not contested and that they did not care to await the discussion which would arise upon this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over temporarily.

FREE PUBLIC LIBRARY IN WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. 1247) to establish and provide for the maintenance of a free public library and reading room in the District of Columbia was announced as the next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. WILSON. Let that bill go over under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington objects.

Mr. McMILLAN. I hope the Senator from Washington will not object to this bill. It is a matter of very great importance to the District, and we do not often get a chance to pass any District bills. It proposes to establish a free public library here.

Mr. WILSON. I know; but we seem to be doing something all the time for the District of Columbia.

Mr. McMILLAN. We have not had any District bills considered to-day.

Mr. WILSON. We have raised the salary of the postmaster here and all that sort of thing. It seems to me we have about done enough for the District of Columbia for to-day.

Mr. McMILLAN. That has nothing to do with the District library question. I hope the Senator will not object to this bill. It is a very important measure.

Mr. WILSON. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is withdrawn, and the bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. HILL. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan whether there is any limitation of the amount that may be expended annually?

Mr. McMILLAN. The bill simply provides for the expense of running it, not for any books at all, and it is estimated that it will cost from $3,000 to $6,000 a year.

Mr. HILL. Is there any limitation on the expense of running it?

Mr. McMILLAN. It can not possibly exceed from $3,000 to $6,000 a year. I have no objection to fixing a limit in the bill, limiting it to $6,000. This library is demanded by the school children of the District of Columbia, by the Federation of Labor, and by people who are in the habit of using reading rooms and libraries. It will not be very expensive to the District, because there is a large number of books which will be presented to the library. There will be a number of gifts. Ten thousand dollars in money will be given by the citizens for the purchase of books right away. I hope the Senator from New York will let the bill go through.

Mr. HILL. The citizens of the District have access, under certain regulations, have they not, to the Congressional Library?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No, Mr. President, if the Senator from New York will permit me, they do not, and the children of the District can not reach it at all. When the new city post-office building was first planned it was with the idea of relieving the municipal or other buildings, so that some foundation for a library could be established. The Congressional Library has stood here for years, apparently giving to the citizens of Washington the most extensive and delightful facilities imaginable for the reading of books, the examination of documents, etc.; but, as a matter of fact, it is a closed institution to nearly all the people of the District.

I will say to the Senator from New York that the commencement of this library, which is upon the most modest scale, meets the views and wishes and aspirations of nearly all the people of the District of Columbia. It is recommended by every organization here, and is in the direct line of what other cities are able to accomplish without the intervention or assistance of Congress.

Mr. HILL. The reason I made the inquiry was that whenever I have visited the Congressional Library, which I do occasionally, I find it is pretty well filled with people sitting at tables examining books, who seem to be very courteously treated; but I assume that they have not the right to take books away.

Mr. WOLCOTT. They have not.

Mr. HILL. But are permitted to go and examine the books in the Library at their leisure.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Anybody may go to the Congressional Library during the hours that it is open and examine the books there. I do not know how it is with the Senator from New York, but I know the rest of us are constantly pressed, and probably the Senator is also, by people residing in the District, who have not the facilities of a public library, asking that they may in some way have the use of books, which must be denied to them.

The theory of our Congressional Library is the preservation of books for future time, the gathering and keeping of books for the future in the Library. The theory of the Congressional Library is not that of a circulating library. It really is a diminution of the usefulness of the Congressional Library that its volumes are sent out, as they are sent out, to officials here in Washington, because by means of the Congressional Library alone we secure the preservation for future ages of every book and document that is published in the United States. It stands apparently as a library for the District of Columbia, but it is not in fact a library at all of which they can avail themselves. As the Senator from New York knows, there are thousands of students who gather here, because, under the shadow of the Capitol, different institutions of learning have been organized and established, many of them having night schools, many of them having lectures which are available to people in the Government employ. Many lawyers and doctors are turned out by these different institutions, and to them also such a library as this is very much of a necessity.

Mr. HILL. I would ask the Senator from Colorado, who seems to have given this matter considerable attention, how are these books to be procured? I notice the bill does not speak of that.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The bill provides for that.

Mr. HILL. There must be something for the support of the institution.

Mr. WOLCOTT. One-half of the money is to be raised by citizens of the District, and they have some books available now. The expense will be but a very slight one to the Government of the United States.

Mr. HILL. I observe that the bill provides for the appointment of a librarian, whose salary is not fixed by the bill, and for the appointment of assistants, with all the paraphernalia of a public library. If the facts are as stated by the Senator from Colorado, by whom I assume they are correctly stated, this may be probably a meritorious measure; but I simply suggest that, if adopted, it will be, I fear, the entering wedge for a pretty large annual expenditure. I am not, however, familiar enough with the subject to raise any objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am very glad the Senator from New York calls attention to this matter. I have not been permitted at this session to take so active an interest in this subject as I have done heretofore, because I am no longer on the Committee on the Library or the Committee on the District of Columbia, which committees two years ago had much to do with the consideration of this measure, which on a former occasion, I believe, passed the Senate.

I do not believe this is the entering wedge for any extravagant expenses. These are to be treated as municipal expenses, the payments will be very slight, and the generosity and public spirit of the citizens of the District will be demonstrated and displayed to an infinitely greater degree than any expenditure which we shall be called upon as an appropriating body to make. It is necessary that we should pay the salaries, which will be small.

Mr. FAULKNER. I think it would be well for the Senator from Colorado to state also that no one after 6 o'clock in the evening can have any benefit from the Congressional Library.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is true.

Mr. FAULKNER. That library is closed at a time when it ought to be really accessible to the persons who seek such an institution.

Mr. GALLINGER. That there may no misapprehensions concerning this matter, I think I will take the liberty of stating one or two facts as I understand them.

The Congressional Library is not only open to the citizens of the District of Columbia during the daytime, where they can go and read books, but they can likewise take books from the library if they deposit the price of the books before taking them. That is all that is required to make it a circulating library.

Mr. HILL. Is it contemplated in this new library which it is proposed to establish that people may take the books out without any security whatever?

Mr. GALLINGER. I presume so. Beyond a doubt this is to be a circulating library.

Mr. HILL. There must be a deposit, I suppose?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think not. It is to be a public library.

I have stated that one fact concerning the Congressional Library, and so that we may not be laboring under any misapprehensions I will state one further fact, which is that this is a public library to be established in the city of Washington, the expenses of which will be equally divided between the District of Columbia and the Government of the United States.

I will say just here, Mr. President, even though it may be construed as treason on my part, being a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, that it has been a matter of absolute astonishment to me that the people of this District should have dragged along year after year without having established a public library in this great city. In the State of Massachusetts there are to-day only twenty towns that have not a public library. In the little State that I have the honor in part to represent we have over two hundred public libraries which the people sustain in the different towns. It is true the State gives a little support to those libraries under certain contingencies; but this great city of Washington, with all its wealth and with all its culture, has dragged along to the present time without establishing a public library for the citizens of the District; and now we are going to do it jointly with the District of Columbia by making an appropriation that will be shared so far as the expenses are concerned.

These are the facts. I voted for the bill in committee and I shall vote for it here, because I think it is the best thing we can do.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I should like to state, with the consent of the Senator, that, upon examination, the committee found that nearly every city in the United States provided for circulating libraries by taxation, some in one way and some in another, but under distinct control. The report which has been made in this case is very full and very ample and gives all the facts regarding the subject.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is it not the fact that, as a rule, the people take out the books without being required to make a deposit? That is the case in Boston; it is so in my own State; and the loss is scarcely worth mentioning.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think it a very important matter for the District of Columbia that a public library should be established here.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suppose it is an excuse for the inhabitants of the District of Columbia and for Congress that there has not hitherto been a public library here that the Congressional Library has been so freely used by the inhabitants of the District. There is inconvenience about that, and very great inconvenience. As the present library is conducted, it is always crowded with citizens of the District. They are welcome, whoever they may be, black or white, rich or poor; and the books which they want are furnished to them; seats are furnished them; and there they have all the facilities of a public library; but it is not convenient. There is not room enough in the present library, and there will not be room enough even in the new library, for that kind of patronage.

For a municipal library there needs to be without delay in the city, I may say, exactly what is provided for in this bill, to wit, an ordinary reading library, outside of the Library of Congress, outside of the great National Library, a library that will meet the wants of the common people of the District, so that they can have the privileges which are enjoyed not only by the large cities of this country, but, as my colleague [Mr. GALLINGER] has said, by almost every village of any size throughout the United States.

I hope there will not be a vote against this bill, which I think is well guarded and designed in a modest and a moderate way to lay the foundation for as good a town or city library as is to be found in the country.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I hope the Senator will withhold that motion until the pending bill is disposed of.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well, I will withdraw the motion until the bill can be disposed of.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I have no disposition to antagonize the consideration or passage of this bill at this time, because I suppose it would be entirely fruitless if I did so. I believe the city of Washington ought to have a public circulating library, one to which all persons shall have access at all reasonable hours; but I am a little bit surprised that the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia should see proper, every time a bill is brought in here for the District of Columbia, or the city of Washington, to saddle a portion of the expense of the enterprise, however private it may be, upon the Government of the United States. There is no reason why the rich men and taxpayers of the city of Washington should not support this public library just exactly as the taxpayers in the State of Nebraska or the State of Michigan or the State of New Hampshire or any other State are required to support the public libraries of their States.

There seems to have grown up here—I do not know how long it has existed, or how long it will continue to exist—the thought that the people of the United States must share the expense of every enterprise in this city, however small or however great it may be, and the people of this nation, from California to Maine, must be taxed to maintain those enterprises.

I do not want to be classed as opposed to this measure, or opposed to a measure which will furnish a circulating library here. I shall give my vote at any time for the establishment of a public library wherever one is needed; but, Mr. President, in the State of Nebraska and in the State of Florida, from which you come [Mr. PASCO in the chair], in every State of this great Union, the people themselves support their public libraries. There are places in the United States where libraries of this kind are needed much more than one is needed here, in view of the access that people have to the Congressional Library. It is no argument to say because this is the national capital that therefore we should tax the people of the United States to establish an enterprise which is peculiarly local here.

I am unable at this time to recall a measure which has come from the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia in the last three years which called for an expenditure of money which has not saddled a portion of the expense upon the Government of the United States. If there is one, I should like to have the honorable chairman of that committee mention it.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President, this matter has been before Congress a great many times. I think it is well understood that the United States owns more than half of the property in the District of Columbia. There will be not less than 20,000 employees of the Government who will be entitled to the privileges of this library. Considering that the United States owns half the property and has such a large number of people employed here, and considering also the number of strangers who are coming here all the time, there is no reason I can see why the District of Columbia should pay the whole of the expense, and why it should not be equally divided between the District and the Government of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will allow me to add another consideration which I think has some weight—it is that the taxpayers of every State have a voice in the matter as to whether they shall or shall not be taxed, and as to the amount which they shall be taxed, while there is not a citizen or a taxpayer in the District of Columbia who is consulted or has any voice in respect to the matter of taxation. Congress imposes taxes upon them according to its will and for whatever purposes Congress chooses to do. They have no voice whatever in the matter of being taxed or not being taxed, or the amount to which they shall be taxed.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I think I have the argument in support of this bill put in concise form by the honorable chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia and my honorable friend on my left [Mr. HARRIS]. The first proposition is an old proposition—I have heard it ever since I have been here, and I expect to hear it from time to time whenever any one of these measures comes up—and is that the Government owns over one-half the property in this town, and therefore the Government should pay one-half the expense. There is no argument in that excepting that kind of argument a man uses when he wants to fortify himself in the doing of something which is questionable. Suppose the Government does own one-half or two-thirds of the property in this District, is not the remainder of the property here made more valuable in consequence of that Government ownership, in consequence of the construction of these great public buildings here, in consequence of the annual convening of Congress, in consequence of the national capital being here? Are those considerations to have no weight in determining the rights of the District of Columbia?

I would not place upon these people any unnecessary restriction; I am not hostile to them; but outside of the 250,000 people who can be found in the District of Columbia, there are 70,000,000 taxpayers of this country, whose interests ought to be consulted to some extent; and there is no more reason why Congress should bear a portion of this expenditure than why Congress should bear a portion of the expense of maintaining a public library in Boston, or in New York, or in Chicago, or out in one of the little cross-road towns of the West or South.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLEN. Let me answer my friend the honorable Senator from Tennessee first. He says the people of the District of Columbia have no voice in the question of taxation, and that is true; but that is in consequence of their own volition. This was designed by the fathers when it was established to be a Federal district. It was not supposed that people were to come here for the purpose of speculating, for the purpose of making money, and trafficking and dickering. It was supposed to be peculiarly a Federal city. If those people came here, as they have, with the full knowledge that they would be deprived of their suffrage by coming into the District of Columbia, they took into account other considerations, which counterbalanced the inconvenience arising from their being deprived of the suffrage. So there is nothing in that argument.

Mr. PLATT. I wanted to ask the Senator how far his objection went—whether it went so far as that he would not have the Government pay half of the educational expenses of the District, or whether he would put all the educational expenses of the District on the citizens, because I think the proposed library is right in line with the educational system of the District?

Mr. ALLEN. My objection does not go to the question of the education of youth, the establishment of common schools here. I think it is perfectly proper for Congress to maintain these schools and give the children of this District all the opportunities desirable for education; I fully agree with that; but here is to be a library to be established for the benefit of the people of this District exclusively. Under the bill introduced and reported by the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia I should have no right to go into that library and obtain a book, and no person who was staying here transiently and was not a resident of the District of Columbia would have a right to use that library.

Mr. CALL. Oh, yes, he would.

Mr. ALLEN. My friend back here interpolates the thought that nonresidents would have that right.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I call the Senator's attention to section 2 of the bill, which reads:

SEC. 2. That all persons who are permanent or temporary residents of the District of Columbia shall be entitled to the privileges of said library, including the use of the books contained therein, as a lending or circulating library, etc.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well. Suppose the world is entitled to it. I suppose there is probably not a public library in the United States into which a person can not walk, and if he is halfway respectable, or presents any kind of security, obtain a book. Let us grant, for argument's sake, that the world can go in here and get a book. Why, then, should not the people of this city, who are rolling in wealth—I would not say the majority of them, but a great number of them—who want this library, like the people of other sections of the country, establish and maintain their own public library? If I were to ask Congress for an appropriation for the establishment of a library in my little town I should be hooted at; it would be regarded as ridiculous; and yet every day of the session of Congress there comes in a bill here of some kind which is to take money out of the public Treasury, and therefore out of the pockets of the people of the nation, for the purpose of maintaining some enterprise for this District and this city.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the duty of the Chair to remind the Senator from Nebraska that the Senate is proceeding under the five-minute rule.

Mr. ALLEN. I am glad to receive that information by way of the Chair.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, this seems to be a free discussion, and I should like to express my own views with regard to the District of Columbia.

I do not agree with my distinguished friend from Nebraska. I think that the people of the United States ought to have, and do have, a just pride in the improvement of the national capital. I believe the day is coming when cheap transportation will give all the people of the United States access to this city and its educational advantages. I think this ought to be made the model city of the world, with no monopolies, with the benefits of education free to all, with the comforts of good living; and if there be any economies that concentrate the real estate in this District in the hands of a few, as my friend thinks, they ought to be abolished.

When you speak of making property dear and paying the taxes of the whole city and the District of Columbia and all the great improvements here, what do you mean? You are only taxing the poor people who have to rent the houses; you are only taking that much away from their salaries. They pay the taxes; they make the property valuable, and if you are going to impose upon this little District, because some few people own large amounts of property, all the taxation necessary to sustain its educational advantages, which ought to be the best in the world, you will make it so dear to live here that no poor man or his family can afford to live here or can have those advantages.

I would tax the people of the United States whatever is necessary to make this capital their proper representative; I would restrain monopolies of all kinds, and make the cost of living cheap, so that the poor people of the United States may come here and their children may come, and have the best advantages of education which the world can afford.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

Mr. VEST. What is the amount appropriated in the bill?

DESECRATION OF THE NATIONAL FLAG.

The bill (S. 1012) to prevent the desecration of the national flag was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the national flag or the coat of arms of the United States, or any imitation or representation thereof, shall not be attached to or imprinted or represented upon any goods, wares, or merchandise, or any advertisement of the same. And no goods, wares, or merchandise, or any advertisement of the same, shall be attached to the national flag or the coat of arms of the United States, and no such advertisement shall be imprinted thereon. Any violation of this act shall be punishable, on conviction in either of the circuit or district courts of the United States or the supreme court of the District of Columbia or the courts of the Territories, within their respective jurisdictions, by a fine of $50 for each offense.

Mr. GRAY. Let that bill go over.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I hope the Senator from Delaware will withdraw his objection. We have listened patiently to the reading of bills all afternoon, and I think this is a very important measure. If the Senator has anything to say on the subject, we will be glad to hear it.

Mr. GRAY. At this late hour? There is a great deal to be said on the subject, and I do not think that it is legislation which ought to be taken up at the close of an afternoon in this hasty way. If the measure is important, as the Senator thinks it is, it should have time for consideration. I am opposed to it, and I should like to state the reason why I am opposed to it. I do not think this is the time to curtail the circulation of the American flag at all. I believe it ought to have as wide a circulation as possible, and we ought to have American industries protected by the American flag. I believe in it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish we could protect them in some way.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. This measure certainly has not come before the Senate in a hasty manner. It has been before the body for three months, and it has been right well advertised, if I may use that word, by the public press. Almost every patriotic organization in the United States has petitioned the Congress of the United States to pass the measure. So it is not a matter as to which the Senator from Delaware can plead ignorance, for he has had ample opportunity heretofore to study it.

Mr. GRAY. I am a patriotic organization myself. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being interposed, the bill will go over.

JOHN W. LEWIS, OF OREGON.

The bill (S. 509) for the relief of John W. Lewis, of Oregon, was next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. GRAY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. We have just reached a small bill which it will take only a moment to pass. I hope the Senator from Delaware will allow the bill to be considered.

Mr. GRAY. Very well, I withdraw the motion.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 509) for the relief of John W. Lewis, of Oregon. It proposes to pay to John W. Lewis, register of the land office at The Dalles, Oreg., $521.97, being the amount of his maximum compensation in addition to his salary from April 17, 1890, to July 7, 1890.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARIZONA SCHOOL LANDS.

Mr. GRAY. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Pending the motion of the Senator from Delaware, the Chair lays before the Senate a memorial, by telegraph, of sundry citizens of Flagstaff, Ariz., remonstrating against the passage of the bill to lease Arizona school and university lands. The memorial will lie on the table.

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

DESECRATION OF THE NATIONAL FLAG.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 1012 be made the special order of the Senate for Friday next at 2 o'clock, not displacing appropriation bills.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. GORMAN. What is the request?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request of the Senator from North Dakota is that the bill indicated by him be made a special order for Friday at 2 o'clock.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the bill?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is Order of Business 213 on the Calendar.

Mr. HARRIS. What is it?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will have the Secretary announce the bill by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1012) to prevent the desecration of the national flag.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—WAR IN CUBA.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following concurrent resolution, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That, in the opinion of Congress, a state of public war exists in Cuba, the parties to which are entitled to belligerent rights, and the United States should observe a strict neutrality between the belligerents.

Resolved, That Congress deplores the destruction of life and property caused by the war now waging in that island, and believing that the only permanent solution of the contest, equally in the interest of Spain, the people of Cuba, and other nations, would be in the establishment of a government by the choice of the people of Cuba, it is the sense of Congress that the Government of the United States should use its good offices and friendly influence to that end.

Resolved, That the United States has not intervened in struggles between any European governments and their colonies on this continent; but from the very close relations between the people of the United States and those of Cuba, in consequence of its proximity and the extent of the commerce between the two peoples, the present war is entailing such losses upon the people of the United States that Congress is of opinion that the Government of the United States should be prepared to protect the legitimate interests of our citizens by intervention, if necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives.

Mr. LODGE. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TELLER. Let it be read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was read by the Secretary.

Mr. GORMAN. I suppose as a matter of course the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, but I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a practice which seems to have grown up here. When such a resolution is presented it is read in full by the Clerk in delivering it to the Senate and then again it is properly and naturally read by the Secretary. In this case and at this time of the session it is a matter probably of no inconvenience, but it is a consumption of time, and a practice is growing up which would be troublesome near the close of a session. I merely wish to call attention to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the resolution was called for by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. GORMAN. I do not object to the reading at the desk. That was proper and necessary; it was indispensable, under the rules of the Senate, but when it reached the Senate it was read by the officer of another body, and I think such a practice is unusual. I merely want to call attention to it now, so that the proceeding may be abbreviated hereafter.

Mr. CALL. I am informed that the concurrent resolution has no title, and therefore it could not be read by title. I make this statement in justification of the Clerk of the House.

Mr. GORMAN. But the custom has grown up; it has been followed not only in this, but in other cases. I trust the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GRAY. I renew my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 3, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 2, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY M. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

NEW RIVER, VIRGINIA AND WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. TOWNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Calender of the Committee of the Whole House, for present consideration, the bill (H. R. 6250)——

Mr. HOOKER. If the gentleman will yield to me for a moment, there is a matter coming over from Saturday——

Mr. TOWNE. Certainly.

Mr. HOOKER. I understand the gentleman from West Virginia who raised the point of order on the bill I offered on Saturday in reference to New River is willing now to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HULING. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Speaker, with the understanding that the bill is to be recommitted to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. HOOKER. I now ask unanimous consent that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

IMPROVEMENT OF NEWTOWN CREEK, NEW YORK.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask to call up for present consideration a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

I ask present consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 108) directing the Secretary of War to submit estimates for work upon Newtown Creek, New York.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to submit estimates for work upon Newtown Creek, New York, with a view to secure a depth of 18 feet and a width of 125 feet at low water from its mouth to the head of navigation, in accordance with the plans heretofore submitted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent——

Mr. HOOKER. No, Mr. Speaker, this is a privileged matter and I ask that it be taken up for present consideration. It simply calls upon the Secretary of War for some information in his hands for the improvement of the Newtown Creek Harbor, of New York. It involves no appropriation.

Mr. DINGLEY. I do not like the principle, Mr. Speaker, to be established that these matters are privileged. There is no objection to the consideration in the present case, but I think it would be better not to establish a principle that may lead to trouble in this regard hereafter.

Mr. HOOKER. I understand that they are privileged matters. I have no objection, however, in view of the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine, to have it considered in that way this morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HOOKER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SPRING GARDEN HARBOR, BALTIMORE.

Mr. HOOKER. I now call up for present consideration the resolution I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War furnish to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives an estimate of the cost of deepening the channel of the harbor of Southwest Baltimore (Spring Garden) to the depth of 27 feet.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have no objection to the resolution, but wish to make a suggestion to the gentleman, after consent is given, as to its verbiage.

Mr. HOOKER. There is a correction that I propose to make in the resolution after consent is given to consider it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I think the resolution ought to call on the Secretary of War to furnish to the House of Representatives the information requested, and after it is furnished it can be referred by the House to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. That is the usual form. I think the resolution is all right with that exception.

Mr. HOOKER. I shall ask the House to make that amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to amend by striking out in the resolution the words "Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives" and insert "the House of Representatives."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War furnish to the House of Representatives an estimate of the cost of deepening the channel of the harbor of southwest Baltimore (Spring Garden) to 27 feet.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to inquire of the chairman whether this involves a new appropriation or whether it is a continuation of work already begun?

Mr. HOPKINS. It is an old work, and simply modifies an existing contract which will be completed without additional expense.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HOOKER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

IMPROVEMENT OF MOBILE HARBOR.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, for consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 54) to authorize the National Dredging Company to proceed with the work of dredging the channel of Mobile Harbor, under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the National Dredging Company, the contractor under the continuing contract for the improvement of the harbor at Mobile, Ala., proceed with the work of dredging, under the direction of the Secretary of War, until the channel under improvement shall be completed to a width of 280 feet and a depth of 23 feet for its full width of 280 feet, payment therefor to be made at the rate specified in said contract, 7.7 cents per cubic yard, out of appropriations as they shall hereafter from time to time be made: Provided, That the payments upon said contract shall not exceed in the aggregate the sum limited for said work in the appropriation bill of July 13, 1892, authorizing a continuing contract for said work.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGLEY. There is an amendment, I believe, that the gentleman has agreed to offer to this resolution.

Mr. HOOKER. Yes. I offer the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Maine, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "contract," in line 13, insert "shall be held to be due only after appropriations shall have been made therefor, and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to a third reading, and being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. HOOKER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER, MINNESOTA.

Mr. TOWNE. Mr. Speaker, I now renew my request for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6250) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River in the county of Aitkin, Minn.

The bill was read. It provides that the county of Aitkin, in the State of Minnesota, is hereby authorized and empowered to erect, establish, and maintain, or authorize the erection, establishment, and maintenance of a wagon bridge across the Mississippi River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, from a point on the northerly bank of said river on or near the boundary line between sections 23 and 24, township 47 north, of range 27 west of the fourth principal meridian, in said county, so as to connect with the opposite shore of said river; that said bridge shall not interfere with the free navigation of said river beyond what is necessary in order to carry into effect the rights and privileges hereby granted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, what is the report on that bill?

Mr. TOWNE. The report is brief. I ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The report (by Mr. FLETCHER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6250) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River in the county of Aitkin, State of Minnesota, submit the following report:

There is great need of a bridge at the point named in the bill, to accommodate the rapidly growing business and travel of this region. Heretofore, until recently, the lumber industry has practically monopolized the activities of the people of Aitkin County and the adjoining territory on the Upper Mississippi, but of late there has been an extraordinary development in agriculture and a corresponding growth in pursuits dependent to a large degree upon that industry. The soil has been found to be of exceeding fertility in Aitkin County, and a very large farming population has settled upon lands on the side of the river opposite to the village of Aitkin, where it is proposed to build this bridge.

The population of the village in 1890 was 737, and by 1895, as shown by the State census just published, it had become a thriving community of 1,670 souls. It is a well-built and energetic town and will unquestionably continue to grow for a long time to come in much the same ratio. The population of the county has in the same interval increased from 2,462 to 5,224, or more than 100 per cent. The bridge has really become an absolute necessity to these people, and they have provided the money for a substantial and appropriate structure upon a plan that has received the approval of the Secretary of War, and are now ready to proceed with the building of the bridge.

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass, with the following amendment, viz:

Strike out, in section 4, line 28, the word "Congress" and insert in place thereof "the Secretary of War."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, set forth in the report, was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TOWNE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the reprint of the bill H. R. 6309, the supply of which has become exhausted.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

ARKANSAS AND NORTHWESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY, INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5564) authorizing the Arkansas and Northwestern Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The bill was read. It provides that the Arkansas Northwestern Railway Company, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Arkansas, be, and the same is hereby, authorized and invested and empowered with the right of locating, constructing, owning, equipping, and operating, using, and maintaining a railway and telegraph and telephone lines through the Indian Territory upon a line beginning at a point to be selected by said railway company at or near the town of Southwest City, in the county of McDonald, State of Missouri, and running thence in a northwest direction over the most practicable route through the Indian Territory to a point between Chetopa and Baxter Springs, in the State of Kansas, with the right to construct, use, and maintain such tracks, turn-outs, sidings, and extensions through such Territory as said company may deem to their interests to construct along and upon the right of way and depot grounds herein provided for.

The Committee on Indian Affairs recommended the following amendments:

In line 43, section 3, strike out the following words: "held at Fort Smith, Ark." and insert the following language: "for the northern division of the Indian Territory exercising jurisdiction over the territory in which the lands sought to be condemned are situate." Also by striking out all of section 7.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DINSMORE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PROPOSALS FOR NAVAL SUPPLIES.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4179) to amend section 3719 of the Revised Statutes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3719 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, accept, in lieu of the written guaranty required to accompany a proposal for naval supplies, and in lieu of the bond required for the faithful performance of a contract for furnishing such supplies, a certified check, payable to the order of the Secretary of the Navy, for the full amount of such proposal or contract, the check to be held by the Secretary of the Navy until the requirements of the proposal or contract shall be complied with and as a guaranty for compliance with the same."

Mr. THOMAS. I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. THOMAS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4179) to amend section 3719 of the Revised Statutes, having carefully considered the same, respectfully submit the following report:

The Judge-Advocate-General, in his report for the year 1895, recommends the use of certified checks in lieu of bonds, and makes the following statement on page 15 of his report:

"CERTIFIED CHECKS IN LIEU OF BONDS.

"In my previous annual reports attention has been invited to the serious inconvenience sometimes occasioned by requiring bonds to accompany all contracts for furnishing naval supplies. It is well known that large dealers with whom the Department would find it advantageous to deal are frequently deterred from submitting proposals where the quantity of supplies to be furnished is not great in consequence of their reluctance to solicit the favor of personal suretyship or to enter into the elaborate formal obligations necessary to obtain corporations as sureties. The service thus loses the advantage of the competition which the appearance in the field of these large dealers would develop. The difficulty could be readily and satisfactorily met without prejudicing the interests of the Government by a provision authorizing the acceptance of certified checks in lieu of bonds in cases where such action is deemed by the Secretary of the Navy to be desirable.

"Certified checks covering the full amount of the contract could be given without inconvenience by bidders of the class whose competition is especially desired, and such checks might very properly be accepted in lieu of the written guaranty required by law to accompany proposals for naval supplies, as well as in lieu of the bond for the faithful performance of the contract when awarded."

And the Secretary of the Navy, in his annual report for the year 1895, says:

"CERTIFIED CHECKS.

"I renew my previous recommendation that section 3719 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to allow the Department to accept certified checks covering the entire amount of contracts in lieu of a guaranty and bond required by that section. In small transactions business firms frequently decline to bid on naval supplies because they do not consider the amount involved justifies them in furnishing the bonds required by law, and thus the Government fails to profit by the low prices which larger dealers can afford to offer."

In view of the foregoing statement of the Judge-Advocate-General and the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, your committee respectfully recommend that the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. As I understand, all that this bill does is to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept certified checks in lieu of bonds when bidders submit proposals for supplies for the Navy.

Mr. THOMAS. In cases when it is inconvenient to give bonds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. THOMAS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LIEUT. COMMANDER R. M. G. BROWN.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present a bill unanimously reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, for immediate consideration. It is the bill (S. 1417) authorizing the President of the United States to nominate Lieut. Commander R. M. G. Brown, now on the retired list, to be a commander on the retired list.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to nominate to the Senate Lieut. Commander R. M. G. Brown, now on the retired list, to be a commander on the retired list.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BAILEY. Before unanimous consent is given, I want to inquire the purpose of this bill.

Mr. DAYTON. This bill is recommended by the Navy Department, has been recommended and passed unanimously by the Senate committee, passed unanimously by the Senate, and is unanimously recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House.

Mr. BAILEY. That raises a very strong presumption in favor of it, but it is not conclusive. I wish to inquire if it increases the pay of the beneficiary?

Mr. DAYTON. Not to any appreciable extent. I want to say that Lieut. Commander R. M. G. Brown was the hero of the Samoan incident. He was injured in the service, and placed on the retired list because of an injury which he received in service. His retirement on account of this injury took place before the period when he could be retired as commander. This simply authorizes the President to nominate him as a commander upon the retired list, which rank he would have been entitled to had he not been injured in the service.

Mr. BAILEY. But, as a matter of fact, it authorizes a promotion of a retired officer of the Navy and an increase of his salary?

Mr. DAYTON. It simply authorizes the President, if he sees fit and deems it wise, to nominate him to a commandership as a recognition for the conspicuous service he rendered.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I think that this bill would establish a bad precedent, and though I shall not object to its present consideration, I will certainly vote against its passage.

Mr. DAYTON. If you will only read the report from the Secretary of the Navy, I think you will not object.

Mr. CANNON. This bill should be considered in Committee of the Whole——

Mr. DOCKERY. In the regular way.

Mr. CANNON. And I shall make the point of order that it should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. If the House wants to stop and consider it, I have no objection.

Mr. DAYTON. I ask unanimous consent for its consideration. I am satisfied if gentlemen will read the report, or allow it to be read, they will not object. Let the report be read.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that this is a departure from the regular rule, and that kind of a departure ought not, in my judgment, to be entered upon until it is fully considered by the House in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAYTON. I want to say to the gentleman that it has been recommended by the Department as an exceptional case. It has been considered by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, and it has also been considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that.

Mr. DAYTON. I ask unanimous consent that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill S. 1447, which has been read to the House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. DINGLEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill S. 1447, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. DAYTON. I ask that the report of the committee may be read, and the papers accompanying it.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask for the reading of the bill that is to be considered. A good many of us have not heard it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was again read.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill——

Mr. MCMILLIN. I rise to a point of order. There is such confusion that we can not hear the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will please be in order. The gentleman from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask the gentleman what is the pay of a lieutenant-commander on the retired list?

Mr. DAYTON. I am not able to answer that question.

Mr. DOCKERY. Can the gentleman state what the pay of a commander on the retired list is?

Mr. DAYTON. No, sir; I am not prepared to answer that question now. Other members of the Committee on Naval Affairs can answer it. It involves a calculation which I have not made.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then the gentleman is unable to state what increased charge is involved by the passage of this bill?

Mr. DAYTON. No, sir. I am informed that the difference between the pay is very little, if anything—a few hundred dollars a year. The object of this bill is to authorize this brave officer, a man of whom I think we all know, and who was injured in the service, to have that rank which his classmen and others who served with him are now having, he having been put upon the retired list by reason of injury received in the service before he could reach such rank. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to say anything except that the Committee on Naval Affairs in the Fifty-first Congress had considered and reported several bills, if my recollection serves me, in reference to the Samoan hurricane of 1889. The record of that catastrophe shows that Lieutenant Brown, by his gallantry, by his courage, by his seamanship, saved a ship of the United States in the harbor of Apia when several of our vessels were wrecked. My judgment is that he earned by his service upon that occasion the right to this promotion and that he should have had it when he was retired. I believe this House and everybody familiar with his extraordinary service on that occasion will concede to him the right to receive now, since his retirement on account of disabilities incurred in the country's service, the promotion to which he was entitled when the retiring board acted upon his case.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized in opposition to this measure. I have not heard as yet any very good reason advanced why this exception should be made in the case of a retired officer of the Navy over and above that which could apply to every other retired officer. The retired list now is large, and it is steadily being increased by the retirement of officers reaching the age limit. Of course one is occasionally retired as the result of accident or some disability incurred in the discharge of his duty, as in this case, but I can see no reason which can be urged why a special act should be passed for the benefit of this officer that can not be given in the case of almost every man on the retired list, especially those, Mr. Chairman, who have a war record.

In the Committee on Military Affairs we have numerous cases like this coming up, where men are claiming consideration because of their distinguished and able service in the war, in the face of the enemy, when shot and shell were flying thick and fast; and they are far more deserving than where officers were merely doing their duty when a hurricane struck the vessel. I do not wish to disparage this gentleman in any respect, or his achievements, but when it is asked by a special act to give him increased pay and allowance on the retired list, I think it is setting a dangerous precedent, as we have already a very large retired list. Therefore I can not suffer a bill of this character to go through without entering my solemn protest against it, or until more urgent reasons for its passage shall have been given than I have heard. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. DAYTON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER].

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Chairman, as a rule I am as much opposed to special legislation of this character as any member of this House could possibly be, but it seems to me that this case presents such exceptional merit that the committee will be perfectly justified in indorsing the action of the Senate and approving the unanimous report of the Committee on Naval Affairs. The difference in pay which would accrue to this officer by the passage of this bill is not of any very great importance; it amounts only to about $525 per annum. Nor will the Government, in my opinion, be charged with that difference for a very long period of time. This officer was disabled under circumstances that should command our highest consideration, and I very much fear that we may not have him with us many years more. My friend from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON] very properly alludes to the merits of officers who have rendered valuable service and suffered disabilities under fire and during war, but from what I have heard of the achievements of this officer and of the circumstances surrounding them I consider that it required as much courage, as much devotion, and as high a degree of intelligence to perform the feat that is credited to him during that terrible storm at Apia as it does to stand before the fire of an enemy and face the shot and shell of a naval engagement.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the only reason why this officer is not now retired as a commander instead of as a lieutenant-commander is because he had to be retired sooner owing to disabilities contracted in the public service.

Mr. MEYER. So I understand.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And that if he had not contracted that disability in the public service he would now be entitled to retirement as a commander?

Mr. MEYER. That is my understanding.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. In other words, the wounds he received in the service of the Government have been the obstacle in the way of his retirement with the rank of commander?

Mr. MEYER. That is my information.

Mr. STEELE. Has he any wounds?

Mr. DOLLIVER. He is totally disabled.

Mr. STEELE. But has he any wounds?

Mr. MEYER. He was struck by a boat subsequently, and I think received some wounds in that way.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I wish to ask my friend from Louisiana a question. Suppose a man had been disabled and retired as a lieutenant, would not you have just the same right to jump him up to the rank of an admiral upon the ground that if he had served long enough he would have reached that rank?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether the opportunities for getting disabled in the public service have not been very great of late years?

Mr. WASHINGTON. Having had considerable experience on one or two committees, I think the opportunities have been very great, considering that we are in a time of peace.

Mr. MEYER. In answer to the inquiry of my friend from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON], I will say that it would certainly be within the power of Congress to promote an inferior officer to the rank of admiral, but it is not to be supposed that that would be done except under circumstances that fully justified it.

In this case no such suggestion is made. It is an extremely moderate request, asking a promotion of only one grade on the retired list and not of five grades, as in the case conceived by the gentleman from Tennessee, and I hope this bill will receive favorable action by this committee.

We have no other method under our system of recognizing such brilliant service. Foreign Governments award titles and decorations to their sons who perform distinguished acts. We have but the method here proposed to reward our heroes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to submit a few remarks about this bill. The pay of a lieutenant-commander is $2,800 a year. The pay of a commander is $3,500 a year. When these officers go upon the retired list they receive three-quarters pay. This officer now on the retired list receives $2,100 per year. If this bill passes he will receive $2,625 a year. Now a word, not as to the merits of this officer, but as to the propriety of such legislation as is here proposed, and I am glad that I am not acquainted with this officer, as that fact enables me to say what I desire to say without prejudice either for or against him. I have no doubt he is a gallant and worthy man.

Gentlemen, understand the policy of the Government toward the Army and Navy. Persons in private life are in the habit of thinking that, at least in "these piping times of peace" the officers of our Army and Navy are a favored class. For instance, take Lieutenant-Commander Brown; he was educated at the Naval Academy at the Government expense; he was employed in the service, which is an honorable one, at a salary which is above that which men of ability can command for personal service in civil life—I am not objecting to this, but simply stating the facts—while the man in civil life gets his own education and makes his own way.

Now, Lieutenant Brown in the performance of his duty did it well. It was in time of peace that he did it, but he did it well. He lost his health, and he has been retired, and during his life he receives three-quarters pay, or at the rate of $2,100 a year. In civil life the man who has had to make his own way, when he is retired for disability not only suffers that retirement, but does not receive a cent of pay. Now, the United States has set aside a small body of men in the Army and Navy, representing the forceful arm of the Government, and we care for them in health, and when they are retired we give them three-quarters of their full pay. The crying complaint is that the retired list grows constantly, yet we retain it, and ought to retain it.

Now, I do not know that I would object in this case to taking the expectancy of this man's life by the Carlisle tables, if you please, and making him a suitable compensation if he be in circumstances where he ought to receive increased pay and the grateful recognition of the Republic, because this would not make a precedent for promoting officers while on the retired list. But when you take a man who is a lieutenant-commander, who received his injuries in time of peace, and pass a bill after he is retired giving him the promotion which results in the increase of his pay, you thereby make a precedent that authorizes every one of the men who did meritorious service during the late war in the Navy and is now upon the retired list to come in and ask for such special legislation. I do not believe in special legislation except when it is absolutely necessary for the honor of the country and for the public well being. Individuals are incidents.

I do not know—this report does not inform us—of any circumstances that would authorize us to make this precedent. I say again, this question is not only of merely $625 additional per annum for this man; the important matter is the precedent which it will establish, and which, if this bill pass, will, before the present Congress closes, bring men here by the dozens asking for special legislation to promote them upon the retired list. Hence, from the standpoint of general policy, I doubt the wisdom of the bill, and from that standpoint I shall vote against it.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to occupy a moment in opposition to this bill. It provides for the promotion of Lieutenant-Commander Brown, now on the retired list, to the rank of commander on the retired list. So far as I can now recall, this is the first proposition that has been submitted to this body during the nearly fourteen years of my service here to promote either a military or a naval officer upon the retired list. Committees have repeatedly reported and the House has considered propositions to place officers on the retired list, but so far as I now recall—and I invite correction of the statement if it is not accurate—this is the first time within fourteen years that this body has been called upon to invade the retired list and enter upon a policy of promotions there.

Mr. LACEY. I think Colonel Merrill was promoted in this way.

Mr. DOCKERY. If that be true the fact has escaped my attention. But I suppose in that case the promotion, if granted as the gentleman suggests, was due to some special service in the war for the Union. In the present case the promotion, if authorized, is not on account of service in the late war, but because of service in a time of profound peace. I admit the conspicuous character of this service. For this officer personally I have nothing but words of commendation. But unless it be that this body desires to recognize distinctive and conspicuous service by cash contributions only, let the gentleman from West Virginia, who has this measure in charge, bring in a joint resolution identifying the distinguished service of this officer, if it be proper to accord him such distinction.

Mr. DAYTON. Does not the gentleman think that the saving of the lives of 450 brave seamen and the saving of one of the nation's war vessels was a conspicuous act of bravery which ought to be recognized?

Mr. DOCKERY. I think it ought to be, but not by invading the Treasury to the extent of $625 a year.

Mr. DAYTON. Five hundred dollars.

Mr. DOCKERY. If this officer was a constituent of mine—and I say this without intending any reflection whatever on the gentleman from West Virginia—I would offer a joint resolution tendering the thanks of Congress for his gallant services. I trust, Mr. Chairman, that conspicuous acts of bravery, whether in the naval or the military service, will not be degraded by recognition upon a mere cash basis. There are other means by which Congress in the past has recognized distinguished services. If I remember aright, there is now in force a general statute with respect to war veterans, authorizing the Secretary of War in certain cases to bestow medals upon soldiers who performed acts of gallantry during the late rebellion. I do not know whether there is any such statute in respect to the naval service; but if the gentleman from West Virginia will bring forward a joint resolution giving suitable recognition to this officer I will give it most hearty and cordial approval.

I wish to say in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that if this bill should pass it will be, as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] has stated, not a mere appropriation of $500 a year additional to this officer, but it will constitute a precedent, a bad precedent, which will return to plague this Congress and those which shall come after it.

Mr. DAYTON. In view of the fact that the Secretary of the Navy, who has examined this matter, has reported that cases where action of this kind is taken should be rare, that bills of this nature should be unusual, yet that under the peculiar circumstances of this case the present measure should pass, does not the gentleman think that the view of the Secretary of the Navy ought to have great weight on the question?

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, for the Secretary of the Navy personally and officially I have the very highest regard, but when that officer asks me to establish a precedent such as the bill now pending proposes, I respectfully dissent from the view taken by him, and enter my protest against it.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I fully agree with all that has been said by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the effect that it is as a general thing bad policy to promote men on the retired list. But while agreeing with him on that point, I also concede that there may be exceptions calling for Congressional action.

We have heretofore passed through the Congress of the United States bills giving both naval and military officers on the retired list one grade higher than they had at time of retirement under the general law.

I do not think this case would make a precedent which would justify the other officers on the retired list in applying to Congress for similar action. If it should do that it would be vicious legislation. But how many men are there now on the retired list of either the Army or the Navy who can show services of such exceptional character as to make their cases stand on a level with this case? If the proposition were to advance all the men on the retired list one grade, as suggested, it would be absolutely unjust to the people of the United States; it would be vicious legislation; but to take up individual cases and select a man who has, as I understand this officer has done, sacrificed his life, and advance him one grade beyond what he now holds on the retired list, is to my mind simply an act of justice on the part of the Congress of the United States.

What did he do? In the midst of that great storm that wrought such havoc among the shipping at Apia—when the elements were warring as they never warred before in any of the harbors of the world—when men were panic-stricken, when ships were being destroyed, when it looked as though there was not one chance in a thousand for those whose lives were imperiled to escape, this man, keeping full control of his faculties, with undaunted courage took a rope in his mouth and swam through the surf in order to carry a life line; by his skill, his courage, his sacrifices (in consequence of which, as I understand from those acquainted with him, he can not hope to live more than a year at the outside) he saved for this country its war vessel and saved also the lives of 400 brave officers and seamen.

Now, let me say to my friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], that if they can bring in a parallel case with this one, where such gallant services have been rendered to the country, where a man has shown such heroism, where he has risked his life for his fellow-men and in the discharge of his duty, and has saved to the Government of the United States not only the lives of a large number of its sailors, but one of its war vessels, I will vote for a bill to give such officer additional rank. I think that we ought to encourage such heroism at all times.

The difference in pay that will be carried, if this bill becomes a law, is the difference between that of a major and a lieutenant-colonel in the Army, as I understand; and you all know what that is. That is to say, it amounts to $500 a year. He holds now a rank which is equivalent to that of major in the Army, and the additional rank given him by the bill will give him a grade equal to that of lieutenant-colonel in the Army.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. WASHINGTON. What is the rank held by those who graduated with him in the same class?

Mr. HULL. I am unable to answer.

Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania. Lieutenant-commanders.

Mr. WASHINGTON. What rank did he hold at the time the retiring board sat upon his case?

Mr. HULL. Lieutenant-commander, I am informed.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Did they not promote him to a higher rank at the time of his retirement?

Mr. HULL. No; I think not.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Is it not the custom to promote a man when there is a vacancy to a higher rank at the time of his retirement?

Mr. HULL. That is not the case here, and can not be done under the law.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Because, if it be so, this man will be getting two promotions; whereas the men who graduated with him in the same class are held down to the same rank as lieutenant-commanders.

Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania. That is not the case here.

Mr. HULL. I understand that the retiring board in the case of Lieutenant-Commander Brown retired him at the rank he held at the time they sat upon the case.

Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania. That is correct.

Mr. HULL. There was no vacancy in the higher grade, and so this officer could not get the promotion. The only way he could be promoted by any power except an act of Congress was that there should be a vacancy above him. When he was retired he was retired with the rank he held at the time.

Mr. DOLLIVER. And that was the case in this instance.

Mr. HULL. Further, Mr. Chairman, let me say that I do not regard this as a precedent, or a dangerous one even if it was a precedent, for it is only now and then, once, perhaps, in a century, when a man shows such devotion, such courage, and makes such sacrifices as this man has made under the circumstances surrounding him. I believe that this bill is simply an act of justice and ought to be passed at once.

You talk of a resolution recognizing his services. Why, Mr. Chairman, the country has already recognized his services by preserving in the archives of the country the history of that terrible storm in which he acted so gallant a part. He is suffering now from disease and injury contracted on that occasion, and incurred by exposure and hardships to which he was subjected during that fearful storm.

The $500 a year which would be accorded to him if this bill should become a law is, I understand, a material and necessary increase in his income. He needs it, as I am informed, badly.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Does my friend recollect the case that occurred in the Military Committee in the last few days, of a retired officer from New York seeking the same thing that is proposed to be accorded here?

Mr. HULL. No; what case is that?

Mr. WASHINGTON. The case of Webb.

Mr. HULL. I want to say to my friend from Tennessee, in answer to his question, that these two cases are not in line at all. They have no relation to each other.

Mr. WASHINGTON. The two positions occupied by the gentleman do not seem to be entirely consistent.

Mr. HULL. I repeat that these cases are not at all similar. The case referred to is that of a man who voluntarily resigned from the Army twenty-seven years ago, and accepted a position in civil life paying double the salary he was receiving in the Army. He has drawn that salary, double what he would have received if he had remained in the Army, for all these years. But, let me say to my friend, that the case under consideration presents an entirely different question. If this officer had left the service twenty-seven years ago, had entered the employments of civil life, and had drawn a salary double that paid him now by the Government, I would be as much opposed to this bill as the gentleman himself. But it is an entirely different case.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Do you think the increase of salary is necessary, or is the purpose simply to honor this officer?

Mr. HULL. I do not regard it as material, and I can not answer the gentleman's question if I did, for I do not know the circumstances of this officer. But I wish to say to my friend from Tennessee, who is one of the best and most efficient members of the Military Committee, that we have three or four similar bills before the committee proposing to grant additional grade to officers on the retired list, while the circumstances under which they were retired caused an unjust loss, and I favor them, for I believe that they are entitled to the increase they ask.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am glad that the gentleman who has just taken his seat has been candid enough with the House to announce that he supports this bill with the full knowledge of the fact that it is to be a precedent followed by the committee over which he presides.

Mr. HULL. Oh, no; I hope my friend will not put me in that position. I simply say——

Mr. McMILLIN. I will give the gentleman another chance, and he can put himself in the right position. I have stated the position in which he puts himself.

Now, Mr. Chairman, whether he had admitted it or not, that is as inevitable as fate, and let him who supports this bill know that it is only a sapper and miner in this expedition. Let him know that there is a large army behind belonging to the retired list. Let him know that this is a command to forward march, and to come here and ask for promotion by statute.

Against this distinguished gentleman I have not a word to say. That his services were distinguished I admit; that he is a meritorious gentleman I have no doubt; but that any man born of woman ought to be promoted by statute on the retired list I wholly deny. There is no sort of excuse for it, and there is every reason in the world why it should not be. The gentleman speaks of the services of this officer as distinguished. Are they more distinguished than those of a large number of soldiers on the retired list who carry armless sleeves, who go on wooden legs, who have received injuries in the service; and are they all to be promoted? Are the colonels to be generals, the generals to be major-generals? Are the lieutenant-commanders in all these instances to be made commanders? Are the commanders to be made admirals and rear-admirals? Is that the programme here? Is that where you are going? Are you ready to take that step? Are you ready to do this thing? If so, pass this bill, and you give notice to the world that this is your purpose, and the inevitable consequence to follow.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] has kindly warned the House that he has three more cases to bring on, and those are not nearly all the cases that will come to his committee when they ascertain that the House has made this blunder. I have seen in this Hall to-day a distinguished gentleman who rendered great services to his country. He was shot down in the ranks and lost a leg. Do you propose to take him and give him additional rank, additional pay and emoluments? If you are not ready to go the whole line, do not take the step. The gentleman from Iowa has told us what the report does not tell us, that this officer needs the money. There is nothing in this record to justify that assertion, and I will not be so unlawyerlike as to go out of the record to argue it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a proposition came here several years ago to promote a distinguished officer who had done great service to his country, to make the promotion while he was still in the ranks, while he was still ready to do battle, while he was still commanding, and yet Congress refused to do that. To-day we propose to take a man from the retired list and give him a promotion. How do we know that this gentleman would be content to be a commander? How long will it be before he will want another promotion? If he has rendered distinguished service at one time, does not that operate for another promotion if he desires more? I do insist, Mr. Chairman, that the House should take this step with due deliberation. I know how easy it was for Artemus Ward to be patriotic with his wife's relations, and I know how easy it is sometimes for gentlemen to be, like the distinguished gentleman who has just spoken, generous with other people's money; but I beg him to remember that the widows whose husbands' heads were shot off in the late war get $12 a month, while it is proposed to give an additional $500 to this officer in time of peace.

It can not be claimed that this Government is not generous with its soldiery. There never was anything like it seen in the world. Neither Greece nor Rome nor any modern nation was ever so generous with its soldiers who were maimed and with the widows of those who are dead. We pay already a little more than $140,000,000 a year in pensions. We have a very large retired list. This officer now gets the benefit of the provision of law under which he accepted his commission, and yet he is not satisfied. These gentlemen say, "Give him more. Let us promote the others. Let us move up the whole retired list. Let us be generous with other people's money, while your deficiencies are twenty or thirty millions of dollars a year."

Mr. DAYTON. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I just want to state that my friend from Tennessee set up a man of straw and proceeded to demolish him with great vigor. I want to say to him that I certainly did not use any case before the Committee on Military Affairs as a precedent for this. My position, Mr. Chairman, was that every bill that comes before this House must stand or fall on its own merits, and that when we bring our bills in here, if we do so, it will be time enough to address ourselves to them. I simply referred to the action of the Committee on Military Affairs in answer to the question of my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON], who is a member of that committee.

Mr. PICKLER. I would like to ask the gentleman from West Virginia a question.

Mr. DAYTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PICKLER. What is the age of this gentleman?

Mr. DAYTON. Fifty-five, I think. He is dying of consumption; and on his deathbed now, I think.

Mr. PICKLER. What pay is he now receiving?

Mr. DAYTON. He is receiving $2,250 a year.

Mr. PICKLER. Twenty-two hundred and fifty dollars a year. What family has he?

Mr. DAYTON. Three or four children, I think. I do not remember the number.

Mr. PICKLER. Has he any other property outside of his salary?

Mr. DAYTON. I do not know about that.

Mr. PICKLER. These questions are always asked at the Friday night sessions in the consideration of our bills, and I thought it would be pertinent to ask them now with reference to this bill.

Mr. DAYTON. I move that the committee rise and report the bill favorably to the House.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. DOCKERY and Mr. MILES. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 82.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the committee rise and report the bill unfavorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DINGLEY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill S. 1447, and had instructed him to report the same with an unfavorable recommendation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. McMILLIN. On that I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole was agreed to, and the House refused to pass the bill.

On motion of Mr. McMILLIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to pass said bill was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Printing have a few matters here I would like to ask unanimous consent to take up. They are scarcely privileged.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the gentleman if the matters are so urgent that they can not afford to wait until the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill shall have been passed?

Mr. PERKINS. I will say, Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question of the gentleman from Illinois, that these matters the committee has selected to present at this time are not matters of very great importance. They are matters which should occupy very little time. If they are to be acted upon at all it is of importance that they be acted upon promptly, because they are delaying the work of the Printing Office. It ought to take but a very few moments. There is no resolution of any particular consequence.

I would like to call up Senate joint resolution (S. R. 65) to print the annual report of the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 89, second proviso, of the act of January 12, 1895, an act providing for the public printing and binding, etc., be, and is hereby, amended, by inserting after the words "tide tables, coast pilots," the words, "Annual Report of the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

EIGHTH SPECIAL REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF LABOR.

Mr. PERKINS. I call up for consideration House concurrent resolution No. 3.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring therein), That there be printed and bound in cloth 8,000 additional copies of the Eighth Special Report of the Commissioner of Labor, relating to the housing of the working people; 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,000 copies for distribution by the Department of Labor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

SECOND SPECIAL REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF LABOR.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask consideration of House concurrent resolution No. 2.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 5,000 additional copies, in cloth binding, of the Second Special Report of the Commissioner of Labor, being a report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives, submitted July 20, 1892; 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for distribution by the Department of Labor; and the Commissioner of Labor is hereby authorized to revise said report to include the labor legislation subsequent to the year 1891, and to annotate the report with reference to decisions of courts under the laws comprehended therein.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMPILED STATUTES IN FORCE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PERKINS. I now ask consideration of the House concurrent resolution No. 18.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver, from the number now in his care, one copy of the compiled statutes in force in the District of Columbia to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress, for his personal use, and 500 copies to the Superintendent of Documents for distribution to depositories of public documents: Provided, That the remaining copies of the work may be sold at $2.50 per copy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. There is one more resolution I ask the consideration of.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized to print the reports, correspondence, charts, maps, and other documents now on file in the Treasury Department, or other branches of the Government, relating to the fur seal, salmon fisheries, and other matters pertaining to the Territory of Alaska; 3,000 copies to be printed, of which 750 shall be for the use of the Senate, 1,500 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 750 copies for the use of the Treasury Department and other Departments whose reports are thus printed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

WILLIAM LOCK AND JAMES H. TINSLEY.

Mr. COLSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (H. R. 2815) for the relief of William Lock and James H. Tinsley was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post Office Department be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and adjust the judgment of the United States obtained March 4, 1886, in the United States district court at Louisville Ky., against William Lock and James H. Tinsley, for $1,268.40, as the sureties of Glass & Gevelin, failing mail contractors on mail route numbered 12121, upon the payment of the costs of the suit expended in the obtension of said judgment; and upon the payment of the costs as aforesaid they, the said Lock and Tinsley, shall be forever released and discharged from the payment of said judgment.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Speaker, I must ask for some explanation of this bill.

Mr. COLSON. The case is simple. Glass & Gevelin submitted a bid on the mail route in question. The route was 33 miles long, the mail to be carried each way every day, and it had never been let for less than $1,100 a year, but in this instance the bid as it appeared at the Department was $135. The intention was to make it $1,350, but by a clerical error it was submitted and accepted at $135. The contractor, who was a poor man, necessarily failed. Suit was brought against the sureties and judgment for the Government was obtained. The sureties had to pay the money, and this bill simply seeks to relieve them.

Mr. WASHINGTON. As I understand, it does not take any money out of the Treasury?

Mr. COLSON. No, sir.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has this been recommended by the Postmaster-General?

Mr. COLSON. No; it has never been before the Postmaster-General.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COLSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DISTRIBUTION OF SEEDS.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass Senate joint resolution No. 43, in relation to the distribution of seeds by the Secretary of Agriculture.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase and distribute valuable seeds for the year 1896, as has been done in preceding years; and as the public exigency requires that the valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants to be purchased may be ready for distribution at the earliest possible date, the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to procure them by open purchase or contract at the places and in the manner in which such articles are usually bought and sold: Provided, That the said Secretary shall not, in said purchase, pay more than a reasonable and fair price for such commodities or for any of them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Delaware moves that the rules be suspended and the joint resolution passed. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. KEM. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman having this joint resolution in charge if he believes it possible to distribute these seeds in time for planting this season?

Mr. WILLIS. The Committee on Agriculture discussed that question, and the conclusion was that there was time for the execution of the purposes of the joint resolution.

Mr. KEM. I should like to know by what process of reasoning the committee reached that conclusion, when in fact the time for planting many of those seeds has already passed, and it will be at least a month before the seeds can reach the farmers.

Mr. WILLIS. Well, that question was pretty generally canvassed by the members of the committee, and they concluded that the cases in which the seeds would not be available for use this season were exceptional. It will be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that this Senate joint resolution has already been discussed and acted upon in that body, and has been passed. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the request of the gentleman from Iowa that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. MOSES. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the question will be taken by tellers upon ordering a second. The Chair appoints to act as tellers the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. WILLIS] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MOSES].

Mr. MOSES. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The question, then, is on suspending the rules and passing the joint resolution.

The question being taken,

The SPEAKER said: The ayes seem to have it, and in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the joint resolution is passed.

CUBA.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the rules be suspended, that the Committee on Foreign Affairs be discharged from further consideration of Senate concurrent resolutions in regard to the relations between the United States and Cuba, and that the resolutions which I sent to the desk be adopted by the House as a substitute therefor.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That, in the opinion of Congress, a state of public war exists in Cuba, the parties to which are entitled to belligerent rights, and the United States should observe a strict neutrality between the belligerents.

Resolved, That Congress deplores the destruction of life and property caused by the war now waging in that island, and believing that the only permanent solution of the contest equally in the interest of Spain, the people of Cuba, and other nations would be in the establishment of a government by the choice of the people of Cuba, it is the sense of Congress that the Government of the United States should use its good offices and friendly influence to that end.

Resolved, That the United States has not intervened in struggles between any European Governments and their colonies on this continent; but from the very close relations between the people of the United States and those of Cuba in consequence of its proximity and the extent of the commerce between the two peoples the present war is entailing such losses upon the people of the United States that Congress is of opinion that the Government of the United States should be prepared to protect the legitimate interests of our citizens, by intervention if necessary.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, before proceeding further, I suggest that the resolutions of the Senate referring to this subject be read, so that the House may be in possession of the whole question.

The Senate concurrent resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That, in the opinion of Congress, a condition of public war exists between the Government of Spain and the Government proclaimed and for some time maintained by force of arms by the people of Cuba, and that the United States of America should maintain a strict neutrality between the contending powers, according to each all the rights of belligerents in the ports and territory of the United States.

Resolved further, That the friendly offices of the United States should be offered by the President to the Spanish Government for the recognition of the independence of Cuba.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I desire to ask my colleague on the committee [Mr. HITT] whether the fourth resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs was read by the Clerk?

Mr. HITT. It was not. That was not included by me in the motion I made. I do not make this motion on committee suspension day, but individual suspension day; and the fourth resolution I have not offered, because the greater number of the members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs have requested me to drop that resolution as being substantially contained in those that precede it, and being therefore unnecessary.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on seconding the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is the point I was about to make.

Mr. TUCKER. I demand a second. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] Mr. Speaker, pending the question of a second, I wish to ask unanimous consent that debate on this matter be extended to thirty-five minutes on each side.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Oh, more than that—an hour.

The SPEAKER. The question is on seconding the motion to suspend the rules. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] will please take their places as tellers.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Before that is done, I should like to ask my colleague from Illinois——

The SPEAKER. The House must proceed in order. The question is on ordering a second.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I simply desired to ask my colleague on the Committee on Foreign Affairs to include in his motion the fourth resolution, which was adopted by that committee unanimously, and which reads:

That Congress pledges its support to the President in carrying out the foregoing resolutions.

Mr. HITT. I have stated that I do not offer that resolution.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I am in favor of that resolution, and was in favor of it in the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is not in order.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask that by unanimous consent a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I regret more than I can say to find myself even in seeming antagonism to any position my distinguished colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, may take on this floor. I have followed him so long and I have such implicit confidence in his judgment that I regret very much——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] is not in order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. In view of the position taken by me heretofore, that we ought to proceed with deliberation in disposing of this question, I must demand a second.

Mr. HITT. That is the gentleman's right.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The status I understand to be that the gentleman from Virginia first demanded a vote on the second and then asked unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered, and then the gentleman from Maine objected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered, and the demand of the gentleman from Maine is in the nature of an objection. The gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from Illinois will please take their places as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 175, noes 19.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask unanimous consent that this debate be extended until 5 o'clock. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the debate be extended until 5 o'clock.

Mr. QUIGG. I object.

Mr. TUCKER. Then I ask unanimous consent that the debate on each side be limited to one hour.

Mr. QUIGG. I object.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we extend the time as first proposed by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER], and give each side thirty-five minutes; that will be only an hour and ten minutes altogether.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Can not the gentleman make it forty minutes on each side?

Mr. HITT. That has just been refused, as I understand. I am trying to get gentlemen as much time as I can; and I am trying to meet the views of gentlemen who object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the debate be extended to thirty-five minutes on each side. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HITT. I ask that the Chair kindly remind me when I have consumed ten minutes. Yielding the time after that to other gentlemen who may desire to speak in the affirmative, I shall ask to reserve the closing five minutes of the debate.

Mr. Speaker, the resolutions presented to the House at this moment have been considered with great care by the committee of the House specially charged with that duty. In many meetings, through several months, the question involved has been discussed. These resolutions have been ripened and matured after consultation with the most eminent jurists; aud it is believed that in the interest of right, in the interest of peace, in the interest of our own country, and in the interest of those who elsewhere are making a struggle with which we sympathize, these resolutions present the most practical, conservative, and effective mode of action and expression by Congress. They declare—

First, that Congress is of opinion that a state of public war exists in the Island of Cuba, which we should recognize, observing strict neutrality.

Second, that the conditions of war prevailing in that island, which have involved such great and deplorable losses, will find a permanent solution only in the establishment of a government by the free choice of the people of Cuba themselves, and that our Government should use its friendly influence to that end; this, we earnestly believe, being in the interest of the people of Spain, of Cuba, and of all other nations.

Third, in view of the vast interests of our people in the Island of Cuba, so close a neighbor; in view of the immense commerce that is falling off and being destroyed, and the enormous investments of our citizens there being consumed, that our Government, while it has never intervened in any struggles between European powers and their colonies in the past, should be prepared to protect the legitimate interests of our citizens by intervention, if intervention be necessary.

All of these resolutions, Mr. Speaker, that have been offered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the terms in which they have been stated, have been carefully considered, so that we believe they can not and certainly ought not to cause any trouble or rupture between us and any country that is not seeking trouble with us.

The resolutions of the Senate, for which those of the House committee now offered are a substitute, are two in number; the first substantially the same as that reported by the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the second proposing that our Government should offer its friendly offices to Spain for the recognition of the independence of Cuba. Every gentleman, on hearing that suggestion made or that proposition presented to him, must think in a moment what would be the response if a proposition were made to our Government, for example, by the British minister, presenting resolutions adopted by the British Parliament asking and desiring us to consent at once to the independence of Texas, of Florida, or of Michigan. How long would he remain in Washington after presenting such a proposition as that—after the self-respect of our Government had been thus insulted? I think gentlemen will agree with me that the proposition of our committee is one far more prudent and likely to be far more effective.

First, as to the belligerency of the Cubans, if that is a fact, a truth, we may recognize it; if it is not—if it is falsehood—we ought not to recognize it under any circumstances. Now, let us see what are the facts. That there is a state of war—that there is belligerency—can hardly be denied in view of the overwhelming evidence of a state of war. That it is a fact is shown by many things more than mere newspaper reports. The official reports of our consuls, lying before the members of the House for weeks, show the growth and extent of the war now raging in Cuba. This struggle is not a reproduction of the ten years' insurrection of 1868 to 1878. Far from it—far more than that. On the 13th day of July, more than half a year ago, the consuls report that the armed forces then in the field, contending with desperate earnestness and unconquerable will, were three times greater than the men engaged in the rebellion of 1868–1878 when at the height of its power, and the tide of war has gone on since that time and swept on over the island from one side and one end to the other, until to-day the Spanish authority is not in fact exercised over more than one-third, probably not more than one-fourth, of the 41,000 square miles of surface of the Island of Cuba. The Spanish minister made public a statement on the 22d day of February with his name signed to it, published to the people of the United States, in which he says that 125,000 troops have been sent to the Island of Cuba by Spain. Is not that war? Is that a police force putting down a street disturbance?

Recently the captain-general of Cuba issued two long proclamations, which all of you have read and doubtless read with horror in connection with the news that accompanied it, which contained detailed regulations and prescriptions concerning this war in the very terms and spirit of the orders issued by Napoleon when he commanded the greatest forces ever enlisted in modern warfare. . The captain-general recognized the condition of war prevailing. So, too, from the headquarters of the Spanish minister dispatches are sent out constantly referring to two or three engagements nearly every day with the enemy.

It will not do to say that this is mere guerrilla warfare. We can not prescribe the way in which men do their fighting, or in which they are to be organized in governments, or in which they live. Guerrilla warfare is a great and tremendous instrument, and the genius of that Spanish race has shown in their history that it is their resistless, deadly, and desperate resort in times of emergency, and that it is a system that can not be readily subdued. One hundred and fifty thousand of the finest French soldiers that Napoleon ever commanded marched into Spain, took possession of its cities, as the Spanish troops have taken possession of the Cuban cities, and assumed thereby to subdue a people who could only resist by means of guerrilla warfare. But what was the result? Guerrilla warfare destroyed that splendid army. And it was the defeat and destruction of Napoleon's forces in that mighty war, conducted by this harassing and irregular system, that deprived him of his resources, so that after the final blow in the retreat from Moscow that greatest power of modern times crumbled and fell. Was not that war? Can a Spaniard deny it? There is not a Spaniard in the world who is not proud to recount it as the grandest era in Spanish history, and one of the proudest achievements in all their centuries of olden glory. Even the British are to-day proud to have taken part in that memorable peninsular war.

Then, if war is a fact shall we not recognize it? If the denial of the recognition of the fact that these two peoples in Cuba are at war operates to the prejudice of the one and the benefit of the other, that is not impartial conduct. That is the very state of things now. We not only seize a ship containing munitions of war bought in the open market for Cubans, where the Spanish are buying them by thousands, if the Spanish minister notifies our judicial officers it is about to leave, before it gets out of the harbor, as was done with the Bermuda, not only that, but we send our cruisers out and pursue them on the high seas. We do that work for Spain now. The Raleigh and the Montgomery, our ships, pursued the Hawkins far out into the high seas. If the Cubans are recognized as belligerents they will have the same rights that we now give fully to Spain. She comes into our markets and buys the munitions of war by millions of dollars' worth and takes them openly and freely. By recognizing the Cubans' belligerency they will have a flag and can purchase in our markets in the same manner.

I ask the Chair how much time I have remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed ten minutes.

Mr. HITT. I will use two minutes longer. I will say to gentlemen who are fearful that the relations of our country with Spain will be ruptured that I do not think this recognition can excite ground of complaint, for this war has existed a year, with great bloodshed. Spain recognized the Southern Confederacy a month before the battle of Bull Run was fought. The Spanish minister said in his statement, published on the 22d of February, that we had done our full duty under international law in enforcing the neutrality laws in every way.

This recognition is not new, although the proclamation of it is new. I wish I had time to yield to my friend from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], who has investigated the historic question carefully, to discuss our policy in the past. Mr. Monroe in 1816 set it out fully that our Government not only recognized one but two or three insurrectionary parties in the same colony in South America by recognizing their flag on their vessels in our ports; and that was done years and years before any recognition of independence, but not by proclamation. It has been for eighty years the custom of the United States. In this case we have departed from it, and have not recognized them in the least in any way.

By this recognition of belligerency there would be a right of search given to Spain of our vessels, but the belligerents' ships could go out upon the open sea; and while they are the enemies of Spanish ships, and must fight their way, they could go out, not as pirates, but might freely leave our ports carrying men, not armed men; carrying munitions of war, but not armed men or the men with the arms to use them; nor could armed vessels of either party be fitted out. Cuban merchantmen could go out loaded with arms purchased in open market just as Spanish ships now do.

Now, as to the government that we want to see established by the choice of the Cubans, there is no occasion why the expression of that wish should irritate the Spanish ruler, because all that we want is that the people of Cuba may have a government of their own free choice. The Spanish pretend that the Cuban people are really in their favor. We do not believe it. But if that is true let them, by free choice, say so. We wish them to have a government of their own choice. We suggested it once before, in 1878. I see before me a gentleman (General Sickles, former minister to Spain) who took part in the negotiation when the treaty of Zampon was made in 1878, and the insurgents laid down their arms upon the promise of autonomy and government for Cuba in which Cubans should have a voice. They gave up on that promise by Spain, at our suggestion, and the promise was broken. We now ask, and would say through our State Department, and press it with our influence, that the people of Cuba should have a government of their own choice. We believe it would be a free government of Cubans. We can not well ask, no government can ask in a truly friendly spirit of another to give up territory—for the independence of a part of a monarchy.

The last resolution in regard to intervention is one that follows and proposes what has been the usage of all nations, what has been practiced by ourselves many times. Wherever American interests are imperiled we land marines if necessary; and if it is necessary for the protection of a vast property in the midst of extreme confusion and disorder, we can land a sufficient force for protection. There are plantations owned by Americans in Cuba assessed at $12,000,000; mines, over $8,000,000; merchandise and loans, as much more. The great arm of this Republic ought to be ready always to follow its people, to protect their interests, their property, and their lives anywhere in the world. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed twelve minutes.

Mr. TUCKER. I yield six minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY].

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the adoption of the resolutions now under consideration. We are confronted with a serious and critical situation in Cuba. There must be a change of affairs or there will be ruin and extermination of the Cuban people. My sympathies go out to them in their sufferings and in their desperate struggle for liberty, but I am opposed to annexing Cuba to the United States. I desire that Cuba shall be an independent republic, and that the struggling patriots shall be freed from a cruel and relentless despotism. [Applause.]

The wrongs against which our forefathers rebelled were not near so great and the tyranny and oppression were not near so severe as have been inflicted for many years on the Cubans by the Spanish Government. Sympathetic expressions or denunciation of the brutal cruelties, barbarous atrocities, and ruinous taxes imposed on them will not benefit them now. There must be positive action by the American Congress. Something should be done to end the inhuman war and stop the destruction and death and reign of terror in Cuba. The pending resolutions seem to me proper and appropriate. They declare that in the opinion of Congress public war exists in Cuba, the parties to which are entitled to belligerent rights, and the United States should observe strict neutrality between the belligerents; that the only permanent solution of the contest equally in the interest of Spain, the people of Cuba, and other nations is the establishment of a government by the choice of the people of Cuba, and that the Government of the United States should use its good offices and friendly influence to that end; that the Government of the United States should be prepared to protect the legitimate interests of Americans in Cuba by intervention if necessary.

No matter how we may have felt a few months ago with regard to the Cuban revolution, a great change has occurred. The Cubans now have an organized government. They have a president and a legislature. They have an organized army which holds control of two-thirds of the island and has been successfully maintained, though there are 100,000 Spanish soldiers in Cuba. The most illustrious and trusted Spanish officer, General Campos, failed to suppress the revolutionists, and he has been required to return to Spain and General Weyler has been sent from Spain to command the Spanish army in Cuba. His methods are repugnant alike to humanity and civilization, and he has already made a reputation as a "tyrant and a butcher" by his proclamation declaring that all the revolutionists who did not surrender in fifteen days would be treated as bandits. It is said of him that the rifle and the sword, the dagger and the dungeon, are the arguments he is using on the unwilling subjects of the mother country.

Since he has been in command the demand for recognition of the belligerent rights of the Cuban insurgents has greatly increased.

The Cuban war for independence which commenced in 1868 lasted ten years. Then a treaty of peace was negotiated with the leaders of the revolution by General Campos, and all desired reforms were promised; but the promises were never performed. My time will not permit me to show how almost every pledge was violated. All of our ministers and consuls in their correspondence show the reckless violations of the pledges made to the patriots in 1878. I read but one extract from a report of our consul-general at Habana to the State Department in 1885. It is as follows:

The entire population, with the exception of the official class, are living under a tyranny unparalleled at this day on the globe.

There is a system of oppression and torture which enters into every phase of life, eats into the soul of every Cuban, mortifies, injures, and insults him every hour, impoverishes him and his family from day to day, threatens the rich man with bankruptcy and the poor man with beggary. The exactions of the Spanish Government and the illegal outrages of its officers are in fact intolerable. They have reduced the island to despondency and ruin. * * * The Government at Madrid is directly answerable for the misery of Cuba and for the rapacity and venality of its subordinates. * * *

A war tax of the most exaggerated character was laid. Every business trade, art, or profession is taxed in the proportion of from 25 to 33½ per cent of its net income. * * * All ordinary mercantile business and all the petty trades and employments of the country are separately suffering. All participate in the common distress.

The honored and distinguished ex-member of Congress, General Sickles, who served as United States minister to Spain, and who now sits before me in this Hall, is thoroughly conversant with the facts to which I have referred.

In February, 1895, the present struggle for independence commenced. In one year the insurgents have been remarkably successful, having maintained themselves against the best officers and soldiers of the Spanish army. There can be no doubt that public war exists in Cuba at the present time. The precedents to justify the action which Congress is now asked to take are clear and ample. The last great precedent was that of the civil war, which broke out in the United States in the spring of 1861. In one month after the surrender of Fort Sumter, April 13, 1861, the British Government issued its proclamation of neutrality. The French Government acted in concert with Great Britain, but delayed official announcement until June. The Spanish Government issued its proclamation of belligerency June 17. In 1836, when Texas was struggling to be free, the Senate of the United States passed a resolution looking to the recognition of the Republic of Texas in less than six months after the struggle for independence commenced.

The Cuban patriots are fighting for the same rights and independence and home government that our ancestors fought for and won and which we are now enjoying, and we should not forget them. The same love of freedom which warmed the hearts of patriots and aroused them to splendid deeds of valor still animates the hearts of our god-fearing, liberty-loving, brave, and patriotic people, and from one end of our country to the other the demand comes that we must be true to the mission assigned to our Republic by Providence of leading other nations to independence and free government, and we must therefore, in proper bounds, do what we can for our oppressed and downtrodden neighbors in Cuba.

There are those who say the adoption of the pending resolutions will cause war. I do not believe it. There is no cause for war in the pending resolutions. I would deplore war, but there are times with nations as with men when duty should be done and convictions faithfully complied with no matter what consequences may follow. We should be careful, conservative, but firm, and all will end well.

The civilized world recognizes the fatal error of the Spanish policy in Cuba. The Cubans themselves are urged on by the spirit of liberty. They are patriots and not bandits. Their cause is just; their wrongs must not be ignored. Their rights will ultimately prevail, and in God's own time Cuba will be free and independent. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HITT. I yield seventeen minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the subcommittee to which the various resolutions offered in this House were referred, I crave the attention of this honorable body for a few moments while I make a frank statement of the progressive steps which have led us to the formation of these resolutions we have submitted for your approval here to-day. Your committee entered upon its duties animated with the conviction of the right of free government, and in full sympathy with the patriots in Cuba who are struggling to establish that form of government; but at the same time we did not wish to do anything to tarnish the fame our country holds among the nations of the earth for fair dealing, or transgress that code known as international law, which is recognized by all civilized nations.

The first difficulty in our undertaking was to gain reliable information. The reports that came through the different sources were colored so as to suit whichever side they favored. For that reason we called upon the State Department for the official correspondence that they had in their possession, and in response to that request it has furnished the documents with which you are familiar. I desire to state here that anyone who has read the reports of Consuls Hyatt and Baker can no longer have any doubt in his mind that a state of war exists, and to a very large extent, on the Island of Cuba, and that they are entitled to belligerent rights. I desire that these letters be considered part of my remarks. They are as follows:

Mr. Hyatt to Mr. Uhl.

CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago de Cuba, March 1, 1895.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that last evening I cabled you "Province under martial law," which I now confirm.

On the 27th ultimo the governor-general of the island issued a decree, copy inclosed being extract from official bulletin, declaring this province in a state of war, giving the military authorities control of all matters appertaining to public order and giving insurgents eight days to present themselves and be exempt from punishment.

In accordance with which his excellency Don Enrique Capriles, civil governor of the province, on the same day resigned all functions relating to public order to Gen. José Lachambre, military governor of the province, who assumed complete authority in such matter.

All public gatherings, even for pleasure, are prohibited. The civil governor was threatened with death if he made his appearance on the plaza Sunday night. The guards about the band were doubled. Capriles made his appearance, but nothing of the kind happened, although there was much excitement.

There have been a number of scrimmages with troops in the province, and several on both sides killed and wounded. The insurgent element so far is confined mostly to the negro population, which predominates. The whites and property owners hope that the reforms promised by the Government will be put into effect and that the movement will be suppressed before much property is destroyed and lives lost.

A strong reinforcement of Spanish troops is daily expected. The British man-of-war Canada came here Wednesday and left yesterday to cruise along the coast.

The controlling interest of the Sabanilla and Maroto Railroad, the only one here for general traffic, is owned by Americans. Americans also own the Juruguay iron mines and railroad, 17 miles long, with about 2,000 cars, and the Spanish-American mines and railroad, which has not begun to operate yet on account of business times. In fact, Americans own more property here than any other foreign nationality.

I have, etc., PULASKI F. HYATT, Consul.

Mr. Hyatt to Mr. Uhl.

No. 118.] CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago de Cuba, April 28, 1895.

SIR: I have the honor to report that on Sunday, the 21st instant, a fight took place near Songo, this province, between about 500 Cubans and 800 Spanish troops, which resulted eventually in the Cubans retiring from the field. The major and chaplain of the Spanish forces were killed. Other losses unknown.

Two thousand and fourteen new Spanish recruits arrived at this port from Spain on the 22d instant, and it is reported that 20,000 more will arrive during the next six weeks.

Rebels burned the town of Ramon de Yaguas on Monday last, killed Captain Miranda of the Spanish forces, took 16,000 rounds of ammunition and a quantity of arms from the fort.

Lieutenant Gallego, on the part of the Spanish troops, surrendered the fort, for which he was court-martialed and ordered to be shot. The sentence was commuted to life imprisonment by cablegram from the Queen.

I have, etc.,

PULASKI F. HYATT.

Lieutenant Gallego was shot at Habana on May 1, after having attempted suicide on the passage from Manzanillo to Habana.

JOSEPH A. SPRINGER,
Vice-Consul-General.

Mr. Hyatt to Mr. Uhl.

No. 120.] CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago de Cuba, May 4, 1895.

SIR: I have the honor very respectfully to report that there arrived at this port during the present week about 2,000 recruits for the Spanish army, making in all about 10,000 that have been landed at this port alone during the past five weeks.

On April 25 a battle occurred near —— between Colonel Bosch, commanding 450 Government troops, and Gen. José Maceo, commanding 650 insurgents. The Government forces were driven back into town with considerable loss. General Maceo later gave permission to Colonel Bosch to gather up the dead and wounded.

On May 1 a fight occurred near Santa Ana with about 300 men on each side. No particular advantage seemed to have been gained by either party. Both sides are reported to have lost from 10 to 15 killed.

During the past week about 100 young men have left Santiago to join the insurgent forces. Many of these young men belonged to the better families of the town, which gives a new phase to the uprising.

It is my judgment that both sides are about as well prepared for the contest as they are likely to be in the near future. The good name of Gen. Martinez Campos adds strength to the Government side of the question, but the insurgents nevertheless show no signs of weakening.

I am, etc.,

PULASKI F. HYATT, Consul.

Mr. Hyatt to Mr. Adee.

No. 165.] CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago de Cuba, August 21, 1895.

SIR: I have the honor to report the situation in Cuba to be deeply interesting.

With perhaps the exception of Santa Cruz, the Government forces hold every important seaport town, and a few large towns in the interior; while from Cienfuegos east, which constitutes three-fourths of the island, the insurgents hold the balance of the territory, and some territory farther west.

Cuban leaders claim 25,000 men, mostly under arms, in the Province of Santiago, and 10,000 farther west. I think the number overstated by at least eight or ten thousand men; but I am inclined to the opinion that there are many more ready to join them when assured that they will be supplied with arms and ammunition.

That arms and ammunition are now coming quite freely to Cuba there seems little room for doubt. A paper published here called The Public Opinion has recently declared that if the Government would look more carefully after the large carrying companies and less for filibustering expeditions they would find the source of trouble.

Those who desire to see the island restored to peace are much depressed, as there is at present three times as large a force of insurgents as at any time in the previous insurrection.

Sent direct and copy to consul-general.

Very respectfully, etc.,

PULASKI F. HYATT, Consul.

But, sir, if there was any other official information desired, the proclamation of this new governor-general, who has been sent to Cuba after the most famous general of the army of Spain failed, after months of warfare, to put down those insurgents—if one will read the proclamation made by General Weyler he will see there an official recognition of the fact that a state of war exists to such an extent that the extremest measures in the power of Spain have failed to put down the insurrection. For that reason, sir, your committee came to the conclusion that this country of ours was justified in expressing the opinion that the time had come when belligerent rights should be extended to those struggling patriots. I append the proclamations of General Weyler:

HABANA, February 16.

The following is a verbatim copy of translations made of proclamations published to-day:

"PROCLAMATION.

"Don Valeriano Weyler y Nicolau, marquis of Teneriffe, governor and captain-general of the Island of Cuba, general in chief of the army, etc., desirous of warning the honest inhabitants of Cuba and those loyal to the Spanish cause, and in conformity to the laws, does order and command:

"ARTICLE 1. All inhabitants of the District of Sancti Spiritus and the Provinces of Puerto Principe and Santiago de Cuba will have to concentrate in places which are the headquarters of a division, a brigade, a column, or a troop, and will have to be provided with documentary proof of identity within eight days of the publication of this proclamation in the municipalities.

"ART. 2. To travel in the country in the radius covered by the columns in operation, it is absolutely indispensable to have a pass from the mayor, military commandants, or chiefs of detachments. Anyone lacking this will be detained and sent to headquarters of divisions or brigades, and thence to Habana, at my disposition, by the first possible means. Even if a pass is exhibited, which is suspected to be inauthentic or granted by authority to persons with known sympathy toward the rebellion, or who show favor thereto, rigorous measures will result to those responsible.

"ART. 3. All owners of commercial establishments in the country districts will vacate them, and the chiefs of columns will take such measures as the success of their operations dictates regarding such places which, while useless for the country's wealth, serve the enemy as hiding places in the woods and in the interior.

"ART. 4. All passes hitherto issued hereby become null and void.

"ART. 5. The military authorities will see to the immediate publication of this proclamation.

"VALERIANO WEYLER.

"HABANA, February 16, 1896."

MILITARY AND JUDICIAL PROCESSES.

The second proclamation is as follows:

"PROCLAMATION.

"Don Valeriano Weyler y Nicolau, marquis of Teneriffe, governor and captain-general of the Island of Cuba, general in chief of the army, etc.:

"In order to avoid suffering and delay other than that essential in time of war, and the summary proceedings initiated by the forces in operation, I dictate the following proclamation:

"ARTICLE 1. In accordance with the faculties conceded to me by rule 2, article 31, of the military code of justice, I assume, as general-in-chief of the army operating in this island, the judicial attributes of H. E. capitan-general.

"ART. 2. In virtue of rule 2 of said article, I delegate from this date these judicial attributes to the commanders-in-chief of the first and second army corps, and to the general commanding the third division, that is, in Puerto Principe.

"ART. 3. Prisoners caught in action will be subjected to the most summary trial without any other investigation except that indispensable for the objects of the trial.

"ART. 4. When the inquiry is finished, subject to consultation with the judicial authorities, the proceedings will continue during the course of operations and in the presence of the judicial authority, with an auditor, the sentence may be carried out. When said authority is not present the process will be remitted to him and the culpable parties detained at the locality where the division or brigade headquarters is situated.

"ART. 5. The military juridic functionary of whatever rank who accompanies in the operations the judicial authorities, when the latter thus decides, will act as auditor, dispensing with the assessors' assistance at court-martial during operations, in cases where no other member of the juridic body is at hand.

SENTENCE IN CERTAIN CASES.

"ART. 6. When the sentence is pronounced, if the sentence be deprivation of liberty, the culprit will be brought to Habana, with the papers in the case, so that the testimony can be issued as to the penalty and the sentence be carried into effect.

"ART. 7. The said authorities will be acquainted with all cases initiated against the accused in war.

"ART. 8. I reserve the right of promoting and sustaining all questions of competence, with other jurisdictions, as also with the military, and to determine inhibitions in all kinds of military processes in the territory of the island.

"ART. 9. I reserve likewise the faculty of assuming an inquiry into all cases when it is deemed convenient.

"ART. 10. No sentence of death shall be effected without the acknowledgment by my authority of the testimony of the judgment, which must be sent to me immediately, except when no means of communication exists or when it is a case of insult to superiors or of military sedition, in which case sentence will be carried out and the information furnished to me afterwards.

"ART. 11. All previous proclamations or orders conflicting with this on the question of the delegation of jurisdiction in this island are hereby rendered null and void.

"VALERIANO WEYLER.

"HABANA, February 16, 1896."

The third proclamation is as follows:

"PROCLAMATION.

"Don Valeriano Weyler y Nicolau, marquis of Teneriffe, governor and captain-general of the Island of Cuba, general in chief of the army, etc.:

"I make known that, taking advantage of the temporary insecurity of communication between the district capitals and the rest of the provinces, notices which convey uneasiness and alarm are invented and propagated, and some persons, more daring still, have taken advantage of this to draw the deluded and the ignorant to the rebel ranks. I am determined to have the laws obeyed and to make known by special means the dispositions ruling and frequently applied during such times as the present, through which the island is now passing, and to make clear how far certain points go in adapting them to the exigencies of war and in use of the faculties conceded to me by No. 12, article 7, of the code of military justice, and by the law of public order of April 23, 1870. And I make known, order, and command that the following cases are subject to military law among others specified by the law:

"Clause 1. Those who invent or propagate by any means notices or assertions favorable to the rebellion shall be considered as being guilty of offenses against the integrity of the nation and comprised in article 223, class 6, of the military code, whenever such notices facilitate the enemy's operations.

"Clause 2. Those who destroy or damage railroad lines, telegraph or telephone wires, or apparatus connected therewith, or those who interrupt communications by opening bridges or destroying highways.

"Clause 3. Incendiaries in town or country, or those who cause damage as shown in caption 8, article 13, volume 2, of the penal code ruling in Cuba.

"Clause 4. Those who sell, facilitate, convey, or deliver arms or ammunition to the enemy, or who supply such by any other means, or those who keep such in their power, or tolerate or deal in such through the customs, and employees of customs who fail to confiscate such importations will be held responsible.

"Clause 5. Telegraphists who divulge telegrams referring to the war, or who send them to persons who should not be cognizant of them.

"Clause 6. Those who through the press or otherwise revile the prestige of Spain, her army, the volunteers, or firemen, or any other force that cooperates with the army.

"Clause 7. Those who by the same means endeavor to extol the enemy.

"Clause 8. Those who supply the enemy with horses, cattle, or any other war resources.

"Clause 9. Those who act as spies; and to these the utmost rigor of the law will be applied.

"Clause 10. Those who serve as guides, unless surrendering at once and showing the proof of force majeure, and giving the troops evidence at once of loyalty.

"Clause 11. Those who adulterate army food or conspire to alter the prices of provisions.

"Clause 12. Those who by means of explosives commit the offenses referred to in the law of June 10, 1894, made to extend to this island by the royal order of October 17, 1895, seeing that these offenses affect the public peace, and the law of April 23, 1870, grants me power to leave to the civil authorities the proceedings in such cases as are comprised in captions 4 and 5 and treatise 3 of volume 2 of the common penal code, when the culprits are not military, or when the importance of the offense renders such action advisable.

"Clause 13. Those who by messenger pigeons, fireworks, or other signals communicate news to the enemy.

"Clause 14. The offenses enumerated, when the law prescribes the death penalty or life imprisonment, will be dealt with most summarily.

"Clause 15. All other proclamations and orders previously issued in conflict with this are annulled by this.

"VALERIANO WEYLER.

"HABANA, February 16, 1896."

Who can read these proclamations and question the existence of a state of war in the Island of Cuba, laying down as they do the course of conduct in the treatment of the citizens of that unfortunate island who are waging the battle on either side? I ask attention to the first, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh clauses of this terrible proof of the existence of war. That terrible Spaniard, the Duke of Alva, never issued a more hideous edict against the "haggard Anabaptist" than this man who has been sent to put down this rebellion when the milder and more civilized methods of Campos had failed. What more unwarranted step could be taken than the provision which prohibits all stores in the country districts from carrying on their vocation and supplying the people with the necessaries of life? It is for these reasons that your committee were compelled to recognize such a state of war in Cuba as entitled them to belligerent rights.

It has been urged that under the provisions of international law it was necessary for those claiming recognition to have a capital as a seat of government, a port, and a ship on the high seas; but these are not necessary conditions prerequisite to the granting of belligerency. Wheaton and Woolsey, and the doctrine as maintained in our own country, set forth in Wharton's Digest, lay down the principle that armed resistance sustained for a period of time is sufficient for the granting of belligerent rights; and when it is taken into consideration that the Cuban insurgents are admitted to have 40,000 well-equipped men in the field, and that Spain has sent 120,000 of her best troops in order to overcome this rebellion, together with 50,000 volunteers raised in Cuba, that the ports have been blockaded for a period of a year, occupying the major part of the Spanish navy, and that with all this force and the most distinguished general of the Spanish army, at the end of twelve months the insurgents have made such progress that they occupy the entire island with the exception of the coast line of the commercial cities, which are protected by the Spanish fleets, it does seem that they are entitled to be accorded belligerent rights. Sir, this fact was impressed upon me by a visit to the office of one of our naval officers, who had there a military map on which the movements of the contending forces were indicated by black and white pins. These movements were thus recorded from the most reliable sources at hand. This map showed that the entire island was under the control of the insurgents—every interior town, with the exception of Pinar del Rio, was in the hands of the insurgents, and even this latter town was attacked and held possession of by them for a time. Simply the utmost coast line, as I have already said, is in the hands to-day of the Spanish Government.

Spain herself can not question our right to grant belligerency to these people, for I hold in my hand and desire to have incorporated with these remarks the proclamation of neutrality issued by Spain on June 17, 1861, but two months after Fort Sumter was fired upon, and many days before the battle of Bull Run, which was the first engagement in our late war, had taken place. Here is the text of the proclamation:

Considering the relations which exist between Spain and the United States of America and the expediency of not changing the reciprocal relations of friendly understanding on account of the grave events which have happened in that Republic, I have resolved to maintain the strictest neutrality in the struggle engaged in between all the several States of the Union and the Confederate States of the South; and in order to avoid the losses which our subjects might suffer both in shipping and commerce for want of definite rules to which their conduct might conform, in accord with the views of my council of ministers, I decree as follows:

ARTICLE I. It is forbidden in all the ports of the Spanish realm to arm, supply, and equip any privateer vessel, whatever may be the flag she carries.

ART. II. It is in like manner forbidden to owners, masters, or captains of merchant vessels to accept letters of marque or to contribute in any way to the arming or equipping of vessels of war or privateers.

ART. III. The entering and remaining for more than twenty-four hours in the ports of the realm is forbidden to vessels of war or privateers with prizes, unless in cases of necessity through stress of weather. When this latter happens the authorities will watch the vessel and oblige her to go to sea as soon as possible without permitting her to take any more supplies than for present necessity, but on no account either arms or munitions of war.

ART. IV. Effects taken from the prizes shall not be sold in the ports of the realm. Transportation under the Spanish flag of all articles of commerce is granted except when directed to blockaded ports. The carrying of war material, papers, or communications for the belligerents is forbidden. Trespassers shall be responsible for their acts and shall have no right to the protection of my Government.

ART. V. All Spaniards are forbidden to enlist in the belligerent army or to engage themselves to serve on board vessels of war or privateers.

ART. VI. My subjects should refrain from every act which, by violating the laws of the Kingdom, may be considered contrary to neutrality.

ART. VII. Transgressors of the above regulations shall have no right to protection of my Government, shall suffer the consequences of the rules which the belligerents may prescribe, and shall be punished as provided by the laws of Spain.

Given at the palace on this 17th day of June, 1861.

Signed by the royal hand.

SATUNINO CALDERON COLLANTES, Minister of State.

If the conditions are compared between the situation then and now, Spain can have no cause for affront at our recognition of these belligerents.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ADAMS. I would rather not, but I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. POWERS. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say that he was the chairman of the subcommittee having this matter in charge. I desire to inquire of him whether the insurgents in Cuba have established a form of government, with a proper official head, and all the paraphernalia of government?

Mr. ADAMS. I will answer the gentleman that, so far as government goes, they have such an established Government, which, in every part of Cuba, makes itself felt. As I have already stated, I had submitted for my inspection, by an officer of the United States Navy, a military map on which the movements that have taken place in the last year were indicated by the insertion of black and white pins, and I wish to say that with the exception of the utmost coast line, which means the actual cities on the coast, the insurgents then possessed every acre of ground and every inland town with the exception of Pinar del Rio, which they have since captured. [Applause.] I will say, furthermore—and it is the cause of great regret to me that my time is so limited, for if I had an hour I am confident I could convince every impartial man in this House that our action has been most conservative and has been founded upon official information and the rules and the usages of civilization—I will say, further, sir, that the Cubans have an army of over 35,000 well-equipped men. They have a President and a cabinet. In every province of the island they have officers whom they call prefects, who gather in supplies, who tax the people, and who have civil jurisdiction and control of the entire territory except the extreme coast line which I have indicated.

Mr. POWERS. That is the precise information that I wanted. They have, then, a civil government with whom the United States could treat if they desired?

Mr. ADAMS. They have a civil government that the United States could treat with if we could get at it, but the officers of that government are in the interior of Cuba.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, if that is true, and I believe it is, would it not, in the opinion of the gentleman, be our duty to recognize the independence of the Cuban people at once or to intercede for their independence—to do something that would really help them?

Mr. ADAMS. In reply to that I will say to the gentleman that these resolutions have been drafted in a conservative spirit and with a desire to avoid transgressing in any way the rules of international or constitutional law. My own opinion is that the actual recognition of a new nation is an executive function.

If the gentleman will read these resolutions, he will see that they are an expression of opinion by this Congress as representatives of the people, so that when, in the opinion of the executive department of our Government (and that department is supposed to be better informed than this House of Representatives upon a question of this kind, which is evidenced by the fact that we have called upon the Executive for information) when that time shall come the President will know that the American people are behind him and are ready to sustain him.

Mr. HYDE. Do you believe that these resolutions in this form, concurrent as they are, will help those struggling people to any extent whatever?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes, sir; and I will tell you why. I am quite ready and glad to answer any question that the gentleman may wish to ask.

Mr. HYDE. That is all I want to ask.

Mr. ADAMS. If the gentleman had listened to the remarks of the chairman of our committee [Mr. HITT], he would have seen how to-day we exceed belligerent rights and pursue these people beyond the 3-mile limit, where we have no right to go according to the law of nations. I will tell the gentleman how this resolution will help them. In the first place, it gives those people a flag on land and a flag on sea. In the second place, it gives them neutral rights in our ports. In the third place, it will enable them to negotiate a loan. In the fourth place, it gives them a place among the nations of the earth, so that if this general who has been sent there, and who has published these proclamations which are a disgrace to civilization, should attempt to carry on that war in the manner he proposes, then the nations of the earth will see that such cruelties are not permitted.

Mr. CANNON. May I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania

why the Committee on Foreign Affairs did not place in their report some of the facts upon which they base the resolutions and their recommendation?

Mr. ADAMS. I will answer the gentleman. We expected to have time to explain these matters on the floor, and to answer questions just as I am doing now. A written report does not answer the questions that may come up. It is much better for the committee to meet questions as they arise on the floor. That, I presume, is the reason why, when the subcommittee had submitted the report to the main committee, the main committee did not authorize a written report.

There has never been, Mr. Speaker, a question before this great House of Representatives of the American people that has aroused the interest that this has. I may say that thousands of petitions and requests have been sent here calling on this Congress to recognize these reople in the right of self-government. We have gone over the petitions carefully, and the opinion of the American people as there expressed is that we should extend a helping hand to these struggling patriots in Cuba.

I come now, sir, to the second of these resolutions. For seventy years Spain has endeavored to keep control of the Island of Cuba. A series of revolutions have arisen, one after the other. The last great struggle, which continued for a period of ten years, was only put down upon the promise of certain reforms in the way of representation by Cuba in the Cortes in Spain and in a more equitable adjustment of the imposition of taxes. Practically neither of these promises has been kept, nor has any of the other reforms that were then promised been carried out. International law justifies any nation in interfering in the disputes of a neighboring country when her own material interests are affected. Spain can not hold Cuba. If this rebellion should be put down it would only be for a time, as it would again break out. There is no solution of this difficulty until a government is established which meets with the approval of the people of Cuba. It is in this spirit that we have drafted the second resolution, in which we offer our friendly offices toward the establishment of a government that shall satisfy the people and which will be of a lasting character. I can best illustrate this proposition by referring to the country north of us—Canada. There the people of their own free will desire and do remain as an integral part of the Kingdom of Great Britain. Should such a form of government be acceptable to the Cubans it would not be in our province to interfere. If, on the other hand, they demand that right which we asserted when we separated from our mother country of England, it would ill behoove the United States not to give its sympathy, if not its open aid, in the consummation of such an end.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to come to the consideration of the third resolution, because my time is very limited. I desire to state that one reason why we went so slow in this matter was that we believed, making all allowance for sentiment and for sympathy with these struggling people, the first duty of every nation is the protection of the rights and property of its citizens. From the most reliable information that we can gather it is estimated that there are twenty millions in sugar and tobacco plantations owned by American citizens in Cuba. There are some eight and a half millions invested in iron mines. The amount of investments held in railroad securities, in mortgages, and in open mercantile accounts it is impossible to estimate, but it would certainly aggregate over $30,000,000. Fully cognizant of the fact that in the granting of belligerency we would yield the right thereafter to reclaim damages from the Spanish Government for the destruction of alien property, your committee were astounded upon the receipt of the official correspondence to find the position taken by the State Department on this question. I quote from a letter dated Washington, July 1, 1895, addressed by Mr. Uhl, Acting Secretary of State, to Mr. Springer, vice-consul-general at Habana, in which he lays down the following principle as the guide of international law and the doctrine held by the State Department:

It is a generally accepted principle of international law that a sovereign government is not ordinarily responsible to alien residents for injuries that they may receive within its territories from insurgents whose conduct it can not control. Within the limits of usual effective control law-abiding residents have a right to be protected in the ordinary affairs of life and intercourse, subject, of course, to military necessities, should their property be situated within the zone of active operations. The Spanish authorities are reported to be using strenuous endeavors to prevent the class of spoliations which the writers apprehend, and notification of any particularly apprehended danger from the insurgents would probably be followed by the adoption of special safeguards by the authorities. In the event, however, of injury, a claim would necessarily have to be founded upon averment and reasonable proof that the responsible officers of the Spanish Government, being in a position to prevent such injury, have failed to use due diligence to do so.

That this was not a mere dictum, but the settled doctrine of the State Department, is confirmed by the letter dated August 31, 1895, of Mr. Adee, Acting Secretary of State, to Mr. Atkins, in which he quotes the above paragraph as the rule laid down by the Department.

Sir, if this be the doctrine that is to be held in the future relating to claims filed by citizens of our country against Spain, should this insurrection be put down it will be impossible for us to recover from that country for damages done to the property of our citizens. But, with all due respect to the Department, I deny that this is the accepted doctrine of international law as applied to the conditions now existing in Cuba. Neither is it so held in the text-books by Wheaton or Woolsey, nor has it been heretofore the position held by our Department, as recorded in Wharton's Digest of American Doctrine.

When your committee learned of this doctrine as enunciated in the above letters and instructions of the Acting Secretary of State, we felt it incumbent upon us to formulate some declaration of a course of conduct by which the property of our citizens should be protected. Hence we have drafted this third resolution, which declares that in the event of the necessity we will intervene at the proper time to prevent further destruction of American property. There was another motive that dictated this course of action on our part. If gentlemen will glance through this long correspondence they will see that American citizens and merchants traveling in Cuba, in the legitimate pursuit of their business, have been in great numbers arrested and incarcerated, and in every case so reported upon, on the intervention of our diplomatic officers, they have been finally released, showing that there was no just or legitimate cause for their apprehension or incarceration. It is time, therefore, under that great principle that self-preservation is the first law of nature, that our country should reach out, by intervention if necessary, to protect the persons as well as the property of the citizens of our country in the peaceful pursuit of their legitimate business.

In support of the charge of harsh and unjust treatment of our citizens I desire to quote from a letter dated September 27, 1895, of the Secretary of State to the Spanish minister:

The Department is unable to comprehend that part of the order of the governor-general which appears to require these four citizens of the United States to report to the consul-general of the United States at Habana for deportation from the island. It is, of course, entirely outside of the functions of that officer to forcibly deport an American citizen upon the decree of the Spanish or Cuban authorities. It is not within his official competence to execute any decrees or laws of any other than his own Government, and certainly he could neither be expected nor requested to assume any share of the responsibility of removing an American citizen from Spanish jurisdiction against his will. Fortunately, however, it was not necessary for Mr. Williams to put this question to a practical test, inasmuch as the parties themselves on reaching Habana voluntarily elected to obey the governor-general's order and quit the island.

The proceeding is furthermore harsh in this regard, that two of the deported persons, Mr. Joseph A. Ansley and Mr. John A. Sowers, are said to have been men of family, and being in impoverished circumstances, to have been compelled to leave their wives and children behind them without resources. The governor-general's order, as interpreted by the military commandant of Sagua, appears to have required these four individuals to remove from Sagua to Habana at their own expense, and thereafter to find for themselves the means of reaching the United States. It is true that upon representation of their destitute circumstances the military commandant of Sagua offered to furnish transportation to Habana. But it does not appear that the Government of the island thereafter intervened in any way to enable these unfortunate men to obey the arbitrary mandate of expulsion.

A further letter of the Assistant Secretary of State to the consul-general, Mr. Williams, under date of September 30, 1895, says:

The Department is quite unable to comprehend the extraordinary order said to have been given to these four American citizens by the governor-general of the island, that they should leave Sagua within twenty-four hours and report to the United States consul-general at Habana, to be banished from the island under prohibition of going into any other possession of Spain. It is incredible that the governor-general should suppose that you could take any part, active or passive, in the deportation of an American citizen by executive order of the Spanish commanders; and it may be desirable to ascertain what was intended by the order that these persons should report to you to be banished from Cuba.

Sir, if this war continues, this beautiful island, probably the richest in its resources of any island in the world, will be destroyed in its entire length. A half century would not restore it to the condition which it now occupies. Our country derives from its productions the necessaries of life as well as its luxuries. To prevent the permanent destruction of the sugar crop and of the tobacco crop, the cessation of the exports of those fruits that have now become a necessity to our people, and the loss of those iron ores that are required to make the best quality of steel, and which are of such material importance to the well-being of our people, our country of necessity is justified in protecting our interests even to the extent of intervention.

This internecine strife, if continued, will ruin our trade with Cuba. Already our imports from that island have fallen from $76,000,000 in 1894 to $51,000,000 in 1895. Our exports in 1894, $17,000,000, were reduced to $9,000,000 in 1895. The latest reports from Habana indicate that a stagnation of trade to such an extent exists that the material interests and welfare of our country can not fail to be affected.

Mr. Speaker, I have thus hurriedly given the reasons that have led your committee to the adoption of the resolutions now submitted to the House. They have been drafted with great care and with due consideration to the sensitive honor of the Spanish people. We believe that we are justified by the principles of international law and by the self-interests of our own country, which we are by every right bound to protect and to see that our people suffer no detriment at the hands of our neighbors. Such is one of the principal functions of government, and ours is justified in maintaining that principle in the interests of what we believe to be permanent peace between Spain and Cuba and the continuation of those commercial relations which are so mutually advantageous to both countries.

In closing I can only express the firm conviction I have that this Western Hemisphere of ours has been dedicated to the right of self-government. In the course of the last century Spain has been obliged to see one after another of her colonies separate from the mother country and enter into the family of nations, and to maintain their place therein. I believe, sir, that the time has come when Cuba, the last of her possessions, must separate from the mother country as have done her other children before. Spain can not hold her; she has struggled to do so in vain for seventy years.

Sir, I have the honor to represent in part the great city of Philadelphia. Within its limits stands that mecca of human liberty, Independence Hall. Behind its doors sat that body of patriots who framed the Magna Charta of human liberty—the right of self-government. Its completion was announced to the world by the old bell, in the steeple above, ringing out and proclaiming "liberty throughout all the land and to all the inhabitants thereof." Those resounding circles of freedom spread and widened until they embraced the uttermost limits of our continent and every people adopted the principles enunciated in that great proclamation. But, sir, the spirit of liberty is not to be bounded by the metes of continents nor by the vasty ocean. Sweeping across the South Atlantic, it found responding echoes amid the hills of the "Queen of the Antilles," and in the breasts of the men who dwelt beneath their shadows, swarthy though they be, was found to dwell the same spirit that animated our ancestors who sat in Independence Hall. To-day they call upon this mother of republics to aid them in establishing the free form of government for which they struggled. Shall we say nay? Not if I know the spirit that animates the people of this country and their representatives who sit in this Congress. [Applause.]

Sir, when the last child of liberty was born, it appealed to this American Government for recognition. At that time a great son of Pennsylvania by birth and of Maine by adoption occupied and guided the helm of state. Did he hesitate? No. Within three days after he received that appeal from this last child born of freedom he flashed the message across the cable beneath the great Atlantic to our representative minister there: "You will maintain diplomatic relations with the Provisional Government." And, sir, as the representative of our country, I had the honor, under those instructions, to be the first foreign minister to recognize the Republic of the United States of Brazil. [Applause.] Now, sir, shall we hesitate when this other child of freedom calls upon us to grant it recognition in its struggle for liberty? Shall the people of the United States hesitate? I hope and pray that the Great Ruler that guides the destinies of men and controls the fates of nations will plant in the hearts of our rulers to-day the same spirit that dwelt in the soul of James G. Blaine. [Loud applause.]

Mr. TUCKER obtained the floor and said: I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, in this matter I take a very deep interest. I know something about the affairs in Cuba. I have given much time and study to it. There is no question to-day in the mind of any student of international law regarding belligerency. Belligerency is a fact, and the Government of the United States can determine for itself such fact just as well as the Government of Spain could determine what was a fact in 1861.

The Government of Spain recognized the belligerency of the Southern Confederacy forty days after Fort Sumter was fired on. That was no cause for war between our Government and the Government of Spain. It is admitted now Spain had that right. Why, then, do the Spanish people to-day claim that if we recognize the belligerent rights of the Cuban patriots it will be considered tantamount, in their opinion and judgment, to a declaration of war? Such a claim is absurd and preposterous. Have we not the same right now that Spain had in 1861? Of course we have, and we should exercise it.

The Cuban patriots are entitled by every construction of international law to belligerent rights. They have in the field a standing army of over 40,000 men. They have proclaimed their declaration of independence, similar to our own, and in the opinion of many more justifiable. They have adopted a provisional constitution, republican in form. They have elected a president, a vice-president, and a constituent assembly. They have a cabinet of ministers. They have a seat of government, and are in possession and hold three-quarters of the island. They are competent to-day to treat and negotiate with any other sovereign people on the face of the globe. They have maintained their army in the field against the great army of Spain, under the command of her first captain-general, for more than a year. They have won important and decisive battles. They are unconquered, and unconquerable. They are a brave, long-suffering, and patriotic people. They ought to win, and they will win. We do not know what is going on in that island to-day, because Spain fears the light of truth; because Spain fears investigation; because Spain hates to allow the people of the world to know how she is conducting the war there. She has established a censorship of the press, of the cable, and of the post-office that is an affront and an insult to the intelligence, the progress, the civilization, and the enlightenment of the last decade of the nineteenth century. [Applause.]

I wish I had time to speak about how the poor Cubans have been treated by the Spaniards for three hundred years. It is a story that must bring the blush of shame to every man who loves honesty and humanity, independence and freedom. But I will speak more about this presently, if I have the time.

I regret that these resolutions do not go as far as I would like to see them go. They are too moderate and too conservative. In my judgment they should go much further. The pending resolutions simply amount to a request to the Executive to issue a proclamation of belligerency, and declaring that war exists in Cuba, and that this Government will maintain strict neutrality between the combatants. It is only a concurrent resolution, and the President is in no way bound by it. It is a mere expression on the part of Congress. The President can ignore these resolutions entirely if he so desires. They have no force and no effect beyond the expression of the opinion. If I had my way I would pass a joint resolution. The facts in the case warrant it and justify it. The time is at hand when we must do something, and the speedier we act the better it will be for liberty and the cause of humanity. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, on the 17th day of last December I offered the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Joint resolution declaring that a state of public war exists in Cuba and that belligerent rights be accorded to the Cuban Government.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Government of the United States recognizes a condition of public war between the Government of Spain and the Government proclaimed and for some time maintained by force of arms by the people of Cuba; and the United States of America hereby declare that they will maintain a condition of strict neutrality between the contending powers and accord to each all the rights of belligerents in the ports and territory of the United States. The Congress of the United States protest and remonstrate against the barbarous manner in which the war in Cuba has been conducted, and the President is hereby authorized to take such steps as may be expedient, in his judgment, to secure an observance of the laws of war as recognized by all civilized nations.

That is a joint resolution. It is couched in the proper form, and is all the Cuban patriots ask for or want. I introduced it at their request. It, too, is moderate and conservative, but it accomplishes the object desired, hoped for, and prayed for. I had indulged the ardent hope that the Committee on Foreign Affairs would report it and that it would pass Congress. However, they have reported a concurrent resolution of their own. I have great respect for the wisdom, the experience, and the patriotism of the distinguished chairman of that committee, Mr. HITT of Illinois. Perhaps he is right. Perhaps it is better as he has constructed it. Time will tell. Let us see what those resolutions are. I will read them:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the opinion of Congress a state of public war exists in Cuba, the parties to which are entitled to belligerent rights, and the United States should observe a strict neutrality between the belligerents.

Resolved, That Congress deplores the destruction of life and property caused by the war now waging in that island, and believing that the only permanent solution of the contest, equally in the interest of Spain, the people of Cuba, and other nations, would be in the establishment of a government by the choice of the people of Cuba, it is the sense of Congress that the Government of the United States should use its good offices and friendly influence to that end.

Resolved, That the United States has not intervened in struggles between any European Governments and their colonies on this continent; but from the very close relations between the people of the United States and those of Cuba, in consequence of its proximity and the extent of the commerce between the two peoples, the present war is entailing such losses upon the people of the United States that Congress is of opinion that the Government of the United States should be prepared to protect the legitimate interests of Americans by intervention, if necessary.

These resolutions are all right if the President will act on them and issue the necessary proclamation. I shall support them heartily. I sincerely hope they will pass this House by an overwhelming majority, that the Senate will quickly concur in them, and that the President, brave, consistent, and patriotic as he is, will speedily acquiesce in the judgment of Congress and issue the desired and requisite proclamation.

If this is done I have no hesitancy in predicting that Cuba will be free and independent ere the end of the year. [Applause.]

If it is not done, what then? Well, sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof. Congress will have to act, or the people of this country will say to their representatives and those in authority, in the words of the poet Watson:

Betrayers of a people, know thy shame.

[Applause.]

I hope, I believe, that when these resolutions reach the President he will grant belligerent rights to the Cubans. The war will soon be over when that is done.

Mr. Speaker, the situation in Cuba to-day closely approximates that in our own country at the beginning of our fight for freedom. She has revolted from a tyranny even more unendurable than that from which we freed ourselves.

Lying within a few hours' journey from our southern coast, Cuba is so near to us in point of geographical location that she is our neighbor in actual, physical fact. But there are closer bonds between us. Every steamer leaving the port of New York for Habana passes close by the great Bartholdi statue. Stationed at the entrance to that harbor, facing the sea which rolls between us and the Old World, whose tyranny we have thrown off and whose traditions we have cast aside, the beautiful gift of France to the United States holds high the torch of Liberty enlightening the world. This statue is the ever-enduring pledge of the friendship of two great Republics, a friendship which had its foundation in the hearts of patriots. In our darkest hour of need France, still straining at the chain of despotism, in the midst of her own struggle for freedom, sent help to us. Her noble generosity gave us Lafayette, whose name ranks in our history in equal company with our American leaders.

In this nineteenth century Cuba has been made to feel the worst of Spanish cruelty. Nothing in the history of the dread Inquisition is more brutal and unmerciful than the Spanish oppression in that beautiful island. She calls upon her neighbor, the greatest Republic in the world, for help. We have delayed too long. In grateful remembrance of the generosity of France to us, we should be generous to Cuba. The sufferings of this unhappy people, their noble struggle for freedom, no less than the great military genius of their leaders, demand recognition from us. Close upon our recognition of the cause will follow the establishment of the Cuban Republic. The history of the present struggle shows that clearly. Then, in the course of time, the natural resources of the island, with the strong feeling of friendship between us and her people, will lead to even closer relationship.

Mr. Speaker, what I say here to-day I say from deep convictions, after mature deliberation, and as an American citizen. As Patrick Henry said: "I know not what course others may take, but as for me I cast my lot on the side of liberty and freedom."

In the present crisis in Cuba my sympathies are all with the heroic and patriotic Cubans, and I sincerely hope and believe they will succeed. Cuba must and will be free and independent, and, in my judgment, the end is near, the result inevitable, and the Cuban Republic will soon take its stand among the nations of the world.

The spirit of Cuban patriotism is unbroken. The story of her trials, her troubles, and her struggles has few equals in the history of the world.

These brave people are fighting a noble battle for freedom and for independence that can and should have but one successful determination, and that is the absolute independence of Cuba. They have demonstrated over and over again their ability to successfully cope with Spain, the Spanish army, and with her captain-generals.

In this revolution the sympathy of every American and every believer in freedom and in liberty should go out to Cuba and the Cubans. We should aid them and help them in every possible legitimate way.

The fight for Cuban independence is similar to our own and as sure to come. Every word in our immortal Declaration of Independence applies to Cuba to-day with as much force and as much effect. They can no longer endure their slavery, and are waging a war to escape an alien yoke, and cast off the oppressive exactions and abuses of many years of a foreign monarchical government which enriches itself by violating every precept of government, and every fundamental law of right and justice. [Applause.]

There is more than an insurrection in Cuba. It is a revolution. Revolutions always accomplish something for the uplifting of humanity and the amelioration of the human race. They mean the advancement of civilization and the betterment of the masses. I believe in revolutions when oppression can no longer be endured. Much was accomplished for Cuba during the last revolution, although her independence was not then secured. At that time the Cuban patriots laid down their arms on the expressed condition that they were to have local self-government, home rule, and immediate reforms of an administrative character. Every promise then made has been broken, and to-day Cuba is again in the midst of a bloody revolution, and I hope no promise except absolute independence will be agreed to or accepted.

I have strong convictions relating to Cuba, born of experience, and of the true policy and duty of the United States Government regarding the recognition of the revolutionists of Cuba as belligerents. As I said before, they have demonstrated their ability to organize a stable provisional government and place an equipped army in the field to uphold and maintain it by force of arms. They can not be conquered. You can not conquer patriots fighting on their own soil for freedom, liberty, and popular rights until you exterminate them. They are soldiers fighting for their country, not outlaws, not brigands. Recognize this, and by every rule of international law they are entitled to belligerent rights.

I am fully convinced that the cause of the revolution now existing in Cuba commands the moral support and the sympathy of this and every other enlightened and Christian people.

In their battle for freedom and for independence every lover of liberty, every believer in the institutions of free government, and every friend of the people who believes that all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed should sympathize with the struggling Cubans and do all that they can to help them to bring about the realization of their hopes and aspirations.

It is true, in the contest thus far, we have been merely close and sympathetic observers and anxious and hopeful lookers on, but the time has now come when we must assert our rights in no mistaken tones and brook no insolence from haughty Spain, puffed up, as she seems to be, with her own ancient pride, which, according to good law and precedent, goeth before a fall.

Spain has run her course. Her days of conquest are passed. She is tottering to-day on the greatness of her own historic ruins. She, too, I doubt not, will soon be a Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, these brave, noble, heroic Cuban patriots are fighting a battle of republicanism against monarchy; of democracy against plutocracy; home rule against the bayonet; the sovereignty of the individual against the sanctity of the king; the ballot against the throne; American liberty against foreign tyranny, and above all and beyond all they are fighting a battle for the rights of man. They must and will succeed if they can maintain their present status for a few months more. [Applause.]

Spain denies that war exists in Cuba, yet she has sent a hundred thousand men there to put it down. Her greatest general took personal command, was recalled, and admits he can not succeed. Spain never did and never will admit the truth about Cuba. She will not permit the world to know what is going on in the island, and the probability is that she is not carrying on a civilized mode of warfare. There seems to be very little difference between Captain-General Valmaceda and Captain-General Weyler, his former lieutenant, and the message of President Grant, through his Secretary of State, in 1869, crying out in the interest of Christian civilization and common humanity against the mode of warfare in Cuba by the Spanish Government is no doubt as true to-day as it was then. [Applause.]

What a sad story the history of poor Cuba tells!

For three hundred years Spain has ruled her with a blood-stained and an iron hand. It has been the rule of a military despotism over a conquered and subjected province. Its true history never has been written, and probably never will be. It has been one long, unending carnival of crime, of bloodshed, of rapine, of public plunder, and of official robbery; a dark blot on civilization, a disgrace to Christendom, an imperial challenge, backed by bayonet and by sword, to the sober sense of humanity. How much longer will it last? How much longer will this Christian Government suffer it to last? Captain-general after captain-general has come and gone, leaving a trail of blood, of pillage, of plunder, and of crime in all its forms; but Cuban patriotism has lived on and hoped on, and has become, as the years rolled by, more intensified, more united, until at last the bright dawn of her independence day is at hand, and with our help and our sympathy the Ever Faithful Isle, richest for its size of any on earth, will soon be free and independent from Spanish misrule, Spanish marauding, and Spanish misgovernment. [Applause.]

No one desires to hold Spain unduly responsible for the crimes and the moral turpitude of all these men, these officials, and these miscreants; but so long as her banner is upheld by them she must share the dishonor which attaches to their deeds.

Spain shuns the light of truth regarding Cuba. She maintains a censorship of the press, of the post-office, and of the telegraph office. Not a letter or a cablegram can go in or come out of Cuba without being revised, suppressed, or supervised. Why? Because Spain fears the truth and can not bear the light of impartiality and investigation. Hence, most of the news from Cuba is doctored by the Government and is worthless. Very little attention should be given to the reports from Spain concerning the Cuban revolution. In many instances the news (so called) is a tissue of falsehoods, manufactured to influence public sentiment against the Cubans and make the world believe what is not so, and what most of us know can not be true.

Mr. Speaker, Spain can not win. She can not again subjugate Cuba. Her greatest generals meet with defeat in every important engagement, and her resources are drained to a condition of national bankruptcy. She can not carry on the war much longer and must soon admit her inability to quell the revolution. From what I can ascertain and from what I can learn from the best and most authoritative sources, I know the Cubans will accept no terms but the freedom of the island—no more faithless promises of reform; nothing but absolute independence.

Cuba is the queen of the Antilles. She has justly been called the fair and fruitful isle, the Eden of all her sisters of the sea, the glorious gem of the ocean, whose very name fills the mind with the most enchanting pictures of tropical beauty, the most delicious dreams of natural wealth, of luxury, and of splendor, an eternal summer garden, intoxicating with the incense of perpetual flowers and brilliant with the plumage and the music of innumerable birds, beneath whose sunlit glowing sky the teeming earth yields easy and abundant harvest to the toil of man, inviting the traffic and the commerce of the world. [Applause.] Her people are industrious, intelligent, and entirely capable of governing themselves. For the Spanish press to assert otherwise is preposterous and unworthy of denial and contradiction.

Cuba is our Armenia. The world will hold us responsible for the cruel, heartless, bloody outrages perpetrated there in the name of Spain. We should serve notice on Spain to-day that butcher Weyler must cease the indiscriminate slaughter of women and children; that the firing by night in Morro Castle and Cabanas must end. If it does not, then we will intervene and end it in the name of Christian civilization.

Let Spain look at all the other Spanish American Republics from the Rio Grande to Patagonia. Yes, let her look at Hayti, lying adjacent to Cuba, and a thousand times better governed.

Cuba lies at our very door and is a natural part of our geographical domain. Some day she will be ours. But it will never come by purchase. Spain derives 60 per cent of her entire revenue from Cuba, and she will never consent to sell her most profitable possession, and what is more, and what is more right, the Cubans will never consent to be sold. Cuba will come to us in her own good time, but when she comes she will come in her pride and her glory, of her own accord and her own volition, as a free and independent State, a possession rich beyond the dreams of avarice and essential to our control of the Gulf of Mexico, our continental supremacy, and our national destiny. [Applause.]

The time has come when, as the people of the great Republic, we must declare our honest views and our true convictions, and declare them in no weak, vacillating, or mistaken tones. To remain silent much longer would subject us to the ridicule and the condemnation of every nation on the Western Hemisphere.

Let the impetuous and excitable people of cruel Spain fume and brag and bluster and threaten and intimidate as they will; it will hurt no one and should not deter us from doing our duty. Spain can not scare any nation to-day. The Cubans must be treated as soldiers, not as pirates and outlaws.

Mr. Speaker, all of the South American and Central American Republics, each one of which succeeded by revolution in securing its independence from tyrannical and oppressive Spain, are waiting for us to act, for us to speak. The moment we recognize the Cuban patriots as belligerents and entitled to all the rights of belligerency every one of them will follow, from Mexico to Chile. This is the Great Republic. It is looked up to and respected by every other republic on the globe. There should be no delay, no hesitancy, no cowardice. We should stand by Cuba and give her the helping hand France once gave us.

Why should it not be done? Can we forget our own past, our own struggles, our own prayer for help and succor, in the trying days when we were fighting for self-government? Where is the spirit that animated the people at Lexington, at Bunker Hill, at Saratoga, at Valley Forge, and at Yorktown? Have we forgotten the burning, eloquent words and the heroic actions of Washington and Jefferson, of Patrick Henry and James Otis, of John Hancock and Benjamin Franklin, of Morris, of Hamilton, of Adams, and all the other Revolutionary heroes? [Applause.]

Is American patriotism dead? Has the spirit of 1776 decayed and moldered away? Has the Declaration of Independence indeed become a dead letter and a glittering generality? Is our form of government a farce? Can we no longer conjure with the great names of our Revolutionary heroes?

If republicanism and democracy find no echo here, then indeed free government is a thing of the past, and the hope of the future is a message of sorrow and of gloom, of oppression and of tyranny.

Spain laughs at international law, ridicules the rights of nations, insults the Stars and Stripes, molests and fires on our commerce, scorns American sovereignty, and bids defiance to our greatness and our nationality.

We owe no debt of obligation to Spain. In all the history of the past we owe her no favor, no national gratitude. Her course never has been friendly to our own national development, our own progress, and our own advancement. We have no grievance with Spain, no quarrel, and we seek none; neither do we fear one or expect one. But we have the right, and no one can deny it, to say what we think and what we believe; and we think and we believe Cuba should be free—free to govern herself, free to make her own laws, free to do each and every thing that every nation on earth of right can do.

Our duty is plain, aye, in my humble judgment it is imperative. We should recognize the Cuban patriots as belligerents, with all the rights and all the privileges that implies and that affords in modern warfare.

Let us fearlessly, manfully, and courageously meet the exigency of the hour, "with malice toward none, and with charity for all," and our action will command the approval of every liberty-loving American from one end of the country to the other; the God of nations will bless us, and we will have earned the everlasting gratitude, the respect, and the affection of every Cuban now and for all time to come. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the privilege of printing remarks on this subject be extended to other gentlemen.

Mr. MONEY. That all have leave to print?

Mr. HITT. Yes; that any gentleman who may desire it may have leave to print upon this subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly obvious that in seven minutes it will be impossible to make a satisfactory or considerate statement of the pending question. I regret that in so grave an emergency as now confronts us a larger liberty of debate was not allowed. Even of the brief time provided for the opposition, a large proportion has been already occupied by the friends of the resolutions.

It is also most regrettable that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs submits so momentous a measure under a suspension of the rules with so meager an opportunity for discussion and information, and without even the privilege of offering an amendment. He did not see fit to present even a report in which the important facts of the case could have been given to the House and to the country. But there is in fact no report to guide us on this most extraordinary occasion.

We ought to know the facts on which we are asked to pass the resolutions proposed by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. We called a short while ago on the Secretary of State for information on the subject. I have before me the pamphlet which contains his reply, and there are only about forty pages of it relating to the progress of the insurrection in Cuba and those pages are only a dreary record of incendiarism, assassination, and guerrilla operations.

On this foundation we are asked to declare that a state of public war exists in the Island of Cuba. My friend from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] instead of giving us facts has cited certain precedents. It would have been more appropriate in him, as a distinguished member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to have given us some information of the facts in the particular case for our instruction. He invokes as a precedent the recognition of belligerency granted by Spain and the great powers to the Confederate States. Why, sir, at the time this recognition was accorded to the Confederate States they had possession of almost every port from the mouth of the Potomac to the Rio Grande! And they had an army against which the combined legions of Cæsar and the phalanxes of Alexander would have been unavailing. [Applause.]

He talks of the Texas precedent. At the time the recognition was granted to that young Republic, the battle of San Jacinto had been won; Santa Anna, the commander-in-chief of the Mexican army, with his forces, had been made prisoners of war by the gallant Texans. The gentleman is as unfortunate in his precedents as on the question of fact. Are we to be reminded of the recognition accorded to our ancestors in the Revolutionary war? Before that recognition we had fought the battle of Bunker Hill, had captured Boston, had fought the battle of Bennington, and had captured Burgoyne's army at Saratoga. When and where has there been any battle—war—in Cuba?

But, sir, I have been amazed that appeals to popular indignation have been made in this Congress like those which were made in Barcelona on yesterday to the Spanish mob. [Applause.] While on this incident let me say that our State Department has official information that the Spanish Government has already without demand made completely the amende honorable, and has promised ample reparation. They may be a hot-blooded people, but there is in their bosoms still something of the ancient chivalry. Let us imitate this spirit rather than that of the Spanish mob.

Unspeakable outrages on the weak and helpless and on women and children have been alleged here and elsewhere against General Weyler, the present captain-general, during the previous insurrection, on the authority of one Enrique Donderio, a Spaniard who is said to have come over to Cuba with the Spanish troops and then fled to this country to tell his story. Whatever may be the character of General Weyler for cruelty as a commander, I make no defense for him; but I will not believe that he personally caused these monstrous outrages on women and children upon such testimony. Either this tale of horror has been overdrawn or else these Cuban patriots would never have voluntarily made peace with the Spanish Government. It would never have entered into the hearts of patriots to condone such appalling crimes and live again in amity with their perpetrators. Why have not the Cubans themselves in the peace that ensued at least told these wrongs, even if they lacked the spirit to resent them? The thing is incredible. Why has nothing ever been said of these awful crimes in reports to the State Department? But, sir, I do not deny that some atrocities may have been committed in the present struggle as well as in the other, such as occur between all men in stern conflict with arms.

General Grant, in one of his messages to Congress on this subject, during the ten years of their former struggle, stated that—

General Quesada, the Cuban chief, coolly and with apparent unconsciousness of aught else than a proper act, admitted the slaughter by his own deliberate order in one day of upward of 650 prisoners of war.

Horrors seem to have occurred on both sides of this unfortunate struggle.

Mr. WASHINGTON. May I ask my friend a question?

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I hope my friend will recognize the fact that my time is very limited.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be permitted to finish his remarks.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to that.

Mr. MILES. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended three minutes.

Mr. COX. Say ten minutes.

Mr. MILES. Ten minutes; not to come out of the time of any of the other members who have been allotted time to speak.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Georgia be extended for ten minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the gentleman ought to be accorded this privilege. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER], who has charge of the time on this side, has given most of it to gentlemen in favor of the resolutions, reserving but a very few minutes for gentlemen who want to discuss the other side of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order, objection having been made.

Mr. OWENS. I ask that he be allowed to extend his remarks for nine minutes.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask the House to give the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] five minutes more in which to complete his argument—for it is an argument—against the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. There is no objection on this side.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to extending the gentleman's time for nine minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Will my friend now allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I prefer not to yield. Mr. Speaker, I beg to return my thanks for the great courtesy shown me, and for the privilege of continuing for a few minutes the remarks which I was endeavoring to submit.

It will be remembered that during the entire ten years of the former struggle of the Cuban people recognition of their belligerent rights was denied by the President of the United States, who from year to year communicated to Congress the reasons which actuated his conduct.

At one time President Grant said of the insurrection in Cuba:

Attempts to suppress it, so far futile, have been probably at a sacrifice of more than a hundred thousand lives and an incalculable amount of property.

And yet he refused recognition of the belligerent character of the Cubans.

At another time he said, in speaking of according rights of belligerency:

Unless justified by necessity, it is always and justly regarded as an unfriendly act and a gratuitous demonstration of moral support to the rebellion.

On another occasion, in his message to Congress, President Grant tersely synopsized the conditions and elements which are requisite to constitute war in the sense of international law. He said:

The question of belligerency is one of fact not to be decided by sympathies or prejudices for or against either party. The relations between the parent State and the insurgents must amount in fact to war in the sense of international war. Fighting, though fierce and protracted, does not alone constitute war; there must be military forces acting in accordance with the customs of war, flags of truce, cartels, exchange of prisoners, etc., and to justify a recognition of belligerency there must be above all a de facto political organization of the insurgents sufficient in character and resources to constitute it, if left to itself, a State among nations capable of discharging the duties of a State and of meeting the just responsibilities it may incur as such toward other powers.

And he added the following statement of Cuban affairs, which seems to be a perfect statement of the present situation so far as we know it:

The insurgents hold no town or city; have no established seat of government; they have no prize courts; no organization for the receiving and collecting the revenue; no seaport to which a prize may be carried, or through which access can be had by a foreign force to the limited territory and mountain fastnesses which they occupy. The existence of a legislature representing any popular constituency is more than doubtful. In the uncertainty which hangs around the entire insurrection there is no palpable evidence of an election, of any delegated authority, or of any government outside the limits of the camps occupied from day to day by the roving companies of insurgent troops. There is no commerce, no trade, internal or foreign, etc.

These views were repeated from year to year in the annual messages. If you have no respect for Grant: if you think that he knew nothing of war, then bear in mind that he was stating the law according to the standard authorities.

Who is the president of Cuba? He is said to be a naturalized citizen of the United States, and is enjoying his honors very safely in this country. His cabinet is also said to be in this country. Where is the capital? Where is the Cuban legislature? Where are their battlefields?

Mr. Speaker, it is unnecessary for me to extend these remarks further. I will conclude by the simple statement that if I could I would have offered resolutions which I had prepared for the occasion, to vindicate the claims of humanity and to extend our good offices in every practical way in accordance with the precedents. And I would defer for the present offensive interference until we have better information. Mr. Speaker, I trust that I am not deficient in the spirit of freedom. I know how much it costs, and I believe that that liberty is best which is regulated by law. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HITT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the report of the committee is being considered under a suspension of the rules, with but thirty-five minutes to divide between all who desire to speak, it will be impossible to even summarize the rule of international law or examine the adjudicated cases in point. This is greatly to be regretted in a matter of such grave importance to the people of the United States and a friendly European power.

I would like to specifically reply to the argument of the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER], but my time will not permit me to do other than express my amazement that so able a lawyer should for a moment question the right of this Government to take neutral ground in the present warfare between the Spanish Government and her colony on the Island of Cuba. There is not a recognized authority on international law that does not admit the right of neutral powers to stand absolutely aloof by balancing the scales of equality between contending forces engaged in war. Whenever the fact of war exists in the judgment of a neutral state, belligerency is accorded as a matter of right, and the government de facto and the government de jure stand upon an equal footing in the eyes of friendly powers.

Judge Grier, in the Prize Cases in 2 Black, Supreme Court Reports, says:

A civil war is never solemnly declared. It becomes such by accident. The power and organization of the persons who originate and carry it on, when the party in rebellion occupy and hold in a hostile manner a certain portion of territory, have declared their independence and cast off their allegiance, have organized armies, commenced hostilities against their former sovereign, the world acknowledges them as belligerents and the contest as war.

Woolsey's International Law says:

There is a vast distinction between the recognition of a state's belligerency and its independence. It can declare a blockade, and responsibility for the acts of insurgents is removed. On the other hand, the insurgents can raise loans, get war material and other assistance, subject to neutrality laws. Its flag and revenues are respected and it secures a quasi political status, far short of independence, however. No complaint has ever been made of the recognition of belligerency of Southern States by Great Britain in 1861, which example was followed by other foreign powers, but the recognition of its independence proposed by France was at no time justifiable, for the attempt to put down the rebellion at no time ceased.

Earl Russell, in explaining why England recognized the belligerency of the Confederacy, points out the number of troops placed in the field by the United States and the other warlike preparations. Seventy-five thousand men were called out April 15, 1861, and on May 3 an increase of 22,714 men was ordered for the Army. (It will be noticed that the total is less for the immense territory in the South than the efforts of Spain in Cuba up to the present moment.) Continuing, Earl Russell says:

After a recital of these immense efforts it seems quite inappropriate to speak of unlawful combinations. When considering the case of the Greek revolutionists Mr. Canning said that the character of belligerency is not so much a principle as a fact.

That a certain degree of force and consistency acquired by a mass of population engaged in war entitled that population to be treated as belligerents, even if their right was questionable; rendered it even if their right was questionable; it was the interest of nations well understood to so treat them.

Hall, in his work on International Law, says:

As soon as a considerable population is arrayed in arms with the professed object of obtaining political ends, it resembles a state too nearly for it to be possible to treat individuals belonging to such population as criminals. It would be inhuman for the enemy to execute his prisoners. It would be still more inhuman for foreign nations to capture and hang the crews of war ships as pirates. Humanity requires that the members of such a community be treated as belligerents.

Vattel, on the Law of Nations, page 292, says:

When a party is formed in a state who no longer obey the sovereign and are possessed of sufficient strength to oppose him, this is called a civil war.

Judge Grier, in the Prize Cases in 2 Black, 667, says:

A civil war is never solemnly declared. It becomes such by accident. The power and organization of the persons who originate and carry it on. When the party in rebellion occupy and hold in a hostile manner a certain portion of territory, have declared their independence and cast off their allegiance, have organized armies, have commenced hostilities against their former sovereign, the world acknowledges them as belligerents and the contest as war.

Larimer agrees with Pomeroy that if belligerency is not accorded it is equivalent to aiding the mother country. He says (volume 1, page 142):

By recognizing belligerent rights neutral powers pronounce no judgment whatever, either on the merits of the claim or the probability of its ultimate vindication. Belligerent recognition is a mere declaration of impartiality. To withhold from the claimant for recognition the rights of belligerency whilst we extend them to the parent state would plainly be to take part in the war.

Pomeroy, page 224, says:

To refuse recognition might, under some circumstances, have the direct effect to cause the country so refusing to take the part of the mother country and against the rebels. As a consequence, if another power remains strictly neutral to the contest, that very attitude must involve the recognition of the insurgents as belligerents. Unless another power desires to take active part in the hostilities and throw the weight of its influence and, under some circumstances, the positive aid of its executive power in favor of the mother country, it must treat the belligerents as belligerents.

It should be noted that this revolution is much more powerful than that which called forth President Grant's message. There can now be no doubt of the facts upon which the right to belligerency is based as to a port. Modern armament and men-of-war are now so powerful that it would be impossible to retain a port without cooperation of a fleet. To obtain a fleet it would be necessary to violate the neutrality laws of a country. Besides, no writer has ever declared this a necessary condition precedent to creating belligerency. The possession of a port is only one kind of evidence of the right of belligerency.

It is natural for this country, aside from the established policy and its interest in the trade of Cuba, to take the greatest interest in this movement.

Washington (2 Wait's State Papers, page 99) says:

Born in a land of liberty, having early learned its value, having engaged in a perilous conflict to defend it, having, in a word, devoted the best years of my life to secure its permanent establishment in my own country, my anxious recollections, my sympathetic feelings, and my best wishes are unmistakably excited whensoever in any country I see an oppressed nation unfurl the banner of freedom.

The criticism of the gentleman from Georgia as to the destruction of the sugar cane, especially in behalf of American citizens, is unfounded. As a matter of fact, orders were issued not to grind, so as to prevent aid and comfort to the enemy following from imposts and duties on the crop and on the proceeds thereof, which would circulate in a manner to be taxed over and over again. It was only because of disobedience of this order that the cane was destroyed; but aside from this the action of the Cubans is beyond criticism.

This right is founded on authority. In Aldy's Kent, 1878, page 195, the following will be found:

The enemy's lands are supposed to be a great source of his wealth and perhaps the most solid foundation of his power, and whoever owns or possesses land in the enemy's country, though he may in fact reside elsewhere and be in every other respect a neutral or friend, must be taken as to have incorporated himself with the nation. So far as he is the holder of the soil, the produce of the soil is held to be enemy property, independent of the personal residence or occupation of the owner.

While Chitty, in his Law of Nations, page 33, says:

First, then, it appears that the produce of the hostile soil is to be considered as bearing a hostile character, and certainly if any property ought to be considered as having such a character at all for the purposes of seizure nothing can be more reasonable than that the tracts of the enemy's lands, one of the greatest sources, and, as some have supposed, the sole source of national wealth, should be regarded as legitimate prize. That the interests of friends may sometimes be involved in our own vengeance upon enemies, is a matter which it is natural to regret but impossible to avoid. The administration of public rules demands of no private exceptions, and he who clings to the profits of a hostile government must be content to bear its losses also.

It is argued that Spain, until recognition of the Cubans, will be absolutely responsible for all destruction or damage by the latter. While this may be true as a broad general principle, attention is called to the following:

Mr. Seward in a letter to Mr. Bareda, January 9, 1863 (see Wharton's International Law Digest, volume 2, page 581):

"The United States Government is not liable for loss to Peruvian citizens caused by the destruction on board ship in Chesapeake Bay in 1862, such destruction being effected by a sudden attack of insurgents which could not, by due diligence, have been averted by the Government of the United States."

In short, it will be seen by the foregoing authorities, first, that the Cubans are entitled to belligerency; second, to withhold the right is to throw the support of the Government to the Spaniards; third, that the destruction of sugar cane owned by Americans is supported by sound American law; fourth, that by claiming it exercised due diligence to prevent the destruction of the cane, Spain may be relieved of liability, even if no belligerency be accorded.

There is a vast distinction between the recognition of a State's belligerency and its independence. The first may long precede the second. Belligerency gives the parent State important rights as well as the insurgents. It can declare a blockade and responsibility for the acts of insurgents is removed. On the other hand, the insurgents can raise loans, get war material and other assistance subject to neutrality laws. Its flag and revenues are respected and it secures a quasi political status, far short of independence, however. No complaint has ever been made of the recognition of belligerency of the Southern States by Great Britain in 1861, which example was followed by other foreign powers, but the recognition of its independence proposed by France was at no time justifiable, for the attempt to put down the rebellion at no time ceased. (Woolsey, page 42.)

The Cuban people have for nearly a year maintained themselves in the field. Their force has increased. It has overrun the entire island from east to west. It has enforced the orders of the republican Government it established. It has organized its army into divisions, corps, and brigades. Its Government has proceeded to the enactment and enforcement of laws. The Spanish Government has been forced to declare the island from end to end in a state of siege, a thing never before done in all the provinces in the history of the country. It has been forced to increase its navy, fortify its harbors with heavy guns and torpedoes; it has been forced to send from Spain over 120,000 troops in less than ten months; to increase its debt; to send over 40 of its best generals, and even during the winter season, the only time, as they admit, when they can operate with effect, they have been continually on the defensive. Nevertheless, we are asked to believe that the movement has no strength.

Spain's territorial possessions on this continent formerly covered sixty-five degrees of latitude and included both of the Tropics, while the European possessions of Ferdinand and Isabella, Charles V, and Philip II literally girdled the earth. But they ruled by the most abject subjection, and when they passed away Spanish decline was portentously rapid. Well might the Spaniards of that time mourn over the decline of their country—the chosen abode of chivalry and romance, the mistress of the world, the queen of the ocean. The terror of nations, her power was gone, no more to return. Weakness and vacillation characterized her government and her people. "Numbed into a deathlike torpor, spellbound and entranced by an accursed superstition, she presented a lonely and solitary spectacle of constant decay." No hope remained, and the only question was by whose hands the blow should be struck which would dismember that once mighty Empire, "whose shadow had covered the world and whose vast remains were imposing even in their ruins." It is said that aliens are now fighting the battles of Cuba. Who can complain? Broken and prostrate Spain has at various times in her history been unable to supply ability of any kind, making it necessary that foreigners should be called in to fight her battles. When the war of succession broke out in 1702, the extraordinary spectacle was exhibited of the Duke of Berwick, an Englishman, leading the Spanish soldiers against the enemy.

The gentleman from Georgia contends that these people are not competent to govern themselves. The same claim was made for the revolting colonies in South America, and made with equal force and effect in criticising the attempted independence of our own country.

He also says that this rebellion is being conducted by foreigners. I would remind him that the independence of Spain was achieved by foreigners, English and French generals conducting all her principal campaigns. Have foreigners no right to engage in war for the liberation of those they love? Much of the enthusiasm and valor displayed on fields of conquest have no warrant in the eyes of lawmakers. Indeed, sir, the distinguished gentleman from Georgia might properly proceed to the other side of this Chamber and take down the portrait of Lafayette, who left the brilliant surroundings of the court life of France, sleeping in stables to avoid detection, and came to join the forces of Washington to assist in establishing freedom here, being denied even the right to assist in working out the destiny of our Revolutionary fathers for some weeks after his services were tendered. The too tardy American Congress finally disregarded the injunctions of the King of France and permitted Lafayette to stand side by side with Washington in working out the destiny of the great Republic of the New World. [Applause.]

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. The gentleman from Michigan should remember that Lafayette came to fight.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. He did come to fight, but the Congress of the United States denied him that right until he had plead, and even begged, for the privilege. My friend, you should proceed to Statuary Hall and pull out of their places the statues of Pulaski and Kosciusko, who, though foreigners, left dismembered Poland and came for the purpose of giving liberty to the New World, dedicating their blood to the cause of human freedom. [Applause.] Is it possible that the American people will withhold the right of mere neutral recognition because, forsooth, aliens are fighting the cause of Cuban liberty? Our country will be the beneficiary if Cuba shall become a republic. It sits like a sentinel in the Mexican Gulf, guarding the approaches from five States of the South to our eastern sea. It is directly in the course of the watery highway connecting the republics of the south with the continent of North America. It guards the passage from the Atlantic to the Isthmus, and is the only friendly territory to which we could confidently turn in the event of the construction of the Nicaragua Canal and its attempted use by foreign foes.

Spain owns, besides Cuba, Porto Rico, at the very entrance to the Mona passage. England controls the Bahama Islands, Jamaica, and Trinidad. France has possessions in the West Indies, owning and fortifying Guadeloupe and Martinique. Is it not important that this great Government, whose vast territory is washed by the Gulf, should have at least an equal chance in this island group in the event of future war?

A personal visit to this island impressed me with its importance and great value. Under ordinary conditions it will develop extraordinary value.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Upon motion, Mr. SMITH's time was unanimously extended five minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It has frequently been asserted here that if we recognize the belligerency of Cuba the property of Americans invested there is instantly put in jeopardy.

Mr. Speaker, there is a vast bonded debt upon the island, incurred by the Spanish Government, of over $200,000,000, and a fixed interest charge of over $20,000,000, and the cost of the present war saddled upon these poor people in the event of Spanish triumph will add $150,000,000 more to her burdens.

What will become of the American interests in that island when the tax—now too heavy to bear—has been increased to this extent?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the gentleman from Michigan permit me to ask him a brief question at this point?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman has alluded to the property of American citizens in Cuba and has stated that the island is overwhelmingly in debt. I ask him how he is going to favor the fact of American investment there by surrendering all claim upon Spain as a principal if Cuba, as an indorser, is lost by being submerged in debt?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman has asked me a question, and I will answer it. The Island of Cuba and its people have had no part in incurring the debt now charged against it. The bonds were issued by Spain and denominated Cuban bonds, because they hoped to cancel them with the revenues derived from Cuba. But the moment that this island becomes independent of Spain the debt ceases to be a charge against Cuba and passes away with the power that incurred it. [Applause.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. But that does not answer my question. My question is, to whom are American citizens to look for damages to their property?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Under the interpretation of law given by the Acting Secretary of State in reply to questions asked as to Spanish liability for property destroyed by the insurgents in Cuba, there is no possible redress against the Spanish Government for a single dollar of damages for injuries sustained up to the present time. It is a well-recognized principle of law, reenforced by the opinion of Secretary Seward, before quoted, that where insurrection is beyond the control of the parent state, and it is unable to prevent destruction of property, there is no rule upon which liability can be successfully predicated. Therefore I say that the only hope the American investor has in Cuba is in driving Spain from the island and putting a stop to this war as quickly as it is possible to do, and when the debt and the irksome power are driven from that land it can be economically administered and investments safely guarded.

My friend from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] wastes his sympathy upon a people who are responsible to high heaven for the iniquitous Inquisition of whose crimes Spain has never been purged.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask unanimous consent that the Inquisition be abolished.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The inquisition which you ought to aid in abolishing, sir, exists to-day in no modified form in the Island of Cuba [applause], where hundreds of innocent people are being hourly put to death by the most cruel and barbarous methods conceivable, and if this resolution will aid in any manner, and give comfort to the struggling, or deter the hand of tyranny, it will have fully accomplished its purpose and reflect the best sentiment of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. TUCKER. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE].

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I hardly expect in the three minutes permitted me to absolutely convince all the members of this House as to what is their public duty at this time. [Laughter.] I do not expect to be able to traverse the very interesting chapters of history with which we have been regaled this afternoon. But I do desire to emphasize the expression which I made at 5 o'clock in the afternoon on a recent day, when I objected to the summary disposition of a question of the most momentous gravity by what ought to be, in the absence of conservatism elsewhere, the conservative body of the Congress of the United States.

I disliked at that time to interpose an obstacle in the way of any proposition made by the accomplished and distinguished gentleman who is chairman of our Foreign Affairs Committee; and I think that even the gentlemen who have greeted me with that pleasant laughter this afternoon will believe that nothing but a strong sense of public duty would have impelled me to interpose objection at that time. If I needed any justification for that action I find it in the fact that the objection which I raised to that hasty consideration has at least enabled the Committee on Foreign Affairs to revise the resolutions which they then presented. They have profited by that delay.

Mr. MONEY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BOUTELLE. If in my three minutes I can spare the time——

Mr. MONEY. The Committee on Foreign Affairs have not revised these resolutions; they were revised by the gentleman who introduced them to-day; the Committee on Foreign Affairs have had nothing to do with it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will accept that amendment, and will say that the gentleman at the head of the committee has deemed it wise to modify the terms of the resolutions as they were before presented, and I entirely concur with him in the wisdom of that modification.

I speak here to-day simply for that number of the members of this House (and, Mr. Speaker, they are more numerous than many here may suppose) who, whatever their sympathies may be in the struggle now going on in Cuba, have grave doubts as to expediency or propriety of the House of Representatives adopting under a suspension of the rules a practical declaration of war against a power with which we are now at peace. And I want to say, so far as my own record is concerned, that whatever I might be persuaded to do or to vote if I could have the rights and facts of this Cuban question presented to me, as I have not had them presented to me thus far, I am opposed to passing resolutions here to-day, under a suspension of the rules, without what I regard to be a proper amount of discussion, without what I regard to be the essential deliberation that will justify us before the American people in committing our Government to a course that may turn the whole trend of our public affairs away from the paths and avocations of peace to those of war. I am not enamored of the prospect of war. I am not afraid to stand here and say that I deprecate war. There is nothing seductive about the aspect of war. War is horrible; and it is only to be endured when honor and necessity demand it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not say that the adoption of these resolutions will ex necessitate produce war. I say that it is the entering wedge; that we are entering upon a course that may have that result, and whether rightful or wrongful we ought not to do such a thing under a suspension of the rules, but in accordance with every rule of deliberation which this House can observe to safeguard such momentous action. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes. I desire to ask him a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] asks that the time of the gentleman from Maine be extended for five minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I appreciate the gentleman's courtesy; but recognizing fully as I do the temper of this House, I feel that I could add nothing more to what I have said. I can not argue the question; there is no time. I can not obtain information; there is no opportunity to give it. I have simply expressed my belief to my fellow-members of this great body, the representatives of the American people, the men who stand here nearest to the people, that they should not proceed in a matter of this kind with undue and unseemly haste. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for the purpose of allowing me to ask him a question or two.

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the gentleman's request is to enable himself to make a speech, I withdraw my objection. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not exactly understand what the situation is. [Renewed laughter.]

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TUCKER. I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS].

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I was surprised when I heard the objection to the unanimous consideration of these resolutions on Thursday last from the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE]. The ground given for the objection surprised me still more. It was "lack of information," to use the words of the gentleman from Maine. Sir, if he had read the proclamations of General Weyler, the captain-general of Cuba, he would have had all of the information desired. [Applause.] If General Grant, when made commander in chief of the Army in 1863, had issued such proclamations the whole civilized world would have stood aghast in horror. Every nation on the face of Christendom would have at once recognized the Confederacy, and very justly, for war against humanity is war against the world.

I will not compare Captain-General Weyler with the Duke of Alva, nor will I even compare him with Balmaceda, the Butcher, his superior officer when Cespedes was President of Cuba. I will not call him a wolf, as he was termed in the Senate the other day, but I do aver that he is a gila monster of despotism, poisoning with its breath the atmosphere of American civilization. [Prolonged applause.] The speech of Senator SHERMAN last week furnishes full particulars for this characterization.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I thought I was to have another minute.

Mr. TUCKER. I yield another minute to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for an extension of time for five minutes.

Mr. CUMMINGS. One minute is enough. Now, another word in reply to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER].

To-day the Cuban patriots hold more ground in Cuba in proportion to the size of the countries than the Confederacy held one year after the firing on Fort Sumter. In one year they have overrun and acquired more ground than the Southern Confederacy acquired in the whole term of its existence. I say, further, that if Gen. John C. Breckinridge and Gen. Jubal Early had maintained their positions around Washington as long as the Maceos and Maximo Gomez have maintained their positions around the city of Habana the prospects of the Confederacy would have been much brighter than they were after the battle of Bull Run. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, Spain was the second power in Europe to recognize the Southern Confederacy as belligerent. She did it forty days before a single battle had been fought. It is high time that she took some of her own medicine. The rebellion which began at Yara years ago was never subdued under the sword. It was compromised under a promise of autonomy. That promise was broken by the Spaniards. Martinez Campos is right. The present uprising of patriots is the legitimate result of the violation of that contract. Cuba must and shall be free.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TUCKER. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL].

Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts. I yield to no one in my sympathy for the struggling Cubans, but it seems to me that we should take counsel to-day, not of our sympathies, but of our judgment, and that in the consideration of this matter we should not start out with all the haste and enthusiasm of a lynching party on a pathway that may eventually lead our country to war. When some gentleman, not a member of the committee, on last Thursday asked unanimous consent for immediate consideration, on the ground that it would only take two minutes to pass the bill, I objected. I did not think then, and I do not think now, that so grave and delicate a matter should lack anything of deliberation and care.

It may count for nothing that there are many American citizens in the Island of Cuba; it may count for nothing that they have millions of dollars invested in that island; it may count for nothing that our business men have been overwhelmed with burdens, almost crucified, during the last few years, and can illy bear any additional thrusts, but it seems to me that the Committee on Foreign Affairs, as friends to the Cubans, should have given to this House, if we are going to usurp an executive function, some more detailed and definite information of what we are doing and as to just what effect these resolutions will have on the people of Cuba.

I understand that the benefits that will be conferred on Cuba by recognition of her belligerency are very vague, and that Spain will derive advantages almost equally great, and while I do not say that I would oppose recognition, yet I think the committee should have given to the House more definite information as to just the situation that exists. We should have some of the facts that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who is chairman of the subcommittee, said he would like to have an hour to give the House. Unfortunately we are without them, and having neither jurisdiction nor knowledge, we are asked to take a hand in adjusting a grave and complicated international situation. I shall vote, therefore, against suspending the rule and considering the question under such conditions.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts may be permitted to proceed.

Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts. I do not desire a further extension of time.

Mr. QUIGG. There are many who desire to occupy the floor, but will be unable to get any time, and in justice to all I must object to further extension.

Mr. TUCKER. I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] to make a statement.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I shall occupy the floor the short time that has been accorded to me not for the purpose of expressing any views of my own upon the subject, although I wish to say that I concur heartily in every word the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] has so well expressed.

But, sir, my only purpose is to execute a commission intrusted to me by one of my colleagues, Mr. DRAPER, a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. He is unavoidably detained from the House to-day by a force the urgency of which will not be denied. He imposed on me the duty of stating to the House and placing upon record his unalterable opposition to the resolution that is now pending before the House. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, a word more, if I may be permitted to say it. I trust that those who vote against this question now pending will not be understood to be voting against the consideration of the resolution or the adoption of the resolution, but only against the adoption of the resolution without consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. TUCKER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] has already generously given away so much of his time that I am sure what remains is insufficient for his own purpose. I therefore thank him for his courtesy, but decline to take advantage of it and yield him back the time. [Applause.]

Mr. HITT. How much time is remaining?

The SPEAKER. Eleven minutes.

Mr. HITT. How much time remains to the affirmative?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has six minutes.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, as the sole member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs present who opposes these resolutions before this House, I feel "like one who treads alone some banquet hall deserted"; but I am not to be deterred, because of the unanimity of the sentiment expressed by my brethren upon the committee, from expressing my honest sentiments of the dangerous character of the resolutions.

As I understand, Mr. Speaker, one of the fundamental principles which has governed our actions since the formation of the Government, sanctioned and approved by all of the fathers of the Republic from Washington down to the present, is that of noninterference in the domestic concerns of other nations. I am not to be led away from those principles upon which this Government has rested for a hundred years by feelings of sympathy for those who may be suffering in the cause of liberty.

Such a cause appeals to my deepest sympathy and the warmest enthusiasm of my heart, and were I speaking as an individual, and not as a Representative, I would say, under all circumstances, Godspeed to any people that are seeking to free themselves from the yoke of tyranny; but my duty here is as a Representative in the Government of the United States, and I say it boldly, that unless the United States Government is to become "the wet nurse" for all the weak, puling governments of the New World and every band of struggling heroes upon whom the sun may chance to rise in any clime, this policy of interference must cease.

Sympathy is cheap. Sympathy which can respond in tears at any bidding is indeed beautiful; but sympathy which puts its hand in its own pocket and fills the coffers of the lean exchequer of struggling patriots, while not so beautiful, is far more beneficial in its effect; and while I admit that the feeling for Cuba in its struggle for independence excites the deepest sympathy and the broadest patriotism in the breasts of our people (in which I deeply sympathize), yet it can not be denied that behind this movement the eager eye of conquest looks to the day when Cuba will not only be free from the dominion of Spain, but will in fact be incorporated among the States of the Federal Union. Such a policy I am utterly opposed to. Nor will it be denied that the passage of these resolutions to-day is looked forward to by a large class of people in this country because they believe and hope that such action will result in war. Both of these propositions I am unalterably opposed to.

Why, Mr. Speaker, it strikes me that this country, this House, this Congress, without disrespect to to my honorable colleagues, has lost its head. What for? In the glorious cause of freedom. What is this second resolution? It is one which, if presented to Great Britain to-day in behalf of that great struggling Irish people who have been endeavoring for years to secure local self-government—if presented to Great Britain to-day in their behalf would be justly considered by her an affront. What do we say in this resolution? Hear it. We say:

> That Congress deplores the destruction of life and property caused by the war now waging in that island, and believing that the only permanent solution of the contest, equally in the interest of Spain, the people of Cuba, and other nations.

That is, we believe that Spain thinks, and that the other nations of the earth think, that the adoption of a certain policy in Cuba would be to their interest. Well, now, it seems to me other nations might prefer to do their own thinking on this subject and pass their own resolutions expressing their own sentiments. Here we are putting into the mouths of all of the nations of the world our opinion of what they think about the condition of things in Cuba. Can it be possible that the United States has become the custodian of the national thought of foreign countries, to be expressed by us whenever occasion demands it? What else? Continuing, it says—would be the establishment of a government by the choice of the people of Cuba, it is the sense of Congress that the Government of the United States should use its good offices and friendly influence to that end.

Where is the man in this great assembly that would not love to see a republic established in Cuba? Theoretically that is correct; but under international principles it is wrong to attempt to dictate it. It expresses the burning hope of every man who believes in a republican form of government; but what right have we to dictate to foreign countries with whom we are on friendly terms what sort of government they shall have?

Our political history abounds in a long line of uniform and unvarying opinions of the greatest leaders of political thought in our country sanctioning my position. I give only a few which are at hand.

Mr. Van Buren, Secretary of State, to Mr. Butler, October 16, 1829:

One of the settled principles of the Government is that of noninterference in the domestic concerns of nations; and as it would not tolerate it in others, so must every act of its own functionaries which might be construed into a departure from this principle incur the decided disapprobation of the President.

Mr. Webster, Secretary of State, to Mr. Everett, January 29, 1842:

The great communities of the world are regarded as wholly independent, each entitled to maintain its own system of law and government, while all in their mutual intercourse are understood to submit to the established rules and principles governing such intercourse. And the perfecting of this system of communication among nations requires the strictest application to the doctrine of nonintervention of any with the domestic concerns of others.

Mr. Seward, Secretary of State, to Mr. Adams, November 30, 1863:

Pursuing this course, the United States leave to the Government and people of every foreign State the exclusive settlement of their own affairs and the exclusive enjoyment of their own institutions. Whatever may be thought by other nations of this policy, it seems to the undersigned to be in strict conformity with those prudential principles of international law—that nations are equal in their independence and sovereignty, and that each individual State is bound to do unto all other States just what it reasonably expects those States to do unto itself.

More than that, Mr. Speaker, the remarks of my honored friend, the ex chairman of this committee [Mr. McCREARY], the remarks of my friends who sit on my right, and indeed all the discussion on the other side, show that if Spain does not give to the Cuban patriots a government of their own, based upon the choice of the people, then the United States is to give it to them by force of arms. That is the real meaning of this resolution, and I am utterly opposed to it.

Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the third resolution.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. TUCKER. Yes.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I simply desire to state that the gentleman has misconstrued my remarks. That is not the position I take.

Mr. TUCKER. I felt sure my friend would disclaim it, but certainly his remarks justified such criticism. Why, Mr. Speaker, I am like the gentleman from Maine, my calm and dispassionate friend Mr. BOUTELLE, in one respect at least. I am against war in this country to-day. I am for peace on any terms except with dishonor, and for war for any cause where the honor and welfare of my country is at stake. But there is no such condition here.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman a question. I think he said a while ago he did not object to the third resolution.

Mr. TUCKER. I did so state.

Mr. MILES. Now, I find that this third resolution recites that the present war is entailing losses upon the people of the United States. I should like to ask the gentleman as a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee if that committee has any evidence that direct loss is being sustained by reason of this war by the people of the United States?

Mr. TUCKER. I agree with the suggestion of the chairman of the committee [Mr. HITT] that many of our citizens have suffered heavy losses, and wherever an American in foreign countries is subjected to loss in his property or personal rights it is the duty of the American people and the American Congress to sustain him in his rights to the last degree.

Mr. Speaker, our people are not for war. I see in these resolutions the occasion for it. The Southern people have had enough of war. They know what it is. For four years they endured and suffered as no other people ever did. These men, like the gallant soldier who sits before me, General WALKER, who fought the battles of his country as he thought right in time of war, are to-day successfully pursuing the peaceful avocations that have come to their hands. If the proper time comes they will spring to the support of this Government and defend it against any enemy; but against the uniform policy of our country from its foundation to-day we defiantly challenge Spain to war by these resolutions.

Our Southern country, from its conservative and homogeneous population, may well be termed "the balance wheel" of this Government. You gentlemen from the North and West of this great country have troubles in your local governments to which we are strangers. More than once in the past few years have you sought counsel and sympathy from our people, and looked with longing eyes upon the peaceful conditions which prevail in our section in contrast with your own. These troubles are ever recurring and are ever present with you. Added to these you are now invited to pass these resolutions in the midst of a session of Congress which should properly be devoted to the solution of the pressing questions of the day, and for which you were sent here, and asked to add to our manifold troubles at home the possibility of war abroad.

Let us seek rather to cure the ills we have than to fly to those we know not of. Is the country never to have a rest from the distracting fears of war? Are we, having just escaped collision with Great Britain, which stirred the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific until quiet was restored by the good sense of the people, to have a repetition of the same thing? Are we by these resolutions willing to throw the country into a state of agitation again over the possibility of foreign entanglements and foreign war, and thus destroy our business, our commerce, and our unbroken policy for a hundred years?

No, Mr. Speaker, our endeavor should be to cultivate peaceful rather than hostile relations with all foreign countries; to follow the teachings of the fathers as laid down by them from the foundation of the Government; to develop our own country, in the language of Mr. Calhoun, "by accretion and not by conquest," by masterly inactivity in foreign affairs. Our fathers were wise enough to see that the geographical position which we occupy, under the providence of God, should establish for us an international policy, free from foreign entanglements, for the protection of our commerce abroad and the protection of our citizens under the flag of our country wherever fortune or circumstance placed them in the world. If an abandonment of this principle is to come, and if, as the action of this Congress seems to indicate, that a new policy is to be inaugurated and that our country is to take her place at the diplomatic table of the world's nations, studying the devices and intricate problems of conquest, and our position is to be maintained only by the doubtful policy of the maintenance of "the balance of power," then indeed is our future mingled with doubt and the cherished hopes for our country to be ruthlessly shattered.

I speak for 20,000 brave Confederate soldiers who followed Lee and Jackson. They want peace.

But if peace should be hopeless, and justice denied,
And war's bloody vulture should flap his black pinions,
Then gladly to arms! while we hurl in our pride!
Defiance to tyrants and death to their minions,
And the cross of the South shall triumphantly wave,
To light us to freedom and glory again!

Mr. HITT rose.

Mr. MILES. I see the gentleman is about to take the floor. I would like to hear him answer for the benefit of a few of us the question I propounded to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, he who injures one threatens all. If civil liberty is defeated in Cuba, American freedom will lose an essential outpost.

Who are the Cuban patriots? Untitled children of the human race struggling for liberty. Who are the Cuban invaders? Descendants of the Spanish kings, whose records stain the pages of history and whose heritage is a heritage of rapacity, cruelty, and shame. If it be said that Spain has vested rights which as a nation we must respect, my answer is that the Cubans have inalienable rights which we as a free people can not ignore. Let us, then, on this occasion, fairly, fully, and fearlessly answer the question:

IS CUBA ENTITLED TO BELLIGERENT RIGHTS AS AGAINST SPAIN?

The right of belligerency involves two things: First, a question of fact, and next, a question of law. The question of fact relates to the actual strength of the revolutionary party. Insurgents become belligerents whenever they are beyond control. The establishment of a provisional government with a local capital is accepted generally as sufficient evidence of this strength. But it is very easy for a people to possess this strength without having established a fixed capital.

Such I conceive to be the present status of the patriots of Cuba. Their strength is to be measured by their numbers, their patriotism, and their endurance. That they constitute a majority of the people of Cuba may be inferred from the fact that the Spanish army can not be recruited from their ranks, but is for the most part imported from Spain. That this majority is overwhelming is apparent, because without allies they are able to hold out against these foreign soldiers not only for months but for years.

Their late struggle for liberty continued for a period of ten years. In their present one they have already entered upon the second year with no sign in the horizon that anything less than long years of bloodshed is before them. Nor can their patriotism be questioned. Their bitterest enemies have never claimed that their motives were venal. In the land where their fathers were buried, where their children were born, and where they hope to live and die, they have but one ambition, and that is to be free.

Themselves the tillers of the soil, they see the rich products of their industry carried beyond the seas to swell the extravagance of their idle rulers.

On the other hand, surrounded by their impoverished families, they have heard the story of downtrodden people who, by resisting tyrants, have achieved independence. They are not ignorant of the history of this Republic. The western winds that break upon their island home from our mountains and everglades are vocal with the songs of liberty. Every gorgeous sunset as it sinks below Habana and bathes in purple outlines the Florida coast reminds them of freedom's home and burns into their longing souls the hope that they too may be free. But their strength as belligerents is displayed beyond question in their wonderful endurance.

Being thoroughly acclimated, the change of seasons does not impair their efficiency, and they are quite able to execute in July the plans made in January.

Not so with their enemies. These unfortunate boys—for few of the Spanish soldiers have reached man's estate—gathered from their comfortable homes in Castile, Aragon, and Saragossa, are perishing of fever by tens of thousands on the plains of Cuba. The ravages of disease are a thousand fold more destructive than the peril of arms, and all this is against the invading army. Therefore the question of fact as to whether the patriots of Cuba are clothed with a strength that the de jure government can not control must be decided in the affirmative.

Let us now consider the second question, that of international law. And here let me say that for international law, with all of its imperfections, I have a profound respect. Its province thus far has been in adjusting national difficulties and distributing the spoils of wars. But its coming glory will far outshine its past, for it is to be the nucleus of that perfected international code which shall yet be administered "in the congress of nations, in the parliament of the world."

Although Grotius is called the father of international law, the fact remains that international law as we know it to-day has grown up with the last two or three centuries, and is the product of European monarchies. I call attention to this fact, not to disparage it, but to understand it. International law has had for its object the rights of empires, not the rights of man. The reason why this is so is because the nations which made the international law what it is were autocratic and not democratic nations. One of its leading principles has been that—

> He who has the power may take,
> And he may keep who can.

It was reserved for a democratic nation, as late as the present century, to amend this feature of international law. This was done by the President of the United States in 1823 in announcing that the further acquisition of territory in America under any pretense whatever by any foreign power would not be tolerated. The immediate effect of this decision was to call down upon this Republic the wrath of kings.

A ministerial French paper, The Paris Etoile, then said:

> Mr. Monroe prescribes to the potentates of Europe the conduct they are to pursue in certain circumstances if they do not want to incur his displeasure. Such is the prohibition which he issues against their ever thinking of any new colonization in the two Americas. Mr. Monroe is the temporary President of a Republic bounded on the south by the possessions of the King of Spain and on the north by those of the King of England. Its independence has only been acknowledged for forty years. By what title, then, are the two Americas to be under his immediate dependence from Hudson Bay to Cape Horn? * * *
> It was reserved for Mr. Monroe to show us a dictator armed with the right of sovereignty over the whole of the New World. According to the new system he would establish, it would not be permitted to Spain to make the least effort to reenter on the territory which for three centuries she has possessed. The King of Portugal, as the American papers have observed themselves, could not act as a sovereign and father without exposing himself to the wrath of Mr. Monroe. England would require his previous consent if it suited her interest to make any new military or political establishment in Canada or Nova Scotia. Mr. Monroe's message contains phrases directly hostile to the policy and ambition of the great powers of Europe. * * * Who is he, in short, who does not fear to compromise the existence of social order by declaring in the face of heaven that he will not recognize any difference between a government de facto and a government de jure?

To this no less a paper than the London Times of January 15, 1824, replies:

> A direct attempt is made by the Etoile to sever the Chief Magistrate of a powerful and enlightened nation from the body of a State which he represents. He is the acknowledged, the elected head and organ of a great sovereign people, one whose elevation cost his country neither a drop of blood, nor a widow's tear, nor the beggary of banishment, nor the persecution nor corruption of a single human being among 10,000,000 men. An eminence thus achieved may well appear at first sight of questionable origin to an ultra, but let him consider his words. He calls Mr. Monroe a temporary President, but is the power which he exercises a temporary power? It is, on the contrary, a prerogative which never dies, let he who will be its trustee for the moment, and which, as Mr. Monroe has on this occasion employed it, has its sanction in the hearts of every citizen among those millions who confided it to his hands. Will the Etoile venture to match the durability of any despotic throne in Europe with that of the President's chair in North America? If so, we tell him he is likely to lose his wager.

This brief historical record, to which I have called attention, is full of interest. In the first place it fairly illustrates the evolution of international law.

President Monroe can be justified on no other ground than that international law has its true source in natural justice, and that its ultimate object is the rights of man. From the standpoint of monarchs he was a dictator; but from the standpoint of humanity he was a beneficent lawgiver. And the time will surely come, and its light already flecks the eastern horizon, when international law will be interpreted and applied, not to uphold autocratic government, but to secure to mankind its inalienable rights.

The attention of the world has been long engaged with what is known as the Eastern question. In this question is involved the destiny of certain religions and empires. But the locality of its origin, the field of its operations, and its ultimate destiny is the Old World. That question has never embraced the fundamental problem—the rights of man. Indeed, by a new question, to which I now call attention, it would be wholly invalidated. For the rights of man, were they recognized, would discrown every king, level every throne, and emancipate every subject in Europe and Asia.

In this new question, which henceforth will be known to statesmanship as the Western question, is wrapped up, not the balancing of power, which keeps kings on their thrones and aristocrats in the possession of their revenues, but that grander object—the inalienable rights of man.

Planted in the New World by the Pilgrim and the Cavalier, it has taken root in the two Americas, and is to-day a majestic tree whose sheltering branches shall yet extend from Baffins Bay to Magellan Strait, and whose fruit and fragrance shall enrich a continent. The Monroe doctrine suggests, but does not state fully, the Western question. It was the rights of man and not the vested rights of England or France or Spain that led up to the Monroe doctrine. The Western question is all that the Monroe doctrine implies, and much more. It not only forbids further foreign acquisition of American territory, but it prohibits the exchange between foreign powers of American territory. It would not allow England to purchase Cuba of Spain. Nor does the Western question admit the indefeasible title of kings to any part of the Western Hemisphere. It proclaims one law from pole to pole, and from ocean to ocean, and that law is "that no power is just that is not derived from the people."

In the light of this law, we are to interpret the law of nations when applied to American affairs. The rights of mankind being paramount on this continent, any protest of the people against autocratic rule, whether in Guiana, in Cuba, in Canada, or elsewhere, is to be regarded as a revolution and not as a rebellion.

In the light of this Western question all neutrality laws are to be interpreted. The unquestioned majority of the people of any State of America, freely expressed in armed resistance to monarchy, entitles them to belligerent rights. The necessity for a provisional government need not be a condition precedent for the rights of freemen to contend against tyrants. A military camp fire around which the majority of the people have gathered with their wives and children and staked all for human freedom is all that honor demands, all that justice requires, all that the heart and conscience of civilization exacts.

The Western question will not permit the foreign subjugation of any American State where a majority of the people desire to substitute a free for an autocratic government. This does not violate international law, but interprets it according to basic principles and in harmony with the international sentiment of mankind.

The Western question affirms that monarchy in America has no rights beyond those freely conceded by the majority of its resident subjects. A foreign power which, by misrule and oppression, has alienated a majority of its subjects has lost the only title to rule that ever has been or ever will be conceded on American soil. When that title is once lost, as it has been in Cuba, any attempt to subdue the people does not differ in principle from an invasion, and its triumph by the aid of foreign troops is nothing less than a foreign conquest. The Monroe doctrine, therefore, carried to its last analysis regards the presence of Spanish troops in Cuba under the present circumstances as hostile to the genius of American freedom, which it is the first duty of this Republic to defend. But as to the rights of Spain in Cuba I have something additional to say.

He who witnesses the departing glory of Spain can not fail to recognize the retributive justice of God. Her fertile plains, languishing for want of that art which once reached perfection in the gardens of Granada; her ports deserted where once the proud Armada defied the world; her nobility bankrupt, whose credit was once the strength of Europe; her chivalry baffled and defeated by the undisciplined militia of a distant and sparsely settled island; her brave yeomanry disheartened and indifferent, who once stood like a wall of fire against Scipio and Cæsar and all the crusaders of Europe; her provinces which once embraced a continent vanished and gone. For every wrong there comes a judgment day. There is but one God, one universe, one law, one humanity, and in one all-embracing system is held the constellations of the stars and the silent tears of human sorrow. After centuries of pitiless persecution and remorseless cruelty on two hemispheres, at last Spain, the inexorable judge, is brought to judgment.

Though the mills of God grind slowly,
Yet they grind exceeding small;
Though with patience He stands waiting,
With exactness grinds He all.

The crimes of Spain—who shall catalogue them? As we turn the pages of history, what unutterable horrors are revealed in the blazing Quemadéro! The hidden enemy; the secret denunciator; the sudden arrest; the unknown dungeon; the hideous torture; the pitiless judge; the cruel execution, and the sacerdotal robbery of widows and orphans. All this under the reign of Spanish kings is unparalleled in the history of human infamy, barbarous or savage.

But Spanish misrule was not confined to the shadows of the Pyrenees. It traversed the ocean and spread devastation in the rude homes of the unsuspecting children of the forests. From Mexico to Peru its rapacity knew no bounds; its cruelty no mercy. With the glories of Andalusia also perished the rights of man on the banks of the Tagus and the Ebro. Once the home of civil and religious liberty, the abode of art, and the seat of useful learning, Spain is to-day the sepulcher of original thought and the grave of civil and religious liberty. That land so favored by nature, where the foundations of modern science were laid deep and broad by giant intellects, is to-day a vast doctor's commons, where all knowledge has degenerated into Latin substantives and ritualistic mummery, and where true courage has given place to a debased brutality, which finds its natural expression in the heartless cruelties of the bull fight, in the merciless proclamation of the bloodthirsty Weyler.

Against the common people of Spain—against real Spain—I have not intended to express other than my highest admiration and respect. The noble race which gave to philosophy a Marcus Aurelius, to learning a Cervantes, and to valor a Trágan, needs no eulogy at my hands. The dauntless yeomanry that fearlessly stood before the armies of Rome and turned back the Crusaders of Europe has indeed reserved for it a glorious future, when in the fullness of time the people of Castile and Aragon shall place a new star in the constellation of the free states of the world.

The Monroe doctrine was doubtless, at the time it was announced, a sufficient expression of the Western question. But seventy years has wrought many changes. The duties of a nation, like those of an individual, are to be measured by its power. The United States in 1823 was far from being a nation of first rank. The population then, less than 10,000,000, was for the most part confined to the territory east of the Mississippi, and to the Atlantic and Gulf States. With no army or navy, surrounded on the north by Great Britain, on the south by Spain, it was indeed a bold stand for the infant Republic at that time to declare to the proud monarchies of Europe that the further acquisition of American territory by them would not be tolerated.

If this stand by our brave ancestors in the interest of civil liberty was not a violation of international law in 1823, is it not clear that in 1896, with increased power and a correspondingly increased responsibility, which is forever pledged to the cause of civil liberty, it is our duty to give full adherence to that principle of which the Monroe doctrine was but a partial expression?

In this question is involved a great national responsibility. It is written by the finger of God in the constitution of things that "no nation can live to itself alone." The law of life is the law of progress. There is no dead point of rest in a successful career. When progress ceases, disintegration begins, and disintegration is death. The cause of liberty is the cause of humanity. There is an irrepressible conflict between freedom and oppression. This continent can not be half free and half enslaved. In the Old World monarchy dominates; in the New World, liberty.

The Monroe doctrine must be enlarged. The flower of liberty must be vivified by the rays of sympathy wherever it grows, from the wintry skies of Canada to the plains of Cuba.

In the largest sense the patriots of Cuba are the wards of this Republic. It is to be hoped that President Cleveland will be equal to the great occasion. May the sun of liberty now rising in Cuban skies glow in his brain and burn in his heart! Let him send to Congress a message which shall be at once the apotheosis of the Monroe doctrine, the citadel of American liberty, and the death-knell of tyranny on the Western Hemisphere. Let it be clear, concise, and conclusive. Let it go ringing around the world, heard and known of all men. Let him say the Republic of the United States will not regard with indifference the presence in America of the armies of kings contending against the soldiers of civil liberty.

Let him say these words and a million men will spring to arms if necessary to vindicate them. Let him say these words and the clear blue waters of the Caribbean Sea will clasp to its loving embrace every war ship that flies the Stars and Stripes. Let him say these words and a new glory shall envelop the Presidential Mansion like that which shone forth when the noble Lincoln signed the Proclamation of Emancipation. Let him say these words and another expedition will soon cross the Atlantic. It will not, as of old, leave the harbor of Palos to bear to a new world the seeds of oppression and misrule; but out from Habana, amidst the booming of cannon, the waving of flags, and the shouts of a free people, with its prow set to the east, it shall bear the last survivors of the Spanish Kings back to the throne they have dishonored, to the people they have outraged and betrayed.

Gentlemen warn us that Spain will not abide by the Western question and that in the contest that will follow she will not be without allies and that war, with all of its disasters and horrors, will be upon us. Who, let me ask, will be the allies of Spain? Will the right of France to Guadeloupe and Martinique be imperiled? Not at all; for France is already a Republic and the people of those islands will have no occasion to raise the issue of civil liberty. Will the right of England to the Bahamas, to Jamaica, to Trinidad, to Guiana, or to Canada be imperiled? Not at all; for the subjects of Great Britain in America enjoy the blessings of civil liberty, made doubly secure, as they believe, by their loyalty to the mistress of the seas. Neither Russia, nor Germany, nor Austria have American possessions to defend.

On the other hand, the allies of this Republic will rally from the four quarters of the globe in sympathy with our contention. First of all, this hemisphere will a be unit for freedom. Every Repbulic of South and Central America will send its quota of volunteers to swell the army of liberty. But more than this, the heart of humanity everywhere will beat for us. The common people of the whole earth—the disbanded armies of Japan and China, the homeless exiles of Armenia, the rank and file of Russia, the thinkers and toilers of Germany and Austria, the peasantry of France and of England, and Spain itself and the dwellers on the banks of the Liffey and the Tweed and the mountaineers of Scandinavia will make the welkin wring with the shouts of joy when the vulture of the centuries shall drop from its talons the bleeding lamb of Cuba.

But the United States need no allies in a contest with Spain. We are not, as a people, wholly ignorant of the art of war. Our training school had a continent for its operations, and the full collegiate course of four years for our graduation. During this period we mastered the manual of arms, the directing of artillery, the maneuvering of cavalry, the sinking of Merrimacs. In this school of practice we were known, for convenience sake, as the blue and the gray. The affairs at Gettysburg, at Chickamauga, and Chancellorsville, were as spirited as it was possible in the absence of a venal foe, for we had no Valmaseda or Weyler afield.

But when the blue and the gray shall be blended into one vast army, flying the banner of freedom, keeping step to the heartbeat of humanity, and moving upon the last contingency of despotism—the jailers of the sixteenth and the brutal tyrants of the nineteenth century—believe me, their advance will be irresistible, and their victory the grandest in the annals of time, because it will be the final triumph of right over wrong.

They tell us that the right of belligerency will offend the Spanish Throne. What is the right of belligerency, but the right of man to contend for inborn rights? If Spain were not deceived with the leprosy of inhumanity, she would anticipate the action of the civilized world and freely concede this right to her subjects.

What sort of offense, then, will it be if this nation enforces an obvious duty? None at all; and Spain herself, when her delirium of madness is over, will bless our Republic for its good offices in this behalf.

The message of President Monroe stopped with the rights of territory. President Cleveland should deal with the rights of man. Fire and sword and torture must be no longer imported from Europe to America. Monarchy must hold its possessions in America through law and justice and equity or abandon them. President Monroe declared no new territory should be conquered. Let it now be declared that no old territory shall be reconquered. One is as sound international law as the other, and both are essential to western civilization. Great is the responsibility, but grand is the opportunity. Cuba is our Armenia. She is the one who went down from Jerusalem to Jericho and fell among thieves, stripped of her raiment, bleeding and dying; and the priests and Levites of international law shake their heads and make long speeches and look wise and pass by on the other side; but the genius of civil liberty is the Good Samaritan who journeyed that way and had compassion and bound up her wounds and gave her oil and wine and money, and brought her to an inn and took care of her. And Jesus said of these three—the priest, the Levite, and Samaritan—he was the neighbor who bestowed mercy, "Go and do thou likewise."

I know not what conclusion others may have reached, but for myself, because it is essential to civil liberty that all the people of this continent should be free, because the landing of foreign troops on American soil retards the manifest destiny of our free institutions, because the citizens of Cuba are in possession of three-fourths of its territory and overwhelmingly adverse to Spanish rule, and because of all the tottering thrones of earth that of the Spanish kings is the most intolerable and the most underserving. I am now ready to cast my vote, not only to grant belligerent rights to the patriots of Cuba, but to prohibit the landing of further troops from Spain on Cuban soil. [Applause.]

Mr. HITT. I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, it had been my intention to ask the gentleman from Maine a few questions; but having the floor in my own right I desire to put my case differently. It is well known, Mr. Speaker, that I am a naturalized citizen of this Republic.

A MEMBER. Mr. Speaker, there is so much confusion that it is impossible to hear.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend a moment. Gentlemen will please cease conversation.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that it is well known, especially to the members of the last Congress, that I am a naturalized citizen of this Republic; but as such I wish to say to this House that I am a good enough American to believe in what ought to be an American truism—that the slave who attempts to break his chains is always right. [Loud applause.] For that reason, Mr. Speaker, my sympathies go out to the people of Cuba who are struggling, like our ancestors, for liberty and independence. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I have four minutes, I believe.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has four minutes.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to first express the ready sympathy I feel with the sentiments expressed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] in appreciation of the gravity of the hour. This was felt in the discharge of the duty of preparing the propositions now submitted to the House, which have been under consideration for two months. The gentleman from Maine seems to think that we are on the brink of war—that this is a declaration that approaches war. He is wide of the purpose and effect of our action. The gentleman from Georgia spoke of the recognition of Texas in the insurrection in 1836 as one occasion where there was extensive war and we had ground for recognition.

When the recognition of Texas took place in 1836, Yoakum's History states that there were only 700 armed men on the side of Texas. The whole population was not half the army of the Cubans. Nearly six months ago the reports that lie before me—official reports—show that there were 35,000 men in arms defending that insurgent governmental organization, which is a powerful armed force, not altogether a government according to the notions of some nice lawyers, but a great armed political movement, as Wheaton said, has been formed; a powerful movement, which is belligerent, which is war, and which is entitled to recognition.

The gentleman spoke of the apprehension that it would bring on speedy hostilities. If he reads the resolutions with care he will see what is the opinion of men whose province it is to deal with this question—that there is no ground to apprehend that they will be received in such a spirit, for they plainly are not meant in such terms. They are a distinct vindication of our rights; they are the expression of our duties. We are not seeking war, nor is the Government of Spain. I hold in my hands a telegram I have received from the Secretary of State while this debate has been progressing. It shows how utterly unlikely it is that attempt will be made to turn these resolutions into a pretext for war.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, March 2, 1896.

Hon. ROBERT R. HITT:

I have received a dispatch from Taylor, the United States minister at Madrid, which I think yourself and your committee and members of the House generally should know, as follows:

"Minister of state has just called to express deep regret that mob has insulted Barcelona consulate, breaking windows, and offered complete reparation. He informs me that Government, on its own motion, has taken every precaution to guard legation and my residence. I have asked no protection."

OLNEY.

Mr. BOUTELLE. May I ask my friend from Illinois whether the impression made upon his mind by that dispatch which he has just read is not one that would suggest grave consideration and the avoidance of hasty action on our part in taking a course that would provoke hostilities with a nation which manifests so strong a desire to dwell with us in amity and peace? [Applause.]

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, that is what I have been trying to express, and these resolutions, carefully drawn as they are, can not bring any consequences that we shall have cause to regret. They are important—yes; say here just how we are willing to do our duty; but they are not bluster. They can not bring any such consequences as some gentlemen anticipate. Our amendment of the action of the Senate, which bluntly proposes to ask Spain to separate from a part of its territory, is wisely, prudently, and conservatively made. The right of search is the feature that every diplomat regards as the dangerous and explosive element. That comes in consequence of the right of search given to Spain by the treaty of 1795 in case we recognize the belligerency of Cuba. If she chooses to exercise it in a heated, insolent, and irritating manner, it may bring on, as General Grant feared in 1875, "perilous collisions." But I have shown by the telegram just read that the Spanish Government is not seeking a quarrel with us; we have no complaint to make of it, and the duty that we lay down for ourselves in these resolutions of urging a government the choice of the Cubans, is plainly such as can be considered by Spain in a friendly spirit.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] spoke with much ardor of our meddling in the affairs of other nations and of the resentment that would be excited if we should address Great Britain in this way. Sir, we did address this very Government of Spain in this way some years ago, in 1878, and our suggestion was received favorably and acted upon. It was upon our suggestion that accommodation was made, with antonomy promised, and the peace of Zampon was made. That rebellion was ended by an agreement which has been since violated. Spain promised to give the Cubans their autonomy and to allow the revenues of the country in fair proportion to be expended in the country; all of which was disregarded, so that the people, wronged and outraged, have arisen in rebellion again.

Now, sir, when those people can obtain a government such as was promised them at that time on the suggestion of our Government, the free choice of the people of Cuba, we shall have a solution of this problem which will bring peace and prosperity to that island, and we shall have done our duty when we propose it and use our influence to secure it.

I am aware of the strong feeling of sympathy for men struggling for liberty which has been alluded to here and which has been reproachfully spoken of as "sentimental." I have carefully avoided such appeals, deeply as I abhor the cruelties of Weyler and long to see a struggling people free. I have spoken only of those considerations which relate to our interests and our plain duty. I know the loathing the American people have for tyranny and cruelty, but in this whole matter I have gone with as sober steps as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] himself could have wished.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BLACK of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLACK of Georgia. Will the Speaker please state exactly the proposition upon which we are called to vote?

The SPEAKER. The proposition is to discharge the Committee on Foreign Affairs from further consideration of the Senate resolutions relating to this subject-matter, to substitute the resolutions which have been reported from the House committee, and to pass the same.

Mr. BLACK of Georgia. Another inquiry. Are we to vote first on adopting the proposition of the House committee as a substitute for the Senate proposition and then to vote again on the main question?

The SPEAKER. No; it is one single proposition.

Mr. BLACK of Georgia. Are not the resolutions susceptible of division?

The SPEAKER. They are not, except in the debate which has been had.

Mr. BLACK of Georgia. I mean on the vote.

The SPEAKER. The proposition does not admit of division. It is a single proposition.

Mr. BLACK of Georgia. Nor of amendment?

The SPEAKER. Nor of amendment.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Under a motion to suspend the rules is a motion to recommit in order at any time?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOODY. If this motion should not prevail would the subsequent consideration and adoption of these resolutions be possible under the rules of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would prefer to decide that question when it arises. [Laughter.] If there be no objection, the Clerk will again read the resolutions proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, after which the Chair will put the matter to a vote.

The Clerk again read the resolutions called up by Mr. HITT, as above.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the resolutions.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we may have a separate vote on each resolution.

Mr. QUIGG. I shall object to that.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The question is on agreeing to the motion to suspend the rules and pass the resolutions.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 262, nays 17, not voting 76; as follows:

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the motion of Mr. HITT to suspend the rules and adopt the Senate resolutions with an amendment in the form of a substitute was agreed to.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. KULP, who is detained from the House by sickness, would, if present, vote "aye."

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. SPERRY, is confined to his bed by sickness. If present, he would vote "aye."

The following pairs were announced:

On this vote:

Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. DRAPER.

Mr. LOUD with Mr. KYLE.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated, and was greeted with loud applause.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. PAYNE in the chair, and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6248) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to return now to the amendment offered on Saturday last by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON].

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose on last Saturday, it was with the understanding that today we should recur to the section relative to the Territory of New Mexico, for the purpose of considering the amendment offered by the Delegate from that Territory. The point of order which I then reserved I now withdraw.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to renew the point of order as to a part of the amendment. After consultation with the minority members of the Committee on Territories, I make a point of order upon all of this amendment except the first and last paragraphs. The remaining portion of the amendment will then read:

Provided, That the next session of the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico shall commence on the first Monday in May, 1897, and each succeeding session thereof shall commence on the first Monday in May of every odd-numbered year thereafter. Provided further, That no other officer of either house of said legislative assembly shall be elected or appointed or paid out of any moneys appropriated by the Congress of the United States or by the legislative assembly of said Territory than such as may be provided for by the laws of the United States.

Mr. CATRON. I concede that the point of order is well taken as to the portions of the amendment to which it now applies, as those provisions contemplate a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will report the amendment as it now stands, after striking out the clauses upon which the point of order has been sustained.

The amendment in its modified form was read and agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. By direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, and in pursuance of the order adopted by the House on Saturday last, I now offer as sections 7 to 23, inclusive, of this bill the provisions embraced in House bill No. 6654.

The CHAIRMAN. At what point in the bill does the gentleman desire this amendment to be inserted?

Mr. HENDERSON. After section 6, the last section of the bill as it now stands.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the repealing clause.

Mr. HENDERSON. We want that clause to stand.

The CHAIRMAN. Then this amendment will come in after the repealing clause?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Under the order adopted on Saturday last, will the measure which the gentleman now presents be offered and considered as an amendment in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HENDERSON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And it will be considered by paragraphs?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, sir.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first formal reading of this bill be dispensed with, and that we proceed at once to read it by sections for the consideration of the same. Pending that, however, I wish to make a motion that the general debate be had upon the bill now, and I will turn the control of the bill over to my colleague, Judge UPDEGRAFF, the chairman of the subcommittee, who has had charge of the matter in the committee. I wanted to make the request, however, to enter upon the general debate now.

Mr. MCRAE. I do not object to dispensing with the reading of the bill. I thought the gentleman wanted to dispense with the general debate.

Mr. HENDERSON. My request is—and I will restate it to avoid all misunderstanding—that after the general debate we proceed to read the bill by sections for amendment, and that, I ask now unanimous consent, shall be the order.

Mr. BAILEY. There is no objection on my part to the request of the gentleman from Iowa, but in order to avoid any trouble hereafter, let us see that we clearly understand each other. I do not understand that this bill is to be treated as one single amendment, but that we are to consider it paragraph by paragraph, and subject to germane amendments, of course.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is exactly my proposition. There are seventeen sections in the bill, let me state. There are six in the appropriation bill. This bill—the amendment bill—comes right after the sixth section of the appropriation bill.

Mr. BAILEY. I repeat that there will be no misunderstanding between the gentleman from Iowa and myself, but I wanted, out of abundant caution, none on the part of anybody.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is exactly my desire.

Mr. DALZELL. I have just come in, Mr. Chairman, and I wish to ask whether it is the purpose of the gentleman to allow general debate upon the amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. DALZELL. Has any time been fixed for the general debate?

Mr. HENDERSON. None as yet. The debate will run, I suppose, for a while.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will the gentleman state whether he expects the general debate to conclude to-night; and if so, whether it can not be understood that the consideration of the paragraphs of this amendment will not take place until the morning?

Mr. HENDERSON. I can not say. I do not know, of course, how long the committee will see fit to allow the general debate. We have plenty of time, and this is a matter of very much importance, as stated by the gentleman from Florida the other day. The committee has no desire to shut off the fullest discussion of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first formal reading of the amendment be dispensed with; that the committee proceed at once to the general debate upon it, and that after the close of the general debate it be read by sections for amendment and debate. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HENDERSON. I now yield to Judge UPDEGRAFF, the chairman of the subcommittee, who will take charge of the bill.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I will occupy as little time as I can consistently with my duty to the bill which has been placed, in a manner, under my charge.

What I wish to say will relate to business considerations. My remarks, therefore, will be uninteresting to anyone except he is interested in the provisions of the bill and the reforms which it proposes. The committee began the consideration of this subject at an early stage of the session. It will be remembered that when the urgent deficiency bill was before the House for consideration, a great outcry was made about the enormous sums therein appropriated for the maintenance of the Federal courts; that some reproach was cast upon the Committee on the Judiciary because it had not, before that time, introduced a bill to effect the abolition of the fee system, and to enact legislation providing for salaries for officers of the Federal courts. It was then said that the House would be given an ample opportunity to effect the reform which at that time it so much desired. If I remember correctly the amount which the urgent deficiency bill appropriated was in the neighborhood of $1,000,000—or nine hundred and some odd thousand dollars—and it was found necessary afterwards, when it went to the Senate, to add about a quarter of a million dollars more in excess of the amount appropriated by the House of Representatives.

It is to remove these defects, to accomplish the reform that is so desired, that this bill has been framed. The Committee on the Judiciary have spared no pains and no labor to prepare a bill here that would effect the desired change, and at the same time not disturb the operations of the Government. This committee has spent upon this bill more hours than it has ever spent upon a bill before within my recollection. It has given to its preparation greater patience and greater labor than I have ever known to have been expended upon a bill, or ever heard of being expended upon a bill. We have gone to the Department of Justice, and the Department of Justice has come to us, and wherever we could we have followed the recommendations of the Department of Justice, maintaining of course our own opinion and our own views. The Department has been especially liberal and patient in giving us information. The Attorney-General has been with our committee for hours and hours at a time, patiently examining every provision of the bill, so that the arm of the Government might not be weakened.

One great difficulty which the committee encountered was to find a basis on which to fix the salaries of district attorneys and marshals for the future. It has before it a special report of the Attorney-General of the earnings of each district attorney and each marshal in the United States. That formed the first basis of the fixing of salaries, but we found on proceeding further that that could not be made the sole basis, for in many cases those returns were very largely padded, and in many cases enormous sums have been charged to the Government in these returns; so that, considering these returns, considering the amount of business transacted, and bearing in mind the advice of the Department of Justice as to special conditions, and our own knowledge as to special conditions, we have prepared the best schedule of salaries that the judgment of the committee could devise. It has cost us, as I have said, especial labor and patience for days and days. For scarcely a day has passed since within two weeks of the organization of this House that this matter has not been before the Committee on the Judiciary in some form.

Now, if the committee will bear with me, I will explain briefly the different sections of the bill. I want to say in the first place that the bill does not affect the Territory of Alaska or Indian Territory, for the reason that recent legislation has provided for the Federal courts in those Territories, and has fixed the salary system and abolished the fee system so far as those marshals and attorneys are concerned.

Another thing the bill does not do. It does not affect the office of the district attorney for the southern district of New York. That district, embracing the greatest port of entry in the United States, we considered under the advice of the Attorney-General, and after a review of the facts ascertained that office to be sui generis, and therefore we did not touch it.

Another grave and sufficient reason why the committee did not touch the district attorney's office in that district is this: That the laws relating to the district attorney's office of the southern district of New York have been revised by a special statute within a few years, and the salaries of district attorney and marshal are established by that law for that district.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. On what basis has the committee fixed the salaries of the several district attorneys throughout the United States?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I have stated that. In a general way the basis is the best judgment of the committee. In a more special way we have considered the earnings, as set forth in a document from the Attorney-General's Office. We have considered the amount of work done. We have used whatever knowledge we had or could obtain from the Department of Justice as to special conditions in individual cases. In that way we have fixed the salaries. I say that we do not undertake to affect the district attorney's office for the southern district of New York. The bill also does not affect the clerks of the circuit and district courts. Much as we desired to enter upon that, the committee, after careful consideration, decided that it was the part of wisdom not to provoke too many enemies at the same time. For those of us who were in the last Congress remember that when a bill fixing salaries was suggested there was a general outcry from the clerks of all the Federal courts all over the Union against the bill. We preferred to take the district attorneys, their assistants, the marshals, and their deputies first. I may say for the committee—I think I will say for myself at least, and I am sure I can say it for the committee—we are willing to enter upon the reform also so far as the clerks are concerned, and if this House will give us a hearing we will, before this Congress closes, bring in a bill that will cover the clerks also and apply to them the salary system instead of the fee system.

Section 2 of the bill fixes, by districts, the salaries of the district attorneys. Section 3 gives to the district attorneys their actual traveling expenses and their subsistence while absent from home, not exceeding $4 per day for subsistence. The third section provides for assistant attorneys and their appointment, subject to the approval of the Attorney-General.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question there?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. In the third section, which refers to the appointment of assistant district attorneys, it says:

Upon the recommendation of such judge and attorney.

Was it the intention of the committee to let the district judge unite with the district attorney in making the appointment of assistant attorneys, or simply to unite in making the recommendation of the necessity for the assistant district attorney?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. The language is plain. The language, as I remember, provides that on the recommendation of the judge and the district attorney, which recommendation shall state the facts upon which it is made, the Attorney-General shall have power to appoint an assistant. I think it is plain; and to my mind it needs no explanation.

Mr. SWANSON (reading)—

That whenever, in the opinion of the district judge and the district attorney, the public interest requires it, one or more district attorneys may be appointed by the Attorney-General, upon the written recommendation of such judge and attorney.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Ah!

Mr. SWANSON. This makes it imperative that they shall join in the recommendation before anybody shall be appointed.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. The committee had no intention to designate any man with the power of appointment in this case. The facts as to the necessity must be certified.

Mr. SWANSON. What I wanted to ascertain about it is, whether the appointment—as I understand the language—of the party named must be agreed to both by the district attorney and the district judge.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Oh, no.

Mr. SWANSON. That is the way I understand it. What I asked was in connection with the appointment of the assistant district attorneys. I understand, possibly, the intention of the committee was that the district attorney and the judge must concur in the necessity for the appointment of the assistant district attorney, but not to concur in the man to be appointed.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. SWANSON. This language makes it imperative that they shall concur in the recommendation of the man.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. As to the necessity.

Mr. SWANSON. Read line 21, section 3.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF (reading)—

Whenever, in the opinion of the district judge and the district attorney, the public interest requires it, one or more assistant district attorneys may be appointed by the Attorney-General—upon the written recommendation of such judge and attorney.

Mr. SWANSON (reading)—

The Attorney-General can not make any appointment. The district judge and the district attorney must concur in making the recommendation.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. That was not the intention.

Mr. SWANSON. That is what I think it does.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. If it is believed to be so, an amendment can be offered so as to make it plainer.

Mr. SWANSON. I want it to read, not—

Whenever, in the opinion of the district judge and the district attorney, the public interest requires it, one or more district attorneys may be appointed by the Attorney-General upon the written recommendation of such judge and attorney—but that the recommendation ought to be an opinion as to the necessity, and not joint action as to the appointment.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is what it is.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. That is it undoubtedly.

Section 3 also provides for the appointment of assistant district attorneys, whose salaries shall not exceed $2,500 per annum, and that they shall have expenses.

The fourth section fixes the salaries of marshals by districts.

The fifth section provides for the appointment of office deputies, the salaries to be fixed by the Attorney-General.

The sixth section provides for what is called "field marshals." I will say right here, and this perhaps is the most pertinent place, that the committee consented to this section with very great reluctance, because it was, in so far as it goes, an abandonment of the reform which the committee sought; but the limitation of the reform is so small and the necessity for it so absolute and so obvious that the committee consented to this species of deputies here, to be called "field deputies." In the first place, it is obvious that the appointment of these "field deputies" must be vested in the marshal. In cases of emergency he can not communicate with the Department of Justice for permission to appoint them. Therefore the bill gives him power in the first instance to appoint these marshals. The bill also requires him to report the appointment immediately to the Department of Justice, and that done, the Department of Justice may cancel such appointments at any time. These "field deputies" provided for in the bill are to be paid out of their fees. As I have said before, in respect to them we felt unable to entirely abolish the fee system. The Attorney-General, whose advice we sought in the matter, wrote to us in respect to them.

This is the special part of the letter of the Attorney-General to which I desire to call attention:

But the chief reason is the fear, which is justified by experience, that field deputies will not be zealous in endeavoring to arrest persons charged with crimes if they have to risk not only their compensation but also their expenses while engaged in the attempt.

One of the suggestions which will undoubtedly be put when the bill is upon its passage is whether there is any just reason to fear a relaxation in diligence on the part of the officers concerned by reason of the change made by this bill.

Unless this assurance of actual expenses while honestly engaged in attempting to arrest criminals is made I can not conscientiously say that the field deputies can be expected to display proper zeal.

The Attorney-General clearly states the reason for the departure from the general character of the bill in this section relating to "field deputies." It was found impossible and unsafe to rely upon salaries to stimulate their activity, and when the Attorney-General made the last examination of the bill——

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important amendment. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] is perfectly conversant with all its details, and his explanation is very clear and instructive, but the trouble is that at this late hour in the day there are comparatively few members present to hear him. I therefore suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill that he let this discussion go over until to-morrow.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. That will suit my convenience, Mr. Chairman, and I therefore move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. HENDERSON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration H. R. 6248, the legislative appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

WORLD'S COLUMBIAN COMMISSION MEDALS.

Mr. THURSTON. I am directed by the Select Committee on International Expositions, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 78) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to distribute the medals and diplomas awarded by the World's Columbian Commission to the exhibitors entitled thereto, to report it with an amendment in the form of a substitute and recommend its passage as amended, submitting a report thereon. I also request unanimous consent for its immediate consideration, and I will state the reasons therefor.

The joint resolution was introduced by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] for the purpose of providing for the further preparation and disposition of the medals and awards authorized by the Columbian Exposition legislation. The present force engaged in the preparation of those medals and diplomas is a special force, and unless this proposed legislation is had, and at once, that force will be discharged and dispersed, and it will be difficult without much greater expense than is now necessary to reestablish the force and proceed with the work.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution reported by him.

Mr. HALE. Let it be read first.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read for information.

Mr. THURSTON. The recommendation of the committee is to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert a substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. The committee report to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to distribute the medals and diplomas of the World's Columbian Exposition to the several exhibitors entitled thereto, as designated and certified by the report of the executive committee on awards to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and the Bureau of the Mint, and to this end the Secretary of the Treasury may adopt any method, or create any and all agencies which to him may seem proper and necessary for the distribution of said medals and diplomas. But in case any of the exhibitors can not be found who may be entitled to medals and diplomas, then, in every such case, such medals and diplomas shall be retained by the Secretary of the Treasury until they are called for by the exhibitors entitled thereto or by persons authorized to receive the same. And the said Secretary in the distribution of the medals and diplomas may transmit the same through the mails free of charge. And the sum of $15,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of carrying out this resolution, and for the purposes hereof the said Secretary may temporarily employ, under such regulations as he may prescribe, the force now engaged in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in connection with the preparation of said diplomas, or so much of said force as may be necessary, said appropriation to be immediately available.

Mr. THURSTON. The amendment as proposed by the committee is one drafted and presented to the committee by the Secretary of the Treasury. That is the reason why we modified the form of the original joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. HALE. I do not object. I did not hear the Senator state when he asked for its present consideration, but I gather from the reading of the joint resolution that what is wanted here in substance is some money with which to do the work. It does not provide for any new work, I understand, but is only to carry out and complete the work which was authorized by Congress, and for which the appropriation has been exhausted. Is that the case, I ask the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. THURSTON. That is the case.

Mr. SEWELL. I desire to state, as a member of the executive committee of awards, that the work in the Treasury Department under the act of Congress is practically finished. The filling in of the diplomas and the medals was such a class of work that the Bureau of Printing and Engraving had to organize a little bureau separate and distinct from the regular work that is being done there. The appropriation for this purpose is just about out; it will be exhausted in the next ten days; and therefore it is desired to have this joint resolution passed.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPUBLICAN FORM OF GOVERNMENT IN ALABAMA.

Mr. CHANDLER. I submit a report from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to which I call the attention of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. The committee direct me to report, with an amendment, the resolution introduced by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] on the 7th day of January last. I ask to have the resolution read as it will stand when amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution as proposed to be amended will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution as proposed to be amended, as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators shall be appointed to investigate the facts and circumstances of the election in the State of Alabama on the first Monday of August, 1894, resulting in the setting up of a State government, consisting of a governor and of a legislature which elected a United States Senator; and especially to inquire whether the election of said State government was accomplished by false and fictitious returns, or by other fraudulent or dishonest methods, or by violent practices; and if so, what were the nature and extent of the wrongs committed, and the character and motives of any conspiracy to commit the same; and also whether the Constitution and laws of the United States were in any way violated in connection with said election; and further, into all matters and things in any way injuriously affecting the political autonomy of said State, or now or at any time impairing or destroying the right of said State government to recognition as the lawful government, or the competency of said legislature to elect a United States Senator. Said committee may sit as a full committee or by subcommittees, as it may elect, and in vacation or during the sessions of Congress, and at such times and places in said State or elsewhere as it may see proper; and said committee, or any subcommittee, shall have power to send for persons and papers, employ a stenographer, swear and examine witnesses, take and report testimony and evidence; and said committee shall make due report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. CHANDLER. There will be submitted to-morrow, or on some subsequent day, a written report in favor of the adoption of the resolution as amended. There will also be a minority report submitted.

Mr. HILL. I call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the omission in the resolution of any statement as to how the committee is to be appointed. Is it the intention of the Senator not to allow the committee to be appointed in the usual way, by the President of the Senate?

Mr. CHANDLER. It was my intention to have the appointment made by the President pro tempore of the Senate, but I am now reminded by the Senator from New York that it would be well to leave that question open until the resolution is adopted.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator intended what he now says, I think we might as well correct it now.

Mr. CHANDLER. I intended that the resolution should provide for the appointment by the President of the Senate, but as the Senator from New York has made this suggestion, I will reserve that point.

Mr. HILL. I shall renew it later, then.

Mr. GRAY. Perhaps it is proper that I should say, on behalf of the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, that on the filing of the report by the majority in reference to the resolution they will submit in a report of their own their views in regard to the matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

And any additional issue of legal-tender notes to and by any national bank shall be secured in the same manner as the circulating notes of national banks are now secured.

LAKE MICHIGAN AND WABASH RIVER SHIP CANAL.

Mr. TURPIE introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 90) providing for the appointment of a commission, under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the preliminary survey, with plans, specifications, and approximate estimates of cost thereof, for the construction of a ship canal, of approved width and depth, from the lower shore of Lake Michigan to the Wabash River, and for the further investigation of the practicability of the construction of such waterway; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. TURPIE. I wish to state that a great number of people, residents in that section, contemplate a ship canal one terminus of which shall be the great harbor of Chicago, and which shall be navigable to the Wabash River and the larger rivers flowing to the Gulf by the way of the mouth of that river. It is proper also to say that there have been two surveys of the main line of this route, traversing the valley of the Kankakee, of the Tippecanoe, and the Wabash. One survey was made by Colonel Stansbury in 1832. The other was made by Major Gillespie in 1876. Both these surveys fulfilled all the requirements of science, and they are both of very great assistance in considering this joint resolution with respect to the profile of the surface of the land, the character of excavation, the fall which is sufficient from the lake to the head of navigation upon the Wabash, and the divide of the watershed between the waters flowing to the lakes and those flowing to the Gulf. But both surveys were made with reference to an ordinary canal, securing a depth of from 4½ to 5 feet of water. Therefore the estimate of the cost in these surveys, although very careful, is not applicable to the present project, and it is for that reason that the survey for a ship canal is provided for in the joint resolution.

The canal route itself runs through a portion of the country now very well settled between both termini, and in the next half century, perhaps, to be the most densely settled part of the Union west of the Alleghanies. It will afford in time of peace the cheapest and most direct route for the carriage of freight without breaking bulk from the lakes to the Gulf. In time of war it would afford a line for the transportation of provisions, munitions, and supplies wholly internal and altogether inaccessible to interruption by a foreign enemy.

For these reasons, I trust that the joint resolution may have early and favorable consideration by the Committee on Commerce, to whom I move that it be referred.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TURPIE. I also call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the two surveys, one made by Colonel Stansbury in 1832 and the later survey by Major Gillespie in 1876, embracing the main portions of this route, have now become very rare documents. There are only two of the old one in existence, one of which I have, and the number of the later survey is very small. I therefore ask that both of these surveys, respectively, be printed as documents, as there is now considerable request for them by citizens residing along the line of the contemplated waterway.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

R. 5359) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4 and 6.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"Provided, That hereafter no pay shall be retained, but this provision shall not apply to deductions authorized on account of the Soldiers' Home."

And the Senate agree to the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 54) authorizing the National Dredging Company to proceed with the work of dredging the channel of Mobile Harbor, under the direction of the Secretary of War, with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 4179) to amend section 3719 of the Revised Statutes;

A bill (H. R. 5564) authorizing the Arkansas Northwestern Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 6250) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River, in the county of Aitkin, State of Minnesota; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 108) directing the Secretary of War to submit estimates for work upon Newtown Creek, New York.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 3537) making appropriations for invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 43) authorizing and directing the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase and distribute seeds, bulbs, etc., as has been done in preceding years.

NEWTOWN CREEK (NEW YORK) IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. HILL. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the joint resolution from the House with reference to estimates for Newtown Creek, New York. I should like to have it acted upon.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 108) directing the Secretary of War to submit estimates for work upon Newtown Creek, New York, was read twice by its title.

Mr. HILL. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5161) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. ALLEN. Is the morning business disposed of?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has not yet called for the introduction of concurrent or other resolutions.

Mr. CULLOM. If it is not disposed of, when I get the bill up I will give way for anything of that kind.

Mr. ALLEN. I have no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. CULLOM. Before I yield for routine business, I ask that the ordinary rule in regard to dispensing with the formal reading of the appropriation bill be made, so that we can proceed to act upon the bill item by item.

Mr. COCKRELL. And that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations be acted upon as they are reached in the reading?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the course suggested by the Senator from Illinois? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CULLOM. I now yield to Senators who have morning business to present.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 4179) to amend section 3719 of the Revised Statutes was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 5564) authorizing the Arkansas Northwestern Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 6250) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River in the county of Aitkin, State of Minnesota, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BOND REDEMPTION AND BIMETALLISM.

Mr. ALLEN. I submit a resolution, for which I ask present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That under existing laws all bonds and legal-tender notes are redeemable in gold and silver coins of the United States, of the present ratio and fineness, and that any discrimination between such coins is in violation of the statutes of the United States and the traditions of the Government.

Resolved, That bimetallism means the unlimited coinage, at a ratio fixed by law, of both gold and silver into money of full debt-paying power and upon terms of exact equality, at the mints of the United States.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT. What became of the resolution?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. PLATT. We can not consider that resolution now.

Mr. HILL. Let it go over.

Mr. SHERMAN. It ought to be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being interposed, the resolution will go over under the rule.

HISTORY AND INDEX OF CLAIMS.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Claims be, and it hereby is, authorized to have compiled a history and index of the claims now in Congress and before that committee, together with a collection of the principal laws bearing upon claims against the Government.

NATIONAL DREDGING COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 54) authorizing the National Dredging Company to proceed with the work of dredging the channel of Mobile Harbor, under the direction of the Secretary of War; which was, in line 13, after the word "contract," to insert "shall be held to be due only after appropriation shall have been made therefor, and."

Mr. FRYE. I have examined that amendment, and I see no objection to it. On the contrary, I think it a very proper one; and I move that the Senate concur in it.

The motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL MEN FOR THE NAVY.

Mr. GORMAN. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. 1404) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to enlist additional men for service in the United States Navy, and for other purposes, was passed by the Senate yesterday, with a view to examining it and calling it up to-morrow.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—WAR IN CUBA.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call attention to a mistake in the Journal in respect to the action of the House of Representatives. I do so at the request of the Clerk of that House.

The resolution of the House of Representatives in respect to Cuba yesterday was adopted as a substitute for the Senate proposition upon the same subject. By some confusion, I suppose either of the Clerk of the House or the clerk who makes up the Journal there, they have omitted any reference to the Senate resolution. It is desired now to have that corrected on our Journal. I think that is all that is necessary to be done to make the Journal conform to the fact. The Journal clerk has explained the matter to me.

Mr. PLATT. I do not understand this matter. As I heard read the resolution which was presented from the House of Representatives it appeared to be the action of the House without reference to what the Senate had done. Will some Senator make it more clear?

Mr. LODGE. I will explain it, if the Senator from Connecticut will allow me. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the House of Representatives said:

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the rules be suspended, that the Committee on Foreign Affairs be discharged from further consideration of Senate concurrent resolutions in regard to the relations between the United States and Cuba, and that the resolutions which I sent to the desk be adopted by the House as a substitute therefor.

That was the motion agreed to by the House of Representatives, that their resolution should be substituted for ours. Owing to a mistake on the part of the Clerk of that House, which he has this morning asked to have corrected, the resolution appeared here as an independent proposition.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will allow me, here is the statement at the end of the vote as it appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the motion of Mr. HITT to suspend the rules and adopt the Senate resolutions with an amendment in the form of a substitute was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. That is a little more explicit than what I read. The resolution of the House of Representatives was passed as a substitute for our resolution. Therefore it comes over here as an amendment, and not as a concurrent resolution. The only request made by the Senator from Ohio is to correct the Journal in conformity with the fact.

Mr. PLATT. How does that fact appear? It seems to me the thing to be done is to send back the resolution which the House of Representatives sent over to us, and let that House make its own correction. We can not correct the record which the House has made.

Mr. LODGE. We are not attempting to correct their record; we are attempting to correct our own record, so that the record here shall be correct. The House record is correct. It was simply a mistake in the statement of the Clerk here. The House record is correct, and shows that their resolution was passed as a substitute or amendment for ours. Owing to the manner in which it was delivered here, that was not understood by us and we took the resolution as a new proposition, when, as a matter of fact, it was not a new proposition, but was an amendment to our proposition. Of course the difference in the parliamentary status is perfectly obvious, and the only thing for us to do is to make our record conform to the fact.

Mr. MILLS. What becomes of the resolution?

Mr. LODGE. It has gone to the Committee on Foreign Relations for action.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am in entire sympathy with the object of the Senator from Massachusetts, but I must say that it is dangerous for the Senate to undertake to correct a message from the House of Representatives without waiting for the House of Representatives to make the correction. The message in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD appears as follows:

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following concurrent resolution; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

I admit that a mistake has been made and that it ought to be corrected, but, as I have already said and now say in the hearing of the Senator from Massachusetts, while I am in entire sympathy with the object which he seeks to accomplish, it can not be accomplished, I submit, in this way. The Senate can not of its own motion correct a message of the House of Representatives.

Mr. PLATT. Or a mistake made by an officer of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Clerk of the House has made a mistake he can come here and correct it; if the House has made a mistake it can send over the correction; but it would be a most dangerous precedent for us to undertake, of our own motion, to correct a mistake which has come from the other House, and which must necessarily be the only basis for our action.

Mr. PLATT. As journalized—and I assume that our Journal clerk has stated the exact fact—it stands in this way:

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk:

Mr. President, the House of Representatives has passed the following resolution; in which it asks the concurrence of the Senate.

Then follows the resolutions which the House of Representatives passed. My point about it is, that this is entirely without reference to the subject-matter; that where an officer of the House comes here and makes a misstatement of the action of that House, we can not make the correction on our Journal. We can send the matter back or we can receive another message from the House showing that a mistake has been made. It seems to me that is the proper course to pursue.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I do not care to add anything to what has been said by the Senator from Connecticut, which is unquestionably correct. The parliamentary status is this: The Senate passed a concurrent resolution on a given subject and sent it to the House of Representatives, and the House, through its Clerk, has failed to return that resolution to the Senate, but instead has sent us a resolution of its own. It does not appear by the record that it is a substitute for the Senate resolution. It appears as an entirely independent resolution, and when it came here the Clerk of the House read the entire resolution, and it was afterwards again read by our Secretary. I called attention to the fact at the time, but there is no possible way for the record to be corrected unless the House of Representatives itself recognizes the mistake and sends to us another message correcting it.

Mr. GRAY. It seems to me there can be no two sides to this question. We have the information given to us by the House of Representatives, by their own appointed agent, that the record has been made over there in a certain way. We have no more right to change that record than one court of independent jurisdiction has a right to change the record of another court of independent jurisdiction. The record has been made by the officer of the House of Representatives in his official communication to the Senate. We have no control over the form or substance of that message. We can act upon it, but we can not change it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senate was entirely unaware of this error in the record until the Clerk of the House of Representatives came over this morning bringing our resolution and calling our attention to the fact that he had made a mistake, and asking that the correction be made. I suppose it is necessary that it should be done formally instead of informally. That is the whole thing involved here. It is necessary that he should come and stand at the door and say so, instead of doing it informally. It strikes me as an exceedingly important point, and I have no doubt the Clerk of the House will do so.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is an exceedingly important point, if the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me, when the House of Representatives sends over a message in the form which the House chooses to adopt, and it is delivered in the hearing of the Senate at the door. To say that the Clerk of the House can come over here afterwards, bring over the original resolution, and say that he made a mistake, and that then we can make the correction here merely by reading in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the proceedings of the House, would be a very great mistake, and the Senator from Massachusetts ought to consider it as a very important fact to induce him to withdraw the request he made that we, of our own accord, should undertake to correct the action of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CALL. There ought not to be any difficulty on this subject, Mr. President. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD states the fact very clearly, as follows:

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the rules be suspended, that the Committee on Foreign Affairs be discharged from further consideration of Senate concurrent resolutions in regard to the relations between the United States and Cuba.

What does that mean? "Discharged from further consideration of Senate concurrent resolutions," and thereupon, the Senate resolution being entirely out of the case, the House of Representatives proceeds to consider certain other resolutions which were before it.

Mr. BERRY. Proposed as a substitute.

Mr. CALL. It does not matter what it proposes. They were discharged from the entire consideration of the Senate resolution, and that ended the matter. The language used is merely informal, and bears no true relation to the facts. It was a House resolution which had never been in the Senate, and was not proposed as an amendment, for the entire question of the Senate resolution was withdrawn from the House. We have no evidence to the contrary in this case, except the opinions and statements of Senators. How can we accept those statements as against that record—that the House was discharged from the consideration of the Senate resolution and some other resolutions were introduced and passed? Suppose the House of Representatives do call their resolution a substitute, it was new, and had no relation to the Senate resolution, from which the House was discharged.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, it probably is not worth while to prolong this discussion, but to show how utterly impossible it is to correct the matter in the way which has been proposed here by the reading of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the House proceedings, it should be remembered that it is entirely out of order, when a matter is pending here, to refer to anything which has taken place in the other House in relation to the same matter. On one occasion, when I attempted to read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as to what had been done in the House of Representatives in reference to a pending bill, I was called to order, the matter was submitted to the Senate, and the Senate decided that I was out of order.

Mr. GORMAN. That is correct.

Mr. WHITE. I do not know whether the Senator from Florida has attracted attention to the fact that he has been violating the immemorial customs and usages of the Senate in referring to anything that has taken place in the other House of Congress.

Mr. CALL. It is in the RECORD.

Mr. WHITE. I am astonished that the Senator should read literature of that kind in the Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, it is manifest that the orderly procedure is to accept the messenger of the House of Representatives as its duly accredited agent; and it is conclusively assumed by us, until the House has sent a message to the contrary, that he has stated the facts. Of course when he discharges his duty in coming over here and leaves he is functus officio so far as that particular message is concerned, and any remarks that he may make on the outside can not be accepted, I assume, to overturn the official record which he, as an officer, has created, and which is beyond the reach of his individual criticism.

Mr. CALL. There is no rule anywhere that you can not read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD speeches made in the House of Representatives; but I say to my distinguished friend from California that there is a rule which prevents us from commenting upon action taken in the other House.

Mr. SHERMAN. My own impression is, upon reflection, that the Journal of the House will be found to be right and the Journal of the Senate will no doubt be found to be right, because if there is any error now it will be corrected. I think the better way, probably, will be to wait until the House of Representatives sends us the authentic report they wish to make of their action upon our resolution. I have no doubt that will be done the very moment it is understood by them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the request of the Senator from Ohio to be withdrawn.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw it for the present.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope we shall now resume the consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5161) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, line 7, after the word "dollars," to strike out "one appointment clerk, $2,200"; in line 10, after the word "dollars," to strike out "one clerk class 4, $1,800," and insert "two clerks class 4, $3,600"; in line 23, before the words "day watchman," to insert "four"; and in line 25, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "one"; so as to make the clause read:

Office of the Secretary: For compensation of Secretary of Agriculture, $8,000; Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, $4,500; chief clerk, who shall be superintendent of the Department buildings, $2,500; private secretary to the Secretary of Agriculture, $2,000; stenographer to the Secretary of Agriculture, $1,400; private secretary to the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, $1,600; one librarian, $1,800; one assistant librarian, $1,400; one chief of supply division, $2,000; one telegraph and telephone operator, $1,200: two clerks class 4, $3,600; three clerks class 3, $4,800; four clerks class 2, $5,600; ten clerks class 1, $12,000; ten clerks at $1,000 each, $10,000; six clerks at $840 each, $5,040; one engineer, who shall be captain of the watch, $1,600; one fireman, who shall be steam fitter, $900; one assistant fireman, $720; one assistant fireman, $600; four night watchmen, at $720 each, $2,880; messengers, laborers, mechanics, four day watchmen, and charwomen, $20,000; in all, $94,140.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 14, to strike out:

Document section: One chief of section, $2,000; one foreman, $1,800; one chief folder, $1,200; one clerk class 1, $1,200; five copyists, at $840 each, $4,200; seven folders, at $600 each, $4,200; in all, $22,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 22, to insert:

Document and folding room: One superintendent, $1,800; two chief folders, at $1,000 each; one folder, at $840; four folders, at $600 each; in all, $7,040.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 13, after the word "botanist," to insert "and curator of the herbarium"; and in line 17, after the word "assistant," to strike out "botanist" and insert "curator"; so as to make the clause read:

Division of Botany: One botanist and curator of the herbarium, who shall be chief of division, $2,500; assistant botanist, $1,800; assistant botanist, $1,400; assistant curator, $1,200; one botanical clerk, $1,000; one botanical clerk, $900; in all, $8,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 3, to strike out:

Division of Biological Survey: One biologist, who shall be chief of division, $2,500; one assistant biologist, $1,800; one assistant biologist, $1,500; one assistant biologist, $1,400; one clerk, class 1, $1,200; one clerk, $1,000; one clerk, $660; in all, $10,060.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Division of Economic Ornithology and Mammalogy: One ornithologist, who shall be chief of division, $2,500; one assistant ornithologist, $1,800; one assistant ornithologist, $1,500; one assistant ornithologist, $1,400; one clerk of class 1, $1,200; one clerk, at $1,000; one clerk, at $660; in all, $10,060.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to ask the Senator having the bill in charge whether that class of work which is described in the clause from line 4 to line 11, inclusive, on page 5, has been fully abandoned?

Mr. CULLOM. In answer to the Senator from Connecticut I desire to state as to this paragraph that everything is in the bill exactly as it was before except we report to strike out the change of name of that division. In the bill as it comes from the other House it was provided that it should be called the Division of Biological Survey, but the committee on the part of the Senate did not agree that it was best to change the name, and therefore reported to strike out that provision and insert the provision below under the name that the division already has under the existing law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 6, line 13, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "ten," and in the same line, before the word "thousand" where it occurs the second time, to strike out "twelve" and insert "seventeen"; so as to make the clause read:

Division of Chemistry: One chemist, who shall be chief of division, $2,500; one assistant chemist, $1,800; one assistant chemist, $1,600; one clerk, class 1, $1,200; employment of additional assistants in Division of Chemistry, when necessary, $10,000; in all, $17,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 14, to strike out:

Division of Soils: One chief of division, $2,500; one assistant chief, $1,800; one clerk, $1,000; in all, $5,300.

Mr. CULLOM. In reference to this amendment, I consented with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] that it should be passed over as he has to be absent for a time.

Mr. PLATT. Why not allow the following amendment in relation to the Division of Agrostology to go over, too? The two amendments stand on the same ground.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to that course. The two amendments may be passed over for the time being.

Mr. PLATT. Let those amendments be passed over for the time being.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; the two provisions which it is proposed to strike out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments between lines 15 and 24 are passed over without action.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 7, after line 6, to insert:

Division of Seeds: One chief of division, $2,000; one expert, $1,600; two clerks of class 1, $2,400; one skilled laborer, $1,000; eight employees, at $840 each, who shall, in addition to other duties, execute the requests of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for the distribution of seeds among their constituents; in all, $13,720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 22, after the word "dollars," to insert "one assistant chief, who shall be chief of inspection division, $2,500"; so as to read:

Salaries, Bureau of Animal Industry: One chief of Bureau, $4,000; one assistant chief, who shall be chief of inspection division, $2,500.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask, by consent of the committee, to modify that provision by striking out, in line 23, the words "who shall be chief of inspection division." Then I shall ask that the next amendment, in line 25, be disagreed to by the Senate. I find on investigation that it is almost impossible to get along with that bureau and the work of it without having an assistant chief who shall give his entire attention to the subject. The work of the inspection division is very extensive and very important, and that officer ought to be retained. I hope the Senate will agree to the amendment as proposed to be modified.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the Senator's proposition?

Mr. CULLOM. We were misled, I will say to the Senator from Missouri, by a wrong statement in the Book of Estimates. The statement was made, as it is alleged, by mistake. We have the provision exactly as they seemed to want it, but the fact is that the assistant chief is a very important officer and it is impossible for the chief himself to be always in his office. He necessarily goes into different sections of the country. When he is absent there must be an assistant, and the assistant is important, even when both officers are there, the work being of such an important character and there being so much of it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that perfectly. What does the Senator want to have done?

Mr. CULLOM. In line 23, I move to strike out the words "who shall be chief of inspection division." The balance may stand. Then I desire that the Senate shall disagree to the next amendment which the committee reports, to strike out the words "one chief of inspection division, $2,500."

I desire to say to the Senator from Missouri further, that the chief of the inspection division has to be absent a good deal, but when he is here his bureau is in the top of the building, while the Bureau of Animal Industry is on the first floor, and therefore it seems almost impossible that the department shall be run properly without both those officers, each one confined to the service pertaining to his own bureau.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is the creation of an entirely new office.

Mr. CULLOM. No, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. One assistant chief.

Mr. CULLOM. No. The office is there now, but we were misled by the statement in the Book of Estimates in reference to the whole subject.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that language in the last appropriation act?

Mr. CULLOM. I think it is.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to see it.

Mr. CULLOM. I think it is, but I am not sure. I find that the last appropriation act made a lump sum appropriation, as the Senator from Missouri will probably remember, and therefore the Department paid the men as it wanted to, apparently. We have been trying to make a statutory limit.

Mr. COCKRELL. I remember that in the last act it was a general fund; but do they have this officer named in the report of the expenditure of that money?

Mr. CULLOM. They do. They have this identical officer there now, and he has been there all the year.

Mr. COCKRELL. Transferred from the Post-Office Department?

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know where he came from. But that is the situation, and everybody who knows him concurs in the statement that he is a competent and important officer. I hope the amendment as proposed to be modified will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] to the amendment of the committee.

The SECRETARY. In line 23, page 7, it is proposed to amend the amendment by striking out the words "who shall be chief of inspection division"; so as to read:

One assistant chief, $2,500.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the provision "Salaries, Bureau of Animal Industry," on page 7, line 25, after the word "dollars," to strike out "one chief of inspection division, $2,500."

Mr. CULLOM. I ask, as I stated I should, that this amendment be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 8, line 5, after the word "thousand," to strike out "five hundred" and insert "two hundred and fifty"; so as to read:

One chief of Pathological Division, $2,250.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to ask a question of the Senator in charge of the bill. I see there are several changes proposed to be made in this paragraph. I have been given to understand that the Secretary of Agriculture does not ask that these reductions shall be made.

Mr. CULLOM. Those gentlemen, who are employed in scientific operations in the Department, get now exactly what the bill provides for them. There was an effort made to increase the salaries, and the other House did increase the salaries of several of them $250 apiece per annum. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate did not think that in these times it was wise to do that, so they put the salaries back to the exact figures that those men have been getting heretofore and get now. That is all there is in it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 8, line 7, after the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "two"; so as to read:

One assistant in Pathological Division, $1,200.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that this amendment may be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be passed over without action.

Mr. PLATT. Why not dispose of it now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont asks that the amendment found in line 7, page 8, be passed over without action.

Mr. PROCTOR. Let us dispose of it now.

Mr. CULLOM. I scarcely know why the Senator from Vermont desires the amendment passed over or why he objects to the amendment, unless he desires to increase the salary.

Mr. PROCTOR. I understand that the services of a very able man in this Department will be lost unless the salary can be fixed at $1,400. I consider it a very reasonable salary for the services he performs. I have personally inquired into the matter, and although I do not know the officer, I believe that the information I have obtained is correct.

Mr. CULLOM. I find that there are a great many men about to leave the service of the Government unless their salaries are increased. I do not know how many of them will leave if we keep their salaries at the present figures, but we thought this was not a good time to increase very many salaries.

Mr. PLATT. I wish I could understand this matter. Are the men whose salaries are proposed to be reduced by the committee now on the roll?

Mr. CULLOM. They have not been heretofore, but the committee ascertained that the salaries agreed to in committee are exactly what those men are getting to-day under the law, which gave the Department a lump sum and the salaries were fixed by the Secretary.

Mr. PLATT. For the first time, then, as to the Bureau of Animal Industry, a statutory rule is provided in the pending bill?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; and we undertook to fix the salaries exactly as they are.

Mr. PLATT. Do I understand the Senator from Illinois to say that in this particular instance the one assistant in the pathological division receives now $1,200 from the lump sum?

Mr. CULLOM. Exactly that sum, and no more and no less.

Mr. PLATT. Then I should like to have the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] explain how it is that the officer is likely to leave if he is now getting what the committee propose to give him. I simply inquire for the purpose of getting an understanding of the matter.

Mr. PROCTOR. I judge that the committee of another body gave this matter very careful personal attention. I think they did so by a visit to the Department. This Bureau is one of special importance at this time, when our cattle are excluded from Germany and France and Belgium. The matter of the inspection of cattle is very important, and our cattle are perhaps about to be shut out from Great Britain also, or at least there are threats of it.

This man, as I believe, is of special importance to the Department. He did not go there with the purpose of staying, and he can not remain at the low salary of $1,200. I believe this slight increase is one that he deserves, and that it would be for the benefit of the service that he should have it.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to interfere with the debate as respects these salaries, and I generally try to follow the Senator from Vermont. He has given a reason, perhaps, why this particular person should have his salary increased, but it was not evident that it ought to be so increased when the estimates were made. The Secretary of Agriculture or the Bureau of Animal Industry very carefully prepared this scheme and schedule. They were directed to do so in the last Agricultural appropriation act. They prepared this schedule, and in making their estimates for this particular office they recommended the salary which we provide here.

Now, if they have made some further discovery later on, and if they find that this special officer is of such peculiar merit that he ought to have his salary increased, I do not know that I shall interpose any very great objection; but I do not want it to be an entering wedge for the increase of all these salaries over the estimates made by the Department itself.

Mr. PROCTOR. I got the information in regard to this particular officer from Dr. Salmon this morning. It is not my purpose to ask to increase the salary of any other officer.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to state that I think I have a letter from the Department desiring that the salaries of all of those gentlemen shall be increased. The committee, however, did not think it ought to be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 8, line 9, after the word "thousand," to strike out "five hundred" and insert "two hundred and fifty"; so as to read:

One chief of Biochemic Division, $2,250.

Mr. GRAY. Before the amendment is acted upon I should like to be enlightened as to what the chief of a Biochemic Division is. I ask the Senator who has charge of the bill to explain it to me and to other Senators, if there are any others so unfortunate, as I am, as to be ignorant of what it means.

Mr. CULLOM. What the "bio" is there for I do not know, but I suppose it is a part of one of those peculiar phrases that the Secretary of Agriculture——

Mr. COCKRELL. The farmers all understand it.

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose it is part of one of those peculiar phrases that the Secretary of Agriculture found in the Department.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Illinois can not enlighten us?

Mr. CULLOM. Not very much as to that particular word.

Mr. GRAY. How do you know, then, what the salary should be?

Mr. CULLOM. The general work is of a scientific nature and is very important.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 8, line 11, after the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "two"; so as to read:

Two assistants in Biochemic Division, at $1,200 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. In line 12, page 8, I move to strike out "eight" and insert "four"; so as to read:

Two assistants in Biochemic Division, at $1,200 each, $2,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 8, line 14, after the word "thousand," to strike out "$250"; so as to read:

One chief of Miscellaneous Division, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 15, after the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred and fifty"; so as to read:

One zoologist, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 7, after the words "in all," to strike out "sixty-seven thousand and forty" and insert "sixty-four thousand nine hundred and forty"; so as to read:

In all, $64,940.

Mr. CULLOM. The total should be $67,440.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, that change will be made.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 10, line 6, after the words "United States," to strike out:

And to secure as far as may be a change in the methods of supplying tobacco and other farm products to foreign countries.

So as to make the proviso read:

Provided also, That $10,000 of the amount hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary, may be expended in continuing the investigations concerning the feasibility of extending the demands of foreign markets for the agricultural products of the United States, $110,000.

Mr. BATE. I move to nonconcur in the amendment of the committee, and I hope that the Senate, after discussion, will agree to my motion.

Mr. CULLOM. The amendment was pretty fully considered by the committee, and it seemed to the committee that it was not worth while to have a provision in the bill calling attention especially to any particular agricultural product; that the general provision "that $10,000 of the amount hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary, may be expended in continuing the investigations concerning the feasibility of extending the demands of foreign markets for the agricultural products of the United States," covered tobacco as well as every other agricultural product.

The committee supposed that the Department would make just as much of an effort to secure the introduction of tobacco into the general markets of foreign countries without that particular provision as they would with it. The committee therefore reported to strike it out. I do not think the committee has any particular concern about the matter except that the clause did not seem to be needed.

Mr. BATE. I understand that the committee does not make any particular objection to the words remaining in the bill. They only give emphasis to a certain fact in carrying out the object of this section.

This clause does not add a dollar to the expense; it does nothing further than to indicate to the Secretary that there is a special interest in the matter of tobacco. I understand it grows out of the operation of what is known as the regia contract, a contract with the Governments, I believe, of five countries of Europe—Portugal, Spain, Austria, Italy, and France. In those countries the governing authorities take charge of this matter, and no one can purchase tobacco except from the governmental institutions. It is a source of immense revenue to those Governments. In order to secure the tobacco they have agents, and I understand in this deal a syndicate has been formed. Indeed, such is current history for the last twenty years. That syndicate has its agents, who buy up all of a particular kind of tobacco—the kind which is required in those countries—and they make a monopoly of it. It is a kind of tobacco that is not needed elsewhere. Therefore there is no competition, and they absorb the business. They have their agents all through the country, even now as far down as a cross-roads in my State, buying up this particular kind of tobacco and making a monopoly of it.

We desire to see if the Secretary can not relieve us in that regard. Hence the direction given in this particular paragraph proposed to be stricken out calling attention especially to tobacco. That is what it is intended to do and no more, and I can see no objection to it, even if the other language does include it. It is hardly surplusage, and it looks to me like it is proper language in proper place, and I hope there will be no objection to its retention.

Mr. GRAY. What action can the Secretary of Agriculture take or what action would the Senator from Tennessee suggest should be taken in order to provide for the condition he has described?

Mr. BATE. I understand it is to be done by corresponding in regard to this matter, so as to gain information with respect to it. If we can effect any arrangement to relieve us from the operations of this syndicate, let us do it. That is the object and there is no harm in this paragraph. I ask that the committee amendment be nonconcurred in.

Mr. CULLOM. I assume that the Secretary of Agriculture is expending the greater part of his energy in trying to get tobacco introduced, notwithstanding the scheme that certain foreign Governments have adopted in order to control the market. Therefore we thought it was not necessary to put in this clause. If the Senator from Tennessee desires to have those words included, while I really think they will add nothing to the prospect of getting our tobacco into those markets, yet I have no objection to the matter being disposed of by the Senate as it sees fit.

Mr. BATE. Let the words remain, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests to the Senator from Tennessee that his motion to nonconcur is wholly unnecessary. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment? His object is accomplished by a vote of the Senate in the negative.

Mr. BATE. All right; I withdraw the motion and let the vote come in that form.

Mr. CULLOM. I withdraw any opposition to the words remaining in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 11, line 21, to strike out "Biological Survey, Division of Biological Survey," and insert "Investigations in ornithology and mammalogy, Division of Ornithology and Mammalogy"; so as to make the clause read:

Investigations in ornithology and mammalogy, Division of Ornithology and Mammalogy: For biological investigations, including the geographic distribution and migrations of animals, birds, and plants, and for the promotion of economic ornithology and mammalogy, an investigation of the food habits of North American birds and mammals in relation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry; for preparation and publication of reports thereon, and for illustrations, field work, and traveling, and other expenses in the practical work of the division, $17,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 11, before the word "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "eight"; so as to make the clause read:

Pomological investigations, Division of Pomology: Investigating, collecting, and disseminating information relating to the fruit industry; the collection and distribution of seeds, shrubs, trees, and specimens; traveling and other necessary expenses, $8,000.

Mr. CULLOM. That amendment is a mistake of the printer. It ought to be disagreed to. The appropriation ought to be $6,000 instead of $8,000.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 13, line 10, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five thousand" and insert "seven thousand five hundred," and in line 11, before the word "hundred," to strike out "nine thousand nine" and insert "twelve thousand four"; so as to make the clause read:

To investigate the adulteration of foods, drugs, and liquors, when deemed by the Secretary of Agriculture advisable; employing such assistants, clerks, and other persons as the Secretary of Agriculture may consider necessary for the purpose named; preparing, illustrating, and publishing reports and exhibiting the results of such investigations, and to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to continue an investigation relative to the various typical soils of the United States to determine their chemical characteristics, and especially the nature of the nitrifying organisms contained therein; the preparation of reports thereon; apparatus and materials required in conducting such investigations; employment of the necessary investigators; freight and express charges, and necessary traveling expenses, $7,500; in all, for Division of Chemistry, $12,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 16, after the word "management," to strike out the words "experiments in forest planting."

Mr. CULLOM. I move to strike out the paragraph from line 12, after the heading, down to and including line 20, and to insert in lieu of it the present law, as it is believed by the committee to be better than the provision in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out from line 13 to line 20, inclusive, in the following words:

Investigating the condition of the forest resources of the United States, and the methods and rate of consumption and reproduction, and studying forest-tree biology as a basis for forestry practice and forest management; experiments in forest planting; preparing, illustrating, and publishing reports; the collection and distribution of valuable forest-tree seeds and plants; and traveling and other necessary expenses, $20,000.

And to insert:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to experiment and continue an investigation and report on the subject of forestry and timber, for traveling and other necessary expenses of the investigation, and for the collection and distribution of valuable economic forest-tree seeds and plants, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 13, line 25, before the word "management," to strike out "erection"; so as to make the clause read:

Experimental gardens and grounds, Department of Agriculture, Division of Gardens and Grounds: Cultivation and care of experimental gardens and grounds, including the keep of the lawns, trees, roadways, and walks; management and maintenance of the conservatories, and seed-testing and plant and fruit propagating houses; employment of foremen, gardeners, laborers, carpenters, painters, plumbers, and other mechanics; machinery, tools, wagons, carts, horses, harness, plows, lawn mowers, sprinklers, hose, watering cans, tubs, pots, and other implements required in cultivation; lumber, hardware, glass, paints, tin, stone, gravel, and other material required for repairs; fertilizers, insecticide apparatus, and chemicals; blacksmithing, horseshoeing, and repairs to implements and machinery; seeds, plants, and bulbs for propagating purposes; labels, potting, and packing materials, feed for horses, freight and express charges, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 13, to strike out "Division of Soils" and insert "Soil investigations," and in line 23, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen"; so as to make the clause read:

Soil investigations: Investigation of the relation of soils to climate and organic life; for the investigation of the texture and composition of soils in the field and laboratory; the location of the stations and the rent of a building, not to exceed $660 per annum, for office and laboratory purposes; the employment of local and special agents, and other labor required in conducting experiments; the preparation of drawings and illustrations; for materials, tools, instruments, apparatus, gas, and supplies, and for traveling expenses, freight and express charges, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 24, to strike out "Division of Agrostology" and insert "Grass and forage plant investigations."

Mr. FRYE. Before that amendment is acted upon, I should like to have the Senate go back to page 6, to the Division of Agrostology. That amendment was passed over.

Mr. PLATT. Both the item relating to soils and the item relating to agrostology were passed over.

Mr. FRYE. I simply asked that the paragraph relating to agrostology might be passed over.

Mr. CULLOM. What was the remark of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. FRYE. Before this provision is acted upon, I ask the Senate to go back to page 6, line 19, the item relating to the Division of Agrostology.

Mr. CULLOM. Before we proceed with that, we might as well begin with the paragraph commencing in line 15, as to the Division of Soils, and dispose of that item.

Mr. FRYE. I have nothing to say about that.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask, then, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of both the paragraphs on page 6, beginning with line 15.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment, beginning at line 15, page 6.

The SECRETARY. The committee report to strike out the following paragraph, beginning at line 15, on page 6:

Division of Soils: One chief of division, $2,500; one assistant chief, $1,800; one clerk, $1,000; in all, $5,300.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Maine seems to be interested in the next amendment, if these are to be separated, but I do not see why both do not stand on the same footing. I should like to hear what the Senator from Maine has to say about the next item.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from Maine will allow me, I will state that the two divisions referred to, both as to soils and to agrostology, may be found provided for on page 14 of the bill and part of page 15. As to the soil provision, it reads as follows:

Soil investigations: Investigation of the relation of soils to climate and organic life; for the investigation of the texture and composition of soils in the field and laboratory; the location of the stations and the rent of a building, not to exceed $660 per annum, for office and laboratory purposes; the employment of local and special agents, and other labor required in conducting experiments; the preparation of drawings and illustrations; for materials, tools, instruments, apparatus, gas, and supplies, and for traveling expenses, freight, and express charges, $15,000.

That is the provision in relation to the investigation of soils. It seemed to the committee that that provision furnished all the power necessary on the part of the Department to make all the investigation that it could make without the provision now under consideration. The next provision, as to grass and forage plant investigation, is framed upon the same theory and is the law as it stands to-day as to agrostology.

Mr. PLATT. As I understand the question at issue, there being a law for conducting these investigations, the Secretary of Agriculture has proceeded to organize a division in this sense, and he has selected certain persons and put them upon the statutory roll, and they are appropriated for specifically; in the case of soils, "one chief of division, $2,500; one assistant chief, $1,800; one clerk, $1,000; in all, $5,300"; and so with the Division of Agrostology.

I believe myself that it is a great deal better that there should be an organized force appropriated for, as in the other divisions, the Division of Chemistry, for instance, which we have just passed over, and Vegetable Physiology and Pathology, than to have lump sums appropriated and persons employed under them as the Secretary or his chief or some other person may think is best. I suppose that is really the question which arises here, that it is as between having a division, a statutory roll, with the salaries of the officers provided for by appropriations, the same as we provide for other officers and clerks in the bill, or whether we are to leave it all in a lump sum, to be appropriated and expended as the officials of the Department may see fit. I presume that is all there is to it.

Mr. HALE. I will state what I think was the view which obtained in the committee. Under the provisions on page 14, $15,000 generally is given for the subject of soil investigations, and for agrostology, which is the subject of the treatment of and experiments with grasses, $18,000. That is to be expended in all the ways provided by the clauses, and under such appropriations I do not understand that extravagant salaries have been paid. What the other House has done is to take away from the appropriation of $15,000 for soil investigations $5,300 and set up a division consisting of one chief at $2,500, one assistant chief at $1,800, and one clerk at $1,000.

Mr. CULLOM. Making, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, a division with salaries amounting to $5,300 in order to spend $15,000.

Mr. HALE. Exactly; to expend $15,000. It has got the paraphernalia of a division and has to expend only $15,000 in all, the division consisting of a chief at $2,500, an assistant chief at $1,800, and one clerk at $1,000. It is like having a lieutenant-general, and a major-general, and a brigadier-general to command one company of men. The Committee on Appropriations did not believe in that sort of thing. It is worse in the Agrostology Division, for there they have taken away $8,000 of the $18,000 which has been given to this general purpose in a moderate way, and have set up a division of one chief of Division of Agrostology at $2,500, one assistant chief at $1,800, one assistant at $1,500, one assistant at $1,400, and one histologist at $900, making in all $8,100, to spend $18,000. There is nothing like it in any other Department. The statement I have made shows the absurdity of it.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the Senator from Maine whether the effect of the amendment of the committee is not simply to apply more of the appropriation to the work of the special division and take it from large and high salaries?

Mr. HALE. That is what the committee and the Senate are trying to do. They are trying to expend the amount of money appropriated in a judicious way for the whole subject, and not to be swallowed up in high offices. We restore the amount they have always had appropriated, but we say we do not agree to this great top-heavy arrangement of three or four big officers at high salaries to spend a small sum of money, there being in one case, as proposed by the House, only one clerk under the chief and assistant chief. If on this view the Senate does not see the absurdity of the issue proposed, I for one can not make it see it.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I fail to see the absurdity of the proposition. The expenditure of the $18,000, whether made profitable or not, depends entirely upon the head of the division. If $5,000 is necessary to procure a man skilled in that business, then he should receive $5,000, or else the whole $18,000 will be wasted. This Division of Agrostology was provided for in the last appropriation act.

Mr. PLATT. And after discussion here.

Mr. FRYE. After discussion here, and after discussion in both Houses. Now, what did the Secretary of Agriculture do after that became a law? The inspection of grasses is a matter of vital importance, more important than almost anything else that came within the jurisdiction of that Department. In the first place, the hay crop is now worth $400,000,000 a year—nearly twice as much as the cotton crop, nearly twice as much as the wheat crop. If you add to that the value of the pasturage which is used, it will run up the amount to twice the value of the wheat and cotton crops put together. So it was exceedingly important——

Mr. HALE. I am not arguing against the importance of the work, but I do not want all the money taken up by big salaries.

Mr. FRYE. That is where I disagree with my colleague. I want a salary sufficiently high provided to enable a man who will best know how to expend the $18,000 to be employed.

Now, I want to show what was done. The moment that it became a law the Secretary of Agriculture wrote to all the prominent scientists in the United States and asked them who was the man suitable to be at the head of this division. He received twenty replies, and out of the twenty replies a large majority were to the effect that Professor Scribner was the man of all other men; that he knew more about that business than anybody else in the United States. Well, who was he? He was a Maine man, educated and trained in Maine, which ought to be a sufficient certificate of qualification and character. In addition to that, he had been employed in this Department down here for four or five years in the Botanical Division. Then the University of Tennessee, having learned of the capacity of this man and his qualifications, took him away from this Department and employed him there as a professor in that State university. Then, in addition to that, he was placed at the head of the experimental station in Tennessee, receiving more salary than he is to receive here under this bill.

The Department wrote to that man and implored him to take the head of this division at $2,500 a year. He surrendered the professorship, he surrendered the head of the agricultural experiment station there, and came here and took the head of this division, and has been pursuing his work. He is the author of a number of books; he is a member of half a dozen scientific societies abroad; he has received decorations of honor from France and from Germany for his scientific attainments in this regard; and surely he is worth $2,500 a year for the investigation of this subject.

Mr. President, there is something in the dignity of place. While a man might not be willing to come here, even though his salary was $2,500 a year and be called a clerk in a Department, he might be willing to come here on the same salary and be called the head of a division. A scientific man might be willing to be at the head of a division when he would not be willing to be a clerk in the Department at the same pay. I take it that such is the position of Mr. Scribner. Nobody believes that the Department would not pay him $2,500 a year, because the same appropriation is made that would be made if the salary were $2,500 a year and if he were named here. That appropriation has not been cut down at all. The Secretary of Agriculture will pay him $2,500 a year, for he can not very well get along without him; but what this man, a scientific man, a professor, wants is to be the head of a division instead of a common clerk in the Department. I can not see the slightest objection on earth to it.

Mr. HALE. It is the old story of starting in a small way a subdivision in the work of this Department and giving a small sum of money to develop a certain end and get information throughout the country and to employ men at a small rate, which was the original way of doing it, or of absorbing the fund in large salaries. Undoubtedly this man, who was educated in Maine, and who, I have no doubt, is a good man, would like to be permanently lodged on the Department at a large salary. The chiefs of divisions who have 100 or 150 men in their charge get only $2,500, some of them only $2,000, and here a man asks that he be permanently provided for in the bill, fastened upon us, at the rate of $2,500, when he has only got under him one assistant chief and one clerk in one case, and in the other the chief of division has three assistants and one clerk, the latter at $900 a year.

I say if in the arrangement of departmental business this man ought to have for his investigations $2,500 a year, as my colleague says, let the Secretary of Agriculture pay it to him for his services, but do not build up this grotesque anomaly of a division with the head of it permanently in at $2,500 when he has only two or three men under him. It is in no way a comparison with what is done in other Departments. If the special services of this man are worth $2,500, the provision reported by the committee allows the Secretary of Agriculture to pay it to him. To that I do not object if that is deemed advisable, if he is worth it; but do not insert him as a part of this establishment and call him the chief of the division, and make him thereby, as you do in that way, permanent. He will be appointed, he will have a division, a room, and two men or three men under him, that is all, and he will get the same pay for a permanent service where he can not be disturbed that other men in other Departments are getting where they have a hundred men under them. To me that looks like an absurdity.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator from Maine allow me a moment?

Mr. HALE. I yield the floor.

Mr. KYLE. On page 6 there is a Division of Vegetable Physiology and Pathology provided for, on page 7 a Division of Seeds, and so on all the way through.

Mr. PLATT. And a Division of Pomology on page 5.

Mr. KYLE. I can not understand why this Division of Agrostology is not just as important as the others.

Mr. HALE. But why subdivide the division of seeds and make three or four?

Mr. PLATT. On page 5 there is also a Division of Economic Ornithology and Mammalogy.

Mr. CULLOM. That is the law as it is now.

Mr. PLATT. That may be.

Mr. FRYE. This is the law as it is now.

Mr. PLATT. This is the law as it is now. In that case the committee provided for one ornithologist, chief of division, at $2,500; one assistant ornithologist, at $1,800; one assistant ornithologist, at $1,500; one assistant ornithologist, at $1,400; one clerk, at $1,200; one clerk, at $1,000, and one clerk, at $650; in all, $10,060.

Mr. HALE. That is not quite so bad as this, but it is bad enough.

Mr. PLATT. Yes; it is.

Mr. HALE. It is not quite so bad. That division has three clerks.

Mr. PLATT. All that is asked for this Division of Agrostology is $8,100. Why the committee should provide for an economic bird and mammal division when they will not allow a division for this vastly superior subject of agrostology and grasses I can not exactly understand.

Mr. HALE. I can tell the Senator. The division he has referred to is not needed.

Mr. PLATT. Cut it out, then.

Mr. HALE. It ought to be cut out. The argument is that it has been abused. I say plainly that this whole scheme of running the Agricultural Department is abused. In the first place, the Department, as with no other Department, has under its general appropriation bill all the officers provided for. They ought to be provided for in the legislative appropriation bill, as is the case with every other Department, where some scrutiny could be made, and where the appropriations could be kept down to the others. But from year to year the Department of Agriculture has been dividing and subdividing and creating divisions. Where there was a general division, in the first place, with only two or three large divisions, somebody who was a clerk wanted to be a chief, somebody at $900 wanted to be an assistant chief, and every year they have been coming in and having the salaries increased all the way through. The record of this appropriation bill is a record of divisions with big salaries. I affirm, that for the business it does, for the work it performs, for the money it expends, it has a proportion of large salaries from three to six times larger than any other Department of the Government. This is in the direction of still more and more increasing the salaries, and I for one object to it. To me it is an absurdity.

Mr. PLATT. It is the case now.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President——

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator from South Dakota will allow me just one moment, I do not see what the number of clerks employed has to do with the question whether this shall be a chief of a division with a salary of $2,500. I can conceive that the position of chief might be one not worth over $1,200 a year and he might have a hundred clerks under him. This is entirely different. It is a place requiring scientific knowledge. My colleague does not believe that a man who is capable of filling the position of chief of this division ought to be employed for any less than $2,500.

Mr. HALE. No; my colleague misapprehends my point. I have said that if this man's services are valuable and he is worth $2,500, the provision of the Senate committee gives him that salary; but I am opposed, because that is the fact, to creating a new division, and putting him at the head of a so-called division when it is not needed. It is swelling up these items. I do not know but that the man is worth $5,000, but I do not think there ought to be any division of this kind here. It is not needed. You can have all the work done in a more modest and less titular way. That is what I object to.

Mr. FRYE. But this division was created by law just exactly as all the other divisions provided for in the bill. It is just as much the law to-day as the law creating any division appropriated for, and yet here are a score of them left not touched because the Senator from Illinois says it is the law. This was enacted into law after discussion in both branches in the last Congress, and I fail to see why this work, the most important of all, with values involved greater than any other provided for in the entire bill, should be stricken out and the Department should be left to employ simply a clerk.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to say simply a word in reference to this matter. The committee fully appreciated and now appreciates the importance of this work, the examination, etc., of soils and grasses. When they came to look at the paragraphs which are proposed to be stricken out here, and to examine the present law, it seemed to us, appreciating the importance of the subject, that we could get more good out of it for the people by eliminating those provisions from the bill and appropriating the money under the paragraphs upon pages 14 and 15. So, as far as the committee were concerned, they got rid of the two provisions referred to by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. When you come to look at it, it does seem as though it is only fair that that should be done. Those two provisions carry an appropriation of nearly $14,000, and the appropriation on page 14 for the work in those two divisions would be in the one case $15,000 and in the other $18,000. We were so anxious that we should not cripple the work of the division in relation to grasses that we increased the appropriation some $3,000; I do not remember exactly the amount.

Mr. FRYE. You only increased it by the amount of the salaries which the committee struck out in another place. In other words, you did not cut down the appropriation.

Mr. CULLOM. In other words, for grass and forage plant investigations, on page 15, the committee reported to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$18,000," and for soil investigations we increased the appropriation from $10,000 to $15,000, getting rid of the two provisions on page 6. The Senator seems to think that this man is going to be abused if we do not promote him and give him the title or the dignity of the chief of a division.

Mr. FRYE. No; but by taking it away from him. He has it now.

Mr. CULLOM. He will practically still be at the head of that bureau or branch of the service. I do not know whether he came here before the last provisions were adopted, but what we wanted to do was to stop, if we could, the constant effort on the part of that Department to create divisions and absorb the appropriations by great salaries, and then have but very little left for the actual work of the Department.

Mr. KYLE. May I ask why, then, the committee preserved the Division of Pomology, on page 5, and the Division of Entomology, on page 4? In the Division of Pomology I see there are only four or five clerks provided for, and the total appropriation is $6,500.

Mr. CULLOM. It may be possible that the Department can get along with the reduction of a few other divisions and simply put clerks at the head of these different branches of the service, without giving them the title of chief of division.

Mr. KYLE. As the Senator from Maine has just said, this Division of Agrostology was created by law last year.

Mr. CULLOM. I know it was.

Mr. KYLE. It was so created because of the importance of that division to the farmers of the United States.

Mr. CULLOM. I remember that very well; but the committee thought it would be making more of the work by getting rid of those provisions than by leaving the law as it stands.

Mr. KYLE. It strikes me that some of these others should be dropped and the Division of Agrostology retained. The Division of Agrostology, I may say, is one of the most important of the coming experimental departments in the United States. Throughout all the Western country we are exchanging grasses at the present time for the purpose of trying to discover some grasses that will grow in the drought-stricken region, and we are transporting seeds from Utah, California, and Arizona to the plains of the Dakotas, and trying to discover something that will grow there. During the discussion last year it was our effort to place it in the power of the Secretary of Agriculture to correspond with agrostologists of foreign countries in order to discover seeds of grasses that would grow in this country, and by exchanging back and forth possibly supply the farmers of the United States.

Mr. HALE. The committee are in entire sympathy with that idea. We do not want to cripple that work; we think it is an important one, as the Senator says; but our idea is, when you create a division for some important work in the Department of Agriculture, not that you should create it to give a few men salaries, but when you create a division, that you dignify it; that you segregate it; that you put so much money into the hands of the Secretary to expend, not in high salaries, not in a fixed establishment, but in other ways that will bring out precisely what the Senator wants—investigation. I do not believe, out of an appropriation of $18,000 for this great subject, that to advantage $8,000 of it can be spent by three or four men with large salaries, sitting in a room down in the Department of Agriculture. I do not believe, if the work is as important as has been said, and as I believe it to be, that you are getting the most out of it for your money by creating offices for three or four large-salaried men who remain here in Washington, when it could be expended to greater advantage by investigations outside at smaller cost. That is all the difference there is. The Senator's idea seems to be that if you are going to magnify this work you must magnify the offices. I do not think so. I do not think that is needed. I think it is better they should not be magnified, and that the work should be more generally extended.

Mr. KYLE. I do not know how the Secretary of Agriculture has been carrying on this work. I understand he has been carrying it on at his discretion as to how it shall be done.

Mr. HALE. He would have no discretion if this provision is put in the bill, but he would have to pay this chief $2,500 and keep him, and pay an assistant $1,800 and keep him, and another assistant at $1,400, and a clerk at $900, and there is no discretion left him. That is one thing I complain of. I would rather leave it to the discretion of the head of the Department as to how this money shall be spent than to saddle on him this large establishment of big-salaried men, leaving him no discretion.

Mr. KYLE. On page 14, under the head of "Grass and forage plant investigations," the committee have stricken out "Division of Agrostology," and also stricken out "$10,000," at the end of the clause, and inserted "$18,000." Would there be any objection to leaving the clause on page 6, as to the Division of Agrostology, stand in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives?

Mr. HALE. For one I do not think that it is very essential. I should not object if you choose to strike out this entire paraphernalia of big officers and leave it discretionary with the Secretary of Agriculture as to how he shall expend the money and get the most out of it. As to inserting the "Division of Agrostology," I have no objection to that.

Mr. KYLE. I shall move, on page 14, to nonconcur in the committee amendment striking out "Division of Agrostology."

Mr. FRYE. I do not regard that as of any account. This is the place where the amendment should be disagreed to, if at all.

Mr. HALE. That is the place where the gentleman referred to will get his salary.

Mr. FRYE. Or he will resign.

Mr. HALE. I do not think there is any danger of that.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest that it might answer the purpose to leave in the words "Division of Agrostology," at the bottom of page 14, and to insert in that paragraph after the words "eighteen thousand dollars" the words "of which $2,500 may be applied to the salary of the chief." That would perhaps answer the purpose of our friend from Maine in front of me [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. FRYE. That will do.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not see under the paragraph on page 6, relating to agrostology, how any man put in there would be a permanent officer, as the Senator from Maine says. I think he could be discharged any day upon evidence of unfaithfulness, or incapacity, or anything of that kind.

Mr. HALE. Yes; but that is true about all these officers, and yet we know as to the heads of divisions there are very few changes.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think, on the whole, it is a very excellent element in our civil service if, when we find capable men in office, we keep them there. That is one of the faults found with our Government, that upon every change of Administration there are so many changes of officers. I think it would be a very great advantage if men could be practically continued in office, subject to removal for infidelity or incapacity at any time. If the Assistant Secretary of War could be permanently retained in office, I should be very glad; and if we can find a chief of agrostology who will be worth keeping at all, as probably Mr. Lamson-Scribner is, I think we should endeavor to keep him.

Mr. HALE. I was not discussing the question of civil service. I was simply saying this provision would make this officer permanent.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not see why he should stay there a fortnight if evidence appeared of his infidelity or impropriety of conduct.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] is in charge of the bill, not I.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should be a little better satisfied if the words "Division of Agrostology" were left in, and then add after the "$18,000," at the end of the clause, "$2,500 of which may be applied to the salary of the chief."

Mr. CULLOM. If the two paragraphs from line 15 to line 24, on page 6, are stricken out, so far as I am personally concerned I should have no objection to leaving the provision stand in reference to the Division of Soils, on page 14.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was speaking of the "Division of Agrostology."

Mr. CULLOM. I was going on to say that in the clause as to grass and forage plant investigations, the Division of Agrostology may remain in the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. I trust my suggestion will be adopted to insert after the total appropriation the words, "of which $2,500 may be applied to the salary of the chief," because you can not properly expend that $18,000 if you are to depend on twelve-hundred-dollar clerks. You may employ more of them, but you must put some brains at the head of the division to make the appropriation worth a cent.

Mr. CULLOM. That is true.

Mr. FRYE. I have heard members of the Appropriations Committee from time immemorial—that is to say, from my time immemorial—arguing in the United States Senate that specific appropriations were an absolute necessity for the safety of the Government. Now, what is to prevent Secretary Morton, if you leave this as it is now, from paying this man $5,000 instead of $2,500?

Mr. TELLER. His well-known financial views might prevent that. [Laughter.]

Mr. FRYE. The Senator can see reasons which perhaps I can not see; but I have heard it over and over again, and it has been insisted upon, that you must have specific appropriations, and that the number of officers must be specified, so many clerks at such a salary, so many chiefs at such a salary, and here, for the sake of wiping out one or two places in this bill, where divisions have been provided for by law, the committee sacrifices entirely the principle and theory for which it has been contending, inserts in the bill practically a lump sum, and leaves the Secretary to do with it what he has a mind to.

Mr. HALE. If a reasonable provision for specific clerks had been provided, nobody would object to it. The committee is in favor of that; but it is not in favor of taking an entire appropriation and substantially absorbing it by a few large salaries. There is the trouble.

Mr. FRYE. I do not believe my colleague thinks that for a professor in the University of the State of Tennessee, the head of an agricultural experimental station, and a man who is a thoroughly well-known scientist, not only all over the country, but all over Europe, $2,500 is an enormous salary.

Mr. HALE. But the Senator does not stop there. He proposes to give this eminent gentleman $2,500; to give him an assistant chief at $1,800; another assistant at $1,500; another at $1,400, and one histologist at $900. It is not a question as to whether this one man is worthy of it.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] is desirous of leaving the city for a day and wishes to call up for consideration a bill in which he is interested. If it leads to no debate, I shall yield to the Senator for that purpose.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON AND CANNON BALLS.

Mr. SMITH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 3982, which I am sure will lead to no debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the pending business be temporarily laid aside, in order that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of a bill referred to by him. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3982) granting to Lincoln Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Hope Valley, R. I., 1 condemned cannon; also, to the Woman's Relief Corps of Taylorville, Ill., 4 condemned cannon and 4 condemned cannon balls for the purpose of decorating a soldiers' monument lately erected there by said corps; and also, to the town of Newton, in the State of New Jersey, 4 pieces of condemned cannon and 20 cannon balls for the decoration of the new soldiers and sailors' monument in that town.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPROVEMENT OF CONNEAUT HARBOR, OHIO.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Illinois to waive for a moment longer the consideration of the pending appropriation bill, in order that I may ask the Senate to consider and pass a joint resolution which is necessary in order to obtain an estimate for a river and harbor improvement. It will take but a moment. It passed the House of Representatives and is recommended by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CULLOM. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio asks that the pending measure be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the joint resolution named by him.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the joint resolution (H. Res. 98) directing the Secretary of War to cause Lieut. Col. Jared A. Smith, Corps of Engineers, to submit a plan and estimate for the further improvement of Conneaut Harbor, in the State of Ohio, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 3, after the word "directed," to strike out "to cause Lieut. Col. Jared A. Smith, Corps of Engineers"; so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to submit a plan and estimate for the further improvement of Conneaut Harbor, in the State of Ohio, and to transmit the same to Congress at as early a date as practicable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution directing the Secretary of War to submit a plan and estimate for the further improvement of Conneaut Harbor, in the State of Ohio."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, requested the Senate to return to the House the concurrent resolution of the House relating to the belligerent rights of the Cuban insurgents to correct an error in the engrossed resolutions as transmitted to the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the resolutions of the Senate relating to the belligerent rights of the Cuban insurgents, with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4779) relating to the anchorage and movements of vessels in the St. Marys River.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 2815) for the relief of William Lock and James H. Tinsley; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

WAR IN CUBA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 3, 1896.

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to return to the House the concurrent resolution of the House relating to affairs in Cuba, to enable the House to correct an error in the engrossed resolution as transmitted to the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the request be granted.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 3, 1896.

Resolved, That the House agrees to the foregoing concurrent resolution, with an amendment, to strike out all after the resolving words and insert:

"Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That, in the opinion of Congress, a state of public war exists in Cuba, the parties to which are entitled to belligerent rights, and the United States should observe a strict neutrality between the belligerents.

"Resolved, That Congress deplores the destruction of life and property caused by the war now waging in that island, and believing that the only permanent solution of the contest, equally in the interest of Spain, the people of Cuba, and other nations, would be in the establishment of a government by the choice of the people of Cuba, it is the sense of Congress that the Government of the United States should use its good offices and friendly influence to that end.

"Resolved, That the United States has not intervened in struggles between any European Governments and their colonies on this continent; but from the very close relations between the people of the United States and those of Cuba, in consequence of its proximity and the extent of the commerce between the two peoples, the present war is entailing such losses upon the people of the United States that Congress is of opinion that the Government of the United States should be prepared to protect the legitimate interests of our citizens, by intervention if necessary."

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. FRYE. Had it not better be referred without printing, as the Committee on Foreign Relations meet to-morrow morning?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations without printing, if there be no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why should the resolution not be printed, so that we can all see it?

Mr. LODGE. Let the resolution be printed. It will not cause delay.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suppose some one else will want to look at it besides the members of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. FRYE. I suppose the Committee on Foreign Relations desire to examine it to-morrow morning.

Mr. COCKRELL. We can have it by to-morrow morning; we can have it in two hours, if necessary.

Mr. FRYE. If a special order can be made for its immediate printing, that will answer.

Mr. COCKRELL. By a special order you can have it printed in two hours.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the resolution will be ordered to be printed by to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

Mr. CULLOM and others. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5161) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the value of grass and forage plant investigations does not consist in anything that can be accomplished in the Agricultural Department here in Washington. It is what is done in the field in practical operations that will be valuable. I do not know very much of what has been done by the Department in the last three years, but I kept very well informed of what was being done under former Administrations.

An experiment station was established at Garden City, in the State of Kansas, which was in charge of a gentleman whom I know very well, at a salary of $1,500 a year. I think that station was finally closed. I do not know whether the experiments are now going on there or not, or whether they are going on anywhere else, except in the Department here.

The subject, as stated by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], is one of great interest to the Western people. We have one forage plant that is very excellent, and it is believed by a great many that there might be others equally as good, and perhaps better. I think the benefit derived from the experiments at Garden City was mainly in demonstrating what would not grow in our country, and not what would grow. We demonstrated that a great many things we hoped might grow would not grow; and that has been demonstrated in a considerable degree by our farmers in Colorado at least, for we have tried pretty nearly everything that was supposed to be valuable for forage plants.

We have tried the French plants and plants from northern Africa and other sections without, up to the present time, I may say, having discovered more than one plant that may be regarded as a valuable forage plant, and that is alfalfa, or lucerne, as it is sometimes called, an old plant which, I believe, was known to the Romans, and has been in use a long time in South America, in portions of Europe, and for perhaps thirty years in this country. It is adapted only to dry countries and will not flourish at all east of the Mississippi River, but it is very valuable in our section of the country. I have taken a great deal of interest in the question of forage plants, and have made some experiments myself without having found anything that was good.

I wish to repeat that the only advantage of these investigations is in the field. The Department has published a very interesting work on grasses—the native grasses of our country—which has been illustrated, and is a delight to people who are interested in such matters, but it is practically of no use whatever to those desiring to raise forage plants in our section of the country. None of the native grasses of the extreme Northwest, the dry country, can perhaps be made valuable as farm forage plants. They do not submit kindly to the trampling of cattle or sheep, and in a few years they are largely trodden down. We in the West must depend in time upon some new variety yet to be propagated in this country or upon grasses brought from somewhere else.

I should like to see this interest liberally dealt with. I have no objection to paying a fair salary to the officer in charge, but, after all, I do not think it is necessary to build up very large positions here.

I will state again that the only benefit we are going to get from the investigations will be from the actual practical operations in the field, and there is where the scientific men might perhaps make themselves valuable, but they will not make themselves very valuable in the Department here. I do not mean to criticise the work, because, as I have said, for the last three years I have given no attention whatever to it. I think the work was then intelligently conducted and was doing some good, at least in demonstrating what would not grow, even if we did not find any plant that was especially valuable.

Mr. KYLE. Does the Senator know how these clerks are employed, whether they are not sent all over the United States?

Mr. TELLER. I do not know much about that. But the only method by which we can determine the question is to have experimental stations and try to raise those grasses.

Mr. KYLE. I have no objection to the method of doing the work. The only desire I have is that it shall be done.

Mr. TELLER. Some of the States are doing this work. The Agricultural College of Colorado has been doing something in that line, and I think with just about the same success as the General Government, not having discovered anything very valuable, but having demonstrated that it would not pay for the farmers to try to raise certain kinds of grasses.

Mr. HAWLEY. The same thing has been done in Connecticut.

Mr. KYLE. That is a very great advantage.

Mr. TELLER. I think that is an advantage, because those seeds are expensive, and the labor of putting them in and trying to raise them is attended with a great deal of expense. So it is an advantage. I do not mean to underrate it, but it is not so valuable as would have been the discovery of some plant which would grow in the country. I notice that it is claimed now that such a plant has been discovered, one which will grow in the alkali regions, which is called the salt plant. If that should turn out to be a fact it would be very valuable.

Mr. KYLE. Our intention is merely that these grass and forage plant investigations shall be continued by the competent and skillful man in charge of that work, who should be paid a reasonable salary.

Mr. TELLER. I do not understand that the committee have made any attack upon the salary of the officer. We left that just as it was.

Mr. KYLE. The provision in reference to agrostology provides a lump sum of $2,500 for the salary of the chief of the division.

Mr. TELLER. I have not the bill in charge, and I am not making any objection to that.

Mr. PROCTOR. In answer to the charge of the Senator from Maine that there are too many divisions in the Department of Agriculture, and more than in the other Departments, I will say that it seems to me there is a very good reason for it. In other Departments the work is largely confined to one line—the War Department to the charge of the Army, the Navy Department to the charge of the Navy, and likewise with the Post-Office Department—while the Agricultural Department must have branches as varied as all the crops and animals which are produced in this great country.

In regard to this special appropriation, it provides for merely five men here in the Agricultural Department. This work is going on all over the country, at the experiment stations, at the agricultural colleges, by agricultural societies, and by individual farmers. For this small force here to collate and prepare for the use of the country information which is gathered from hundreds and thousands of sources all over the country it seems to me this is a very modest provision.

As to the chief, who is a scientific man, and should be, he has a right to have some pride in his profession, and certainly, it seems to me, as this costs so little, it is no more than just and right that we should give this recognition to his high character and capacity.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senate, and especially to those Senators interested in those two divisions, that if they will consent to the amendment made by the Senate committee I shall look into the subject more thoroughly as to the importance of making the Division of Agrostology, on the fourteenth page, and of the importance also of fixing the salary of the head of the division at the amount which he is getting now. If that be satisfactory we may now go on with the bill.

Mr. FRYE. So far as I am concerned, that is satisfactory to me.

Mr. KYLE. And to me also.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee striking out the clauses from line 15 to line 24, inclusive, on page 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed at page 15, beginning with the clause, in line 14, providing for "fiber investigations."

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 15, after line 23, to strike out—

And the Secretary of Agriculture shall use in his discretion such portion of said sum as he may deem advisable for the purchase of fiber flaxseed, to be distributed for use in the State of Washington—

So as to make the clause read:

Fiber investigations: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to continue the investigations relating to textile fibers indigenous in, or adapted to, the United States, including their economic growth, cleansing, and decorticating, preparatory to manufacture; the testing machines and processes for said cleansing and decorticating; for the purchase of material for said tests; for the purchase of fiber plants and seeds for distribution, propagation, and experiment, and for the labor and expenses incident thereto; and for traveling expenses in connection with said duties, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 11, after the word "index," to strike out "$750,000"; so as to make the clause read:

Agricultural experiment stations, office of experiment stations: To carry into effect the provisions of an act approved March 2, 1887, entitled "An act to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto," and to enforce the execution thereof, $750,000, $30,000 of which sum shall be payable upon the order of the Secretary of Agriculture, to enable him to carry out the provisions of section 3 of the said act of March 2, 1887; and the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe the form of the annual financial statement required by section 3 of said act of March 2, 1887, shall ascertain whether the expenditures under the appropriation hereby made are in accordance with the provisions of the said act, and shall make report thereon to Congress; and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to employ such assistants, clerks, and other persons as he may deem necessary, and to incur such other expenses for office fixtures and supplies, stationery, traveling, freight, and express charges, illustration and publication of the Experiment Station Record, bulletins, and reports, as he may find essential in carrying out the objects of the above acts, and the sums apportioned to the several States shall be paid quarterly in advance. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to furnish to such institutions or individuals as may care to buy it, copies of the card index of agricultural literature prepared by the office of experiment stations, and charge for the same a price covering the additional expense involved in the preparation of these copies, and he is hereby authorized to apply the moneys received toward the expense of the preparation of the index.

Mr. PLATT. Why is the appropriation stricken out?

Mr. ALLISON. That is provided for on line 10, page 16. It is a repetition.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to offer an amendment, to insert what I send to the desk, in lieu of lines 12, 13, 14, and 15, on page 17.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that the amendments of the committee should first be acted upon, unless the amendment of the Senator is in connection with those amendments.

Mr. KYLE. I will state that I think the object of the Senator from Wyoming will be accomplished by nonconcurring in the committee amendment.

Mr. WARREN. My proposition is to insert my amendment in place of the entire clause, which has been proposed to be amended as the bill came from the House of Representatives by the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COCKRELL. A substitute can be offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator to move to strike out and insert. Therefore it is necessary to perfect the matter to be stricken out before the question is put on the Senator's amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the substitute be reported, so that we may understand what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the committee will be first stated, and then the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming.

The SECRETARY. The amendment proposed by the committee is, on page 17, line 13, after the word "to," to strike out "continue" and insert "complete"; and in line 15, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "six"; so as to make the clause read:

Irrigation investigation: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to complete the collection of information as to the best modes of agriculture by irrigation, $6,000.

Mr. KYLE. I should like to reserve that amendment for a separate vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the clause as amended, from line 12 to line 15, inclusive, on page 17, and insert:

Irrigation investigation: To enable the Secretary of the Interior to continue the collection of information through the United States Geological Survey as to the best modes of irrigation, $15,000, of which sum $5,000 shall be immediately available to enable the Director of the United States Geological Survey to continue the work now under way of gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States, including the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells in arid and semiarid sections, and for preparing and publishing bulletins and reports on this subject for distribution.

Mr. PLATT. Is that amendment now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would state to the Senator from Wyoming that it is customary, in the consideration of appropriation bills, that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations first be considered, and then, after action upon those amendments, a Senator has the right to go back to any clause and propose an amendment to it.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that was the understanding as to this particular bill.

Mr. PLATT. That was the order.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] asked unanimous consent that that course might be pursued. The matter can be returned to.

Mr. KYLE. The amendment of the Senator from Wyoming is the same, so far as those three lines are concerned, as the original bill before the committee amendments were proposed, except he has provided that $5,000 shall be expended.

Mr. PLATT. I noticed also, as the amendment was read, that it was to enable "the Secretary of the Interior" to do the work.

Mr. WARREN. I so intended.

Mr. PLATT. And that in an agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. For agricultural purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the consideration of committee amendments will be proceeded with.

Mr. WARREN. I will simply ask to withdraw my amendment now, and that the committee amendment be disagreed to. I shall later offer the amendment which has been read in place of the entire section.

Mr. ALLISON. I think, to simplify the matter, we had better allow this to be passed over for the time being and recur to it later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clause from line 12 to line 15, inclusive, will be passed over for the present without action.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, beginning on page 17, at line 16, with the clause providing for "Nutrition investigations."

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 17, line 21, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen"; so as to make the clause read:

Nutrition investigations: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report upon the nutritive value of the various articles and commodities used for human food, with special suggestions of full, wholesome, and edible rations less wasteful and more economical than those in common use, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 25, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty-five" and insert "seventy"; on page 19, line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty"; in line 18, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifteen," and in line 21, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty-five" and insert "seventy"; so as to make the clause read:

Publications, Department of Agriculture, Division of Publications: For the preparation, printing, illustration, publication and distribution of bulletins and reports, $70,000, as follows: Farmers' bulletins, which shall be adapted to the interests of the people of different sections of the country, an equal proportion of two-thirds of which shall be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents, $50,000: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall notify Senators and Representatives of the character and number of each bulletin and each other publication of the Department of Agriculture (not sent to the folding rooms of the Senate and House) to which each Senator and Representative may be entitled for distribution on the basis herein provided; for the distribution of bulletins, illustrations, and engravings; for the pay of artists, draftsmen, engravers, and additional proof readers when necessary; the purchase of tools, instruments, paper, ink, pencils, paints, and other necessary materials; for labor, printing, printing proofs, necessary traveling expenses, and for drawings, engravings, lithographs, paintings, other illustrations, and electrotypes, $15,000; for distribution of documents; for the purchase of paper, envelopes, gum, twine, and other necessary materials, $5,000; in all, $70,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 1, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be immediately available, and to be disbursed by the Public Printer"; so as to make the clause read:

For the publication of 75,000 copies of Special Report on Diseases of the Horse, of which there shall be 25,000 copies for the Senate and 50,000 copies for the House, $42,500, to be immediately available, and to be disbursed by the Public Printer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 2, to insert:

For the publication of 60,000 copies of the Special Report on Diseases of Cattle and Cattle Feeding, of which there shall be 20,000 copies for the Senate and 40,000 copies for the House, $40,000, to be immediately available, and to be disbursed by the Public Printer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 21, after the word "buildings," to strike out—

Including the erection of only such buildings as may be necessary for the protection and preservation of Government property; and on page 22, line 2, after the word "dollars," to insert—

Provided, That not more than $3,000 of this amount may be used for the erection of a fireproof building or vault for the protection and preservation of the public records of the Department of Agriculture and certain valuable specimens—

So as to make the clause read:

Furniture, cases, and repairs, Department of Agriculture: Repairing and improving buildings, heating apparatus, furniture, carpeting, matting, water and gas pipes, new furniture, and all necessary material and labor for the same, including lumber, hardware, glass, and paints, $12,000: Provided, That not more than $3,000 of this amount may be used for the erection of a fireproof building or vault for the protection and preservation of the public records of the Department of Agriculture and certain valuable specimens.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 23, on page 23.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that the word "varieties" might, I think, with propriety be inserted after the word "obtainable," and it will make the clause read a little more euphoniously. It would then read "best obtainable varieties."

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to the insertion of the word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "obtainable," in line 22, page 23, it is proposed to insert the word "varieties"; so as to read:

That section 527 of the Revised Statutes be amended so that it will read as follows:

"SEC. 527. That purchase and distribution of vegetable, field, and flower seeds, plants, shrubs, vines, bulbs, and cuttings shall be of the freshest and best obtainable varieties and adapted to general cultivation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 25, after line 10, to strike out:

Division of Seeds: One chief of division, $2,000; one expert, $1,600; two clerks of class 1, $2,400; one skilled laborer, $1,000; eight employees, at $840 each, who shall in addition to other duties execute the requests of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for the distribution of seeds among their constituents; in all, $13,720, payable out of the appropriation for the purchase and distribution of rare and valuable seeds.

Mr. CULLOM. That clause occurs in another part of the bill, so that it ought to be stricken out here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 29, after the word "inspector," to insert "at a salary not to exceed $2,000"; so as to make the clause read:

Salaries of one inspector at a salary not to exceed $2,000, thirty local forecast officials, observers, operators, repair men, messengers, laborers, and other necessary employees, outside of the city of Washington, $352,195.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 24 on page 30.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was not in the Chamber when the agreement was made as to the mode of procedure, and I should like to inquire if it is competent now under the agreement for me to move an amendment to the paragraph just read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests that when the reading of the bill shall have been concluded it will be proper for the Senator to offer the amendment.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to inquire of the Senator having the bill in charge whether there is any necessity for the provision from line 25 on page 30 to line 8 on page 31, which makes it a misdemeanor falsely to represent forecasts and warnings?

Now, my point about it is that a criminal statute, as it seems to me, ought not to have to be reenacted every time we reenact an appropriation bill. A criminal statute which does not last for more than one year scarcely comes up to the dignity of a criminal law. I suppose this provision has been in former acts?

Mr. CULLOM. It is the law, I understand.

Mr. PLATT. If it has been in former acts, I would inquire whether there is a necessity for reenacting it every time we pass an appropriation bill? I do not like that method of providing for criminal offenses.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the criticism of the Senator from Connecticut has some force in it, but this is the same provision that has been inserted in the appropriation act heretofore. It is in the last appropriation act, and it is in force now. A question was raised by the gentleman in charge of the Bureau as to whether the provision was broad enough to cover all the attempted violations of law. But the committee did not think that they ought to enlarge its scope.

Mr. PLATT. The present appropriation act will expire on the 30th of June of this year, and this appropriation bill will take effect of the 30th of June of this year. Suppose that on the 29th of June, one day before the expiration of the present appropriation act, somebody shall put out some false warning, and on the 3d of June the district attorney hears of it and proposes to prosecute him for it. He comes in and replies that there is no such law; "Your law expired with the 30th of June." I think the probability is that the law enacted on former appropriation acts continues. But if it does not, there certainly ought to be a general law in the country, and we ought not to be continuing a criminal statute by reenacting it from year to year. I do not suggest any amendment, however.

Mr. CULLOM. I agree to what the Senator from Connecticut has just said, but I am not sure but that the law would be in force after the expiration of the appropriation period, but lest it might not, and in the absence of any general statute, which ought to be passed, I think, the committee thought it was best to leave the provision in the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to strike out in line 22, page 30, the words "and sanitary science," and in support of that motion I desire to submit a very few remarks.

Sanitary science relates to the welfare of human beings, and is by existing law the province of another Department of the Government. I turn to the act of Congress approved February 15, 1893, and I find section 4 to read as follows:

That it shall be the duty of the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to perform all the duties in respect to quarantine and quarantine regulations which are provided for by this act, and to obtain information of the sanitary condition of foreign ports and places from which contagious and infectious diseases are or may be imported into the United States, and to this end the consular officer of the United States at such ports and places as shall be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury shall make to the Secretary of the Treasury weekly reports of the sanitary condition of the ports and places at which they are respectively stationed, according to such forms as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall also obtain, through all sources accessible, including State and municipal sanitary authorities throughout the United States, weekly reports of the sanitary condition of ports and places within the United States, and shall prepare, publish, and transmit to collectors of customs and to State and municipal health officers and other sanitarians weekly abstracts of the consular sanitary reports and other pertinent information received by him, and shall also, as far as he may be able, by means of the voluntary cooperation of State and municipal authorities, of public associations, and private persons, procure information relating to the climatic and other conditions affecting the public health, and shall make an annual report of his operations to Congress, with such recommendations as he may deem important to the public interests.

Acting under the authority of this law enacted in 1893, the Marine-Hospital Service, a bureau of the Treasury Department, is now engaged in work of this character, as may be seen by reference to its very valuable and instructive annual reports. The scientific investigation of the pollution of rivers and other natural sources of water supply is being made by this Bureau, they having made a recent investigation of the water supply—I think I correctly state it—of the city of Washington from the Potomac River. Moreover, a special appropriation was made by the last Congress to enable this Bureau to investigate the causes and prevention of one of the chief contagious diseases, smallpox, and in the laboratory of the Marine-Hospital Service investigations relating to sanitary science are being continually conducted.

I will merely add the suggestion that if this power is given to the Agricultural Department it is a duplication of work, and two different Departments of the Government will be engaged substantially in the same class of investigations. The matter of health has been wisely or unwisely placed in the care of the Treasury Department. The only medical bureau that we have under our Government is a division or bureau of the Treasury Department, and I think the laws are adequate and very wisely framed conferring upon the Marine-Hospital Service authority and direction to investigate all matters relating to the public health.

For this reason I trust that the three words will be stricken from the bill, and that the legitimate exercise of this important matter will be left in the hands of men who must be better qualified to conduct it than any men connected with the Agricultural Department can possibly be.

Mr. CULLOM. The Committee on Appropriations did not have their attention called to the three words, and I see no reason why they should not go out, as that subject is under a different Department. I consent to their being stricken out of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. I send to the desk an amendment to come in at the end of line 8, page 20.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After line 8, page 20, it is proposed to insert:

For the publication of 25,000 copies of the Special Report on Cattle and Dairy Farming, of which there shall be 8,000 copies for the Senate and 17,000 copies for the House, $65,000, to be immediately available and to be disbursed by the Public Printer.

Mr. CULLOM. I did not quite hear the amendment; my attention was diverted. Will the Senator from South Dakota explain it?

Mr. KYLE. It is to come in at the end of line 8, on page 20, and provides for the publication of a work published by order of the Forty-ninth Congress, being a report upon cattle and dairy farming. In my judgment it is one of the most useful reports ever published by Congress. It contains, as the Senator will probably remember, plates, and very excellent ones, of varions kinds of cattle, and also of the best kinds for dairy purposes in various parts of the United States.

Mr. CULLOM. Let me ask the Senator if he refers to any reports that were issued by the World's Fair Commission?

Mr. KYLE. No; it was published by order of Congress.

Mr. CULLOM. What is the size of the document?

Mr. PLATT. It is a big book.

Mr. KYLE. It is a document in two volumes upon cattle and dairy farming, and relates particularly to that subject.

Mr. CULLOM. We have authorized the publication of one book upon the diseases of cattle, cattle feeding, etc.

Mr. KYLE. And this is to follow right upon that. The work upon cattle and dairy farming is, I think, even more important than the one upon the diseases of cattle and cattle feeding, and especially now in the Northwest country, where people are trying to make a shift from grain raising to dairying and cattle raising. I think it is one of the most valuable reports ever published by Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is very valuable.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say, with the permission of the Senator from South Dakota, that I have examined that book and I say to the Senator having this bill in charge that the book referred to in this amendment was issued some years ago. I do not recall at this moment whether it was published under an order of the Senate or the House, but it is a most valuable report, in two volumes, upon dairy farming in the United States, and also in foreign countries. It is a work in great demand. I know that all the agricultural interest of the country will be immensely interested in the work and that we could not publish a work at this juncture when grain farming is so depressed that would be more interesting and more appreciated by the agricultural classes. I therefore trust that the amendment may be adopted.

Mr. KYLE. I will state further that I have here authority to the effect that the resolution empowering us to print the work in the first instance was April 2, 1888.

Mr. CULLOM. Passed by the Senate?

Mr. KYLE. It was passed by the Senate, I believe, appropriating $65,000 for the printing of 25,000 copies of cattle and dairy farming.

Mr. CULLOM. It did pass the Senate?

Mr. KYLE. It passed both Houses and became a law, and was distributed by Senators and Representatives of the Forty-ninth Congress. I will state that the great cost of the work then was in the preparation of the plates, as Senators well know. The plates are all preserved, I believe, and, therefore, I think the work can now be printed for one-third of the cost at that time. I am not exactly posted on that point, but I am willing to strike out the amount.

Mr. CULLOM. I hardly think we ought——
Mr. BATE. Let the amendment be read again.
Mr. KYLE. Let it be read, leaving out the amount.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again read.
The SECRETARY. Insert after line 8, page 20:

For the publication of 25,000 copies of the special report on cattle and dairy farming, of which there shall be 8,000 copies for the Senate and 17,000 copies for the House, $65,000, to be immediately available, and to be disbursed by the Public Printer.

Mr. KYLE. Let me state that $65,000 was the original cost, including the preparation of the plates. I do not think it will now take over about $25,000, probably.

Mr. CULLOM. These books are all very nice and very interesting, but the purpose of the committee, and I think it has been the purpose of Congress heretofore, in the appropriation bills especially, was to provide for the publication of such volumes as would treat of diseases, so as to enable the farmers raising cattle and horses to get all the information that they can to protect their animals. So a provision will be found on page 19 in reference to the publication of the Special Report on Diseases of the Horse. We added an appropriation for 60,000 copies of the Special Report on Diseases of Cattle and Cattle Feeding. There is no printing provided for in the bill except in that line. I think it would be better for the Senator from South Dakota to have a separate bill passed if he desires to have this other book printed. It is a very large one, and I think it will be very expensive if we get enough printed to do very much good. I would rather not put it upon this bill. The bill carries already by the action of the Senate considerably more than it did when it came to us, and in these times we can not very well load up the appropriation bills with very large sums of money.

Mr. KYLE. I think the object of Congress in the past has been, in a very large measure, to publish such works as were useful to the people of the United States.

Mr. CULLOM. Of course; but books in reference to the diseases of the domestic animals are more useful to the people than works on the care of them and going into the history of them generally.

Mr. KYLE. I think, if the Senator remembers the work, he will consider it, perhaps, a great deal more valuable than the other.

Mr. WARREN. I trust that the Senator in charge of the bill will accept the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota. I do not know of any work on which money could be better expended, that would yield greater returns, than to print the book proposed by the honorable Senator from South Dakota. During the great tumble we had in values of live stock in the last three years, the dairy was the only branch where we were able to hold our own. There was an increase in values of dairy cows during 1894. The value of all animals except milch cows decreased during 1894. And all live stock, including milch cows, have decreased during the past year, according to the reports of 1896 for 1895. The demands for a book of this kind are very numerous, and I believe the demand will become equally as great as that for the book entitled Diseases of the Horse. I think every Senator will remember that we have had to reprint, three or four times, a large number of the Special Report on the Diseases of the Horse. I trust the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BATE. The report which it is proposed to print is said to be a splendid book. There are two volumes of it, and it was gotten up at great cost. Our consuls abroad exerted themselves in getting steel engravings of the very finest types of cattle, and those features make the work very attractive and valuable. I know of no book so popular except the one published on the horse. If the system is to be pursued I should like very much to see the committee agree to the amendment. I do not know anything in regard to the cost of it. I can not say anything on that point, but of the utility and the popularity of the work I can speak.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand it is quite a large book.

Mr. BATE. It is a large work, in two volumes.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand that it contains many pictures of these animals, and the publication will be very expensive.

Mr. KYLE. The two volumes are, I presume, about as large as the bound Journal of the Senate. It is about the same size as this volume. [Indicating.]

Mr. NELSON. Here is the book in one volume. [Exhibiting.] It is a very valuable and interesting book. I have just had it from the library above. It was bound both in one volume and in two volumes. There is no book in which farmers take more interest.

Mr. GRAY. From what has been said by Senators who are familiar with the book, which I do not profess to be, I should say, as it is a matter of economy that seems to interfere with the acceptance of the proposition to publish it, that it would be a good thing to substitute it for the horse book. The horse book has already had two editions, I think; it has had a tremendous circulation, and however valuable it may have been it is already in the hands of the people in considerable numbers. The publication and circulation of this book at the present time would be exceedingly opportune and a valuable thing for the people. I would suggest, if it is possible for the Senator from South Dakota, that it would be well for him to move the amendment in such fashion that it would substitute the book Dairy and Dairy Farming for the horse book, which, after all, however valuable it may be, goes into the hands of a great many people besides farmers, persons who are interested in the horse for sporting purposes, driving purposes, purposes of fancy and caprice.

Mr. HALE. If this proposition is to be antagonized with the other very valuable and much sought for report, I should feel constrained to make the point of order that the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota is not reported from any standing committee of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken by the Senator from Maine. The amendment is not in order.

Mr. NELSON. I am sorry. I hope the Senator from Maine will withdraw his point of order. The farmers of the country have some interest in works of this kind.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Minnesota did not hear me. I said it was evidently going to be antagonized by the other proposition for a book which I know my people are very much in favor of getting, and to save all that question, as I do not want the horse book struck out of the bill, I make the point of order.

Mr. KYLE. I had not as yet made a motion to strike out the part relating to the horse book, but to add this provision at the end of line 8, page 20, as an additional publication. I do think really, however, that it is more valuable to the farmers of the country than the horse book, which has been very popular.

Mr. GRAY. If the Senator from South Dakota will allow me to interrupt him, I did not make any motion.

Mr. HALE. No; it was the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. GRAY. I made the suggestion because I believe from what I heard from the Senator from South Dakota and the Senator from Minnesota that the book on dairy and dairy farming is an exceedingly valuable book, and one the publication of which would be very opportune at this time. If the objection to inserting it be, as the Senator from Illinois says, one of economy, upon the comparative merits and necessity for the publication of the two books, I think the preference ought to be given to the report on dairy and dairy farming. The horse book has had a tremendous circulation. It is not in the hands so largely of farmers as of men who are fond of the horse, who own horses and are interested in them and are, perhaps, instructed by the book. But the book in regard to the diseases of the horse does not touch the point that the book on dairy farming would touch just now, coming to the relief of the distressed husbandry of the country. If the point of economy is to be pressed, I hope that the one will be substituted for the other. Of course, if the point of order is made, that is the end of it.

Mr. KYLE. I will state that there have been hundreds of creameries built in my State during the present winter. The people are tired of grain farming and they want to go into the dairy business. They are able to furnish this country with the dairy product, but still they are not acquainted with the methods of dairy farming. This book is exactly what they want, and they have written time and time again for the work. It is out of print. I think the Senator from Illinois ought to allow the amendment to be adopted.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Delaware seems to put a little stress on the remark that I made in favor of economy.

Mr. GRAY. I think it is a very proper one to make.

Mr. CULLOM. I think it was a very clever remark to make under the circumstances.

Mr. GRAY. I think so.

Mr. CULLOM. Of course I should like to see a great many books printed that are interesting, especially if they are full of pictures and would be useful to the people; but it did seem to me, as we are printing a book on the diseases of the horse and a book on the diseases of cattle costing, the two together, over a hundred thousand dollars, that we ought to hesitate a little before providing for printing another one which would cost nearly as much as both, if you are to get any considerable number. So I talked about the question of economy, and I still think that the Senate ought to go a little slow in printing books that are interesting and that are somewhat valuable, but which do not reach to the point of protecting our cattle and horses from disease. That is the purpose of the items for the two publications now in the bill.

Mr. PLATT. I was a little surprised to see the amendment which the committee put in.

Mr. CULLOM. I hesitated to do that, but the argument was made that under no circumstances would Congress refuse to provide for the printing of an additional number of what we call the horse book. Cattle, too, are as subject to disease as horses, and the Department of Agriculture felt very solicitous that that book should be printed as well as the horse book, if the latter should be printed at all.

Mr. GRAY. I do not object to printing the horse book; there is no doubt that it is a valuable book; but it was merely a comparison of the needs and merits of the race-track associations and the owners of fast horses, as well as the farmers, with those who are exclusively devoted to dairy husbandry.

Mr. PLATT. We have a Committee on Printing, and the ordinary way of printing these documents is to introduce a resolution and refer it to the Committee on Printing. I do not know why the Appropriations Committee should begin the work of superseding the duty of the Printing Committee. If that is to be done and our books are to be published by the Appropriations Committee, and no point of order is to be made on any book that a Senator may think the Appropriations Committee ought to include in any of its bills, I should like to be advised; I think I can get some books published that I am very much interested in. Not being a farmer and a little more interested in those than I am in this work, I want to know what the rule is to be.

Mr. KYLE. I think that New England last year had a large appropriation to investigate bugs that are destroying its flowers and apple trees, and such things as that. Was not that the case?

Mr. PLATT. I do not know how it is that my friend from South Dakota should be troubled with this New England specter all the while. I do not know that New England has had any appropriations here. I do not think it has asked for near as many as the State from which the Senator comes. I do not know what New England has to do with this subject. I believe it is a part of the Union. It has been in former times.

Mr. KYLE. All I remember is that the Senator made a very strong plea for the apple industry and fruit industry of New England last year, and we have just as good a right to make a strong plea for the dairy farming of the West. It is not a sectional matter either, because it will benefit New England as well as the West.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator has a better memory than I have. I was not aware that I had made any plea for the apple industry of New England.

Mr. CULLOM. Let us have a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota. The point of order was made, and the Chair sustains it.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to appeal to the Senator from Maine not to insist on the point of order.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to make a point of order first, if the Senator from Wyoming will allow me. If the Senator from Maine insists on his point of order as to this amendment, I shall have to do what I would not want to do under other circumstances, make the point of order against the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. CULLOM. That has been adopted by the Senate.

Mr. KYLE. We can reconsider it.

Mr. NELSON. I can not conceive why there should be one law governing the committee and another law governing Senators here who are not upon the committee.

Mr. TELLER. There is not.

Mr. CULLOM. There is none.

Mr. WARREN. I was about to appeal——

Mr. NELSON. The amendment providing for the book was reported by the committee just as much in contravention of law as the amendment we propose here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Minnesota that the amendment against which he proposes to raise a point of order was embodied in the bill by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. NELSON. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate adopted that amendment.

Mr. WARREN. As I had the floor and yielded for a point of order, I ask, since the point of order has been made, that I may be heard a moment. I wish to appeal to the Senator from Maine to withdraw his point of order, since it was made under a misapprehension; that is to say, that the Senator from Delaware proposed to substitute the pending proposition in the place of the horse book. As there is no such proposition made, I hope he will withdraw it and let us vote on the amendment.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has struck what is the real fault in all of these provisions. They ought not to be on an appropriation bill. There is no doubt about that. There is a Committee on Printing. It is rather a slim committee undoubtedly, but it has jurisdiction over all these subjects, and it ought to report upon them to the Senate. That committee has the privilege of reporting and its bills are always taken up at once; they do not even go to the Calendar; they get early consideration, as is seldom the case with any other committee. Every interest ought to be safe in that committee. But the Committee on Appropriations has been overpersuaded on these subjects because they are of interest to the population of the country generally, to the farmers, the owners of horses and cattle, who form a very large proportion of the population. Goodnaturedly the Committee on Appropriations, out of deference to that sentiment, has put in the other provisions. I think they are valuable. I may say myself, as representing the Committee on Printing, with no disposition to do any work that I am not obliged to do, I was well enough content that the Committee on Appropriations should do that work instead of sending it to the Printing Committee, and I am also content to have the Senate take action in regard to this valuable document under consideration, and unless a motion is made that antagonizes it with the other provision, which I think is of importance, I shall not make the point of order, but if that is insisted upon by anyone I shall make the point of order. I withdraw it for the present.

Mr. NELSON. Then I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to make a statement. I am informed that there is a very extensive dairyman now in this building who says that the book is ten years old or something like that, and the conditions have so changed that it would practically be of no great value to the dairymen of the country. Now, do we want to publish an old book like that which has gone out of date in all its recommendations? It seems not.

Mr. KYLE. How does the Senator know that it has gone out of date except on the statement of that gentleman?

Mr. HAWLEY. I am partly responsible for the information the Senator from Illinois has laid before the Senate. The only thing I am not absolutely certain about is whether there has been any addition or adaptation of the work to modern circumstances. The Senator in the chair [Mr. FAULKNER] shakes his head, and I suppose there is something in it. So I think I will adhere to the idea that the book is not worth much.

Mr. KYLE. I think the same objection can be raised to the Report upon the Diseases of Cattle and Cattle Feeding.

Mr. CULLOM. Oh, no.

Mr. KYLE. Exactly, because science has been advancing all the time.

Mr. CULLOM. The Report on Diseases of Cattle and Cattle Feeding was made in 1892.

Mr. KYLE. And the other in 1888.

Mr. CULLOM. Several years before.

Mr. TELLER. I do not believe myself that there is anything in the objection raised by the Senator who has the bill in charge. This work on cattle and dairy farming is an admirable work and I do not believe it is obsolete, no matter what the dairyman referred to may say. It deals with subjects that are pretty well settled. There may have been some things that are valuable discovered in the last ten years which should be added to it, but we are not likely to get that in book form for some time. If that is the only objection, I do not think it is any objection at all. I think the amendment ought to be placed in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. Wishing to restrain the tendency to extravagance of the Committee on Appropriations, I move that the word "five," in line 12, page 14, be stricken out, leaving the appropriation for experimental gardens and grounds at $20,000 instead of $25,000. I will say that I have looked over the ground very recently. There are a large number of hothouses there. Some of them are very old, made of wood, expensive to heat, and they are largely filled with ornamental plants and flowers that are not of much practical use. The reduction would come from the items in the first line on page 14, "plants and fruit propagating houses," and from line 10, "bulbs for propagating purposes." I have not thought best to move to strike those words out because there may be something necessary to be done in that direction. The other items, however, are essentials, and this proposed reduction must come and can come properly from those items.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 12, on page 14, it is proposed to reduce the appropriation for "experimental gardens and grounds, Department of Agriculture, Division of Gardens and Grounds," from $25,000 to $20,000.

Mr. CULLOM. When that provision was passed over by the Senate my attention was not at the moment directed to it, and before I was aware of it the provision had been passed. I intended to move the same amendment to the bill, based on information that I had received since the bill was under consideration in the committee. I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Vermont will be adopted.

Mr. CALL. I should like to hear from the Senator from Vermont the precise effect of his amendment. Does he propose to limit or take away the propagation of fruits and the cultivation of rare specimens, exotics, and flowers in the conservatories here?

Mr. PROCTOR. No, sir; not entirely, but the appropriation can well be reduced and the public interests not suffer at all. There is a large collection there that is practically a duplication of quality inferior to what we have in the Botanical Gardens, and they are merely for the purposes of ornament, not being distributed to the country in any form.

Mr. CALL. I think we ought to have some accurate information in regard to this matter. Certainly the adornments of the capital which are constantly the subject of observation by the crowds of people who come here ought to be equal to those of other countries. If there be any fault in the administration of the different conservatories so that they are not made what they ought to be, we ought to have some definite information and there ought to be, if that be the case, some higher order of ability, but I do not share in the idea that in America we should be inferior in our capital city to the people of other countries, nor do I take any share in the idea of limiting the appropriations for the great Department of Agriculture. I think this bill is not adequate to the needs of that great industry. I think that it is not even respectable, to the great farming interests of the country. That is the greatest of all employments. You appropriate millions of dollars for war, for the destruction of the human race; you appropriate millions of dollars for the Navy and for all the other Departments in the civil administration of the Government, but to say that this great industry, upon which the whole prosperity and upon which the maintenance of even the comfort of the great mass of the people is absolutely dependent, shall be cut down by every species of small economy here seems to me to be entirely improper and not in accordance with the advanced spirit of this age.

We need to increase the cultivation and the varieties of cultivation and the ornamentation of the floral and natural world, and it is proper that we should have here in the capital the highest order of accomplishment in those respects. The American people ought not to be disgraced by an inferiority at their capital to the nations of Europe. A republican government ought to be honored by having everything here equal, if not superior, to that to be found in other parts of the world.

I wanted before this bill was closed to say that I do not think that the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture are worthy of the country and are equal to the needs of that great industry.

Mr. PROCTOR. If it be in order to speak to the amendment after it has been agreed to, I would say that I have talked fully with the Secretary of Agriculture, and I have carefully gone through the propagating houses of the Department this morning and found that some of them are old wooden structures, when they ought to be built of iron in these days. They will soon have to be rebuilt, and the collections will be greatly improved. As they have naturally increased, a great many plants of inferior quality and character have been retained, taking up a great deal of room. I think the collection would be improved by reducing it in quantity and keeping those of the best quality.

I will say to the Senator from Florida that when we get Cuba, as we hope to do, that land of fruit and flowers will furnish us very much better varieties than we now have.

Mr. CULLOM. In addition to what the Senator has said, as he has dwelt upon the importance of the appropriations, following in a degree the head of the Department, I will say that the Secretary of Agriculture himself suggested in a letter that this amount could be reduced.

Mr. CALL. That is precisely what I object to. The idea that Congress should be subordinate to the representations of one man, the head of a Department! What are we here for? Are we to obey the officers, the clerks, who are the heads of these Departments, or are to have a judgment of our own? The present Secretary of Agriculture is no doubt a man of capacity, but he has an idea that there ought not to be any Department of Agriculture; he has an idea that everything should be left to private industry and private efforts, and that the Government can not aid in the dissemination of scientific knowledge in matters of agriculture. He would not have us propagate the rare fruits, but would leave that to the nurserymen, when the great portion of our people are not able to buy from nurserymen. The idea of my honored friend from Vermont saying that the way to improve the Agricultural Department is to take away its appropriations, to reduce them, seems to me quite a novelty.

If the old sheds now used by the Department are unfit, appropriate money to build new ones. There are thousands of starving people in the District of Columbia who want employment, and you can not do better for the public credit of this country than to use it so that the unemployed people may have something to do, and so that the humble homes of this country can have flowers and fruits and be places of comfort.

Sir, we do not do justice to this great agricultural and horticultural interest. The appropriation ought to have been three times the amount of money provided for in this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. My attention was called away when the amendments of the committee were agreed to. I intended to ask for a separate vote on the amendment on page 8, line 7, striking out "four" and inserting "two," thus making the salary of the assistant in the Pathological Division $1,200 instead of $1,400, as it was in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives.

I trust, having done something for economy, that the committee will consent to reconsider that. I have myself investigated the matter, and I know that we shall lose the services of a good man if the appropriation is not allowed to remain as it was fixed by the other House.

Besides, I consider this is decidedly more important than the chief of the Dairy Division provided for in the preceding clause. In dairy matters our farmers can largely make their own experiments; but those in the Pathological Division are a specialty and require a man of special fitness. The present chief of that division has proved himself to be such; and I sincerely hope that the committee will consent to this small amendment, and that it will receive the assent of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment, which will now be read, was adopted.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, on page 8, after the word "thousand," the Senate struck out "four" and inserted "two"; so as to read:

One assistant in Pathological Division, $1,200.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. CULLOM. Before the motion is put, I wish to state that all the amendments that have been made, unless concurred in by the House of Representatives, go into conference. If there is any special reason that can be given to the conference committee, or to the other House, after the bill goes there, why they should be concurred in, there will be an opportunity in the conference committee of considering them. I hope that my distinguished friend from Vermont will not insist upon this particular action.

Mr. PROCTOR. It seems to me that the committee should assent to the suggestion I have made. I think there is a very good reason for separating this, and that it should be done here. I have not asked to have the appropriation for any other salaries increased, and the others I am glad to have go into conference to be there considered, but this one, I am sure, should be made right, and should be made right here. I hope the committee will agree to it.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I do not wish to antagonize the proposition of the Senator from Vermont, but I wish to say that, if the Senate proceeds to reconsider the question of salaries where the Senate has cut down the amount fixed by the other House, I shall have to ask the Senate to reconsider its action in lines 9 and 10, on page 8. I feel very sure that, as a matter of justice, the chief of the Biochemic Division should have at least $2,500. I spoke to the committee, and decided, after talking to them, to let the matter come up in conference after the House of Representatives had fixed it at $2,500 and the Senate cut it down to $2,250. While I do not wish to antagonize the Senator from Vermont, if the Senate proceeds now to consider the case he proposes, as a matter of justice I shall have to ask the Senate to reconsider this case, and present my reasons for it. If the Senator from Vermont is not willing to leave his case to the conference committee, as I have decided to do at the suggestion of the Senator in charge of the bill, I shall ask the Senate to hear me on lines 9 and 10.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, it seems to me quite right that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] should do that, and that the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] ought to be agreed to. The Senator from Vermont has, according to his own admission, saved the country $5,000; that is to say, he has saved it if the committee of conference persists in adhering to the amendment. Now, the Senator from Vermont wants a little favor of a couple of hundred dollars in connection with one of the best officers in the Agricultural Department, who ought to have that money.

That is precisely what this body is for, to pass upon these questions. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] seems to think that the object of an appropriation bill is to accumulate questions in the hands of conference committees. Therefore, the Senator suggested a little while ago, after a long debate between the two Senators from Maine, quite as important as these things we are now considering, that if the Senator from Maine would give up his contention and allow the question to go to a conference committee, undoubtedly right and justice would be done in that conference committee. The Senator from Illinois makes the same suggestion, that this $200 matter go into conference, and he will take care of it there in accordance with right and justice and propriety and patriotism. Then comes next the Senator from North Carolina, and he says that if that is done he shall insist that the matter of $250 in connection with one of these salaries shall be acted on. The Senator from North Carolina is right.

Mr. President, these questions should be considered in open Senate, with a full Senate, and they should be decided in accordance with the merits of the case as they may be presented by different Senators.

Therefore, I hope that this motion of the Senator from Vermont will be fully discussed upon its merits. There is time enough—there is not much business before this Congress—to hear the arguments for the $200 and against the $200, for the gentleman and against the gentleman, and then take up the case of the Senator from North Carolina and debate that and vote upon it, and not mix up these things in conference committee, to the distraction and the bedevilment of the committee of conference, so that they get torn all into pieces by contending emotions before they reach a conclusion. [Laughter.]

Mr. CULLOM. I am obliged to the Senator from New Hampshire for his tender care of the Committee on Appropriations, and especially that portion of it which may be on the committee of conference; but I want to say to him that I am not seeking to have these things go into conference as original propositions. This bill was read line by line; every amendment was voted upon by the Senate and agreed to as the committee had reported it. I refer to the amendments on this page. Prior to that the Committee on Appropriations took the exact estimates of the Department as to what they were paying these men at the time and what they are paying now, and put the appropriation for each man in this bill exactly according to what he is getting to-day. We are not trying to destroy anybody; we are not trying to cut down anybody's salary; but we are providing the salaries of these gentlemen, who are valuable men, according to the estimate of what the Department said they were getting now and ought to have.

Mr. GRAY. Does the Senator from Illinois mean that the salary fixed by the bill as it came from the House of Representatives is an increase of the salary those men are now receiving?

Mr. CULLOM. An increase of $250 in most instances on that now paid them, and we put those salaries back to just what they are now getting. Heretofore they were being paid out of a lump sum. We propose to have them scheduled in statutory form instead of each man being paid by the Department out of a lump sum. There seems to be an impression here that the whole Department is going to break up and the officers go home because they do not get an increase of salary.

Mr. GRAY. The impression was that the bill as reported from the committee was reducing the salaries as they now are.

Mr. CULLOM. Not at all. We are reducing them below the amount the House of Representatives fixed to just what they are receiving now.

Mr. GRAY. I do not think that was understood.

Mr. CULLOM. I supposed it was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] to reconsider the vote adopting the amendment referred to by him.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. In order that the subject may be before the conference committee, I ask that on page 15, after the word "dollars," in line 13, the Senator in charge of the bill accept this amendment:

Of which $2,500 may be applied for the salary of the chief of the division.

So that the conference committee may have a right to consider the matter.

Mr. CULLOM. I shall agree to accept that, because that is what the officer referred to is now getting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 13, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

Of which $2,500 may be applied for the salary of the chief of the division.

Mr. CALL. To what division does that apply?

Mr. FRYE. The grass division. As it now stands, the matter would not be before the conference committee, and they would have no jurisdiction of the question. I simply desire the amendment I have proposed inserted so that they may have jurisdiction.

Mr. CHANDLER. Before the amendment is adopted, I wish to call attention again to the point I made a little while ago. I listened very attentively to the argument of the senior Senator from Maine with the junior Senator from Maine this morning. I heard what the senior Senator said, and that impressed me, and I heard what the junior Senator said, and that impressed me. The debate went on, to and fro, for quite a while, and at last I went completely over to the side of the Senator from Maine whom I now see in his seat [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. FRYE. There is where the Senator was right.

Mr. CHANDLER. I forget whether he is the junior Senator or the senior Senator. But the Senator who is now in the Chamber, and is always in the Chamber, converted me and I was ready to vote. I waited here at considerable inconvenience to myself—for, like other Senators, I occasionally desire to go to the lunch room—in order to vote with the Senator upon this question upon the merits of the case.

What was the end of that long debate upon that extremely important question, where the Senator's argument was conclusive to my mind? The result was that, upon the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], certain amendments were adopted in order, as he said, to get the subject into conference, where it could be equitably and fairly dealt with; and all of the Senators who had stayed here to vote on the question were deprived of the opportunity of passing upon the question by their votes. The Senator from Maine and the Senator from Illinois have again looked the matter over, and have concluded that it is not yet in a condition to get into a committee of conference; so the Senator from Maine gets up and moves an amendment, which, he says, will carry it into conference. The Senator from Illinois accepts that amendment; into conference it goes; within two minutes after the Senator from Illinois had risen from his seat to repel, with some appearance of indignation, my suggestion that the object of conducting these bills in this way was to accumulate matters of great importance and of no importance in conference committees. He converted the Senator from Maine to his way of thinking. So I suppose the grave question of what we shall do for agrostology will at last be settled by six members, or perhaps four members of Congress, in the deep recesses of a conference committee, and the will and the decision of the Senate upon that important question will not be made known by a vote of the Senate, as it ought to be.

Mr. President, I again take occasion to protest against this method of doing business. At all events, I notify the Senator from Maine that when he enters into a long debate of that kind again and converts me to his way of thinking, and is about to arrange the matter privately with the member of the Appropriations Committee in charge of the bill, I hope he will give me notice, so that I may retire to the lunch room. [Laughter.]

Mr. FRYE. The amendment has been adopted, I believe, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine will be considered as agreed to. The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read the next reserved amendment of the committee, on page 14.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, line 24, after the word "Investigations," the Committee on Appropriations reported to strike out the words "Division of Agrostology."

Mr. KYLE. I move that that amendment be nonconcurred in.

Mr. PLATT. I thought that amendment had been withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What does the Chair understand the Senator from Illinois to desire in regard to that amendment?

Mr. CULLOM. I thought the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRAY. I think the Senator from Illinois, who has charge of the bill, owes an explanation of this difficult term. I should like to know what "agrostology" means?

Mr. CULLOM. It is the science of grasses, as the Senator from Maine and others have stated.

Mr. FRYE. It covers the examination of grasses for pasturage, hay, etc.

Mr. CULLOM. I supposed the whole subject was disposed of a while ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary informs the Chair that there has been no action taken on that amendment and the amendment at the end of line 12, on page 15.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire that the words "Division of Soils" shall remain in the bill.

Mr. FRYE. That is, to disagree to the committee amendment?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes, to disagree to the amendment of the committee as to striking out the words "Division of Soils."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment of the committee will be disagreed to. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CULLOM. In line 24, at the bottom of the page, the amendment proposing to strike out the words "Division of Agrostology" should be disagreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. KYLE. I understand, then, that that subject will not be in conference.

Mr. FRYE. Not so far as that is concerned.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand it is definitely settled by leaving those words in the bill in that way.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. Only whether it is to be provided for under the general appropriation of $18,000, or is the personnel to be specifically appropriated for in this case? Is that the important question with which the committee of conference will wrestle?

Mr. CULLOM. That I desire to look into.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senator will look into it carefully and confer with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. [Laughter.]

Mr. CULLOM. I shall, and if there is any difficulty I will send for the Senator from New Hampshire. [Laughter.]
